Snookie's Bar, located in Aggieville, has expanded it's walls by buying and expanding into Brothers Tavern, directly below it on Moro Street

"I've always wanted to get into the live music scene on weekends," Snookie's manager Ken Snook said.

The new bar, Rhythm and Brews, will provide more space for live bands to come in and play on a stage that really is a stage, he said.

"We plan on having a variety of music, everything from blues to alternative rock 'n' roll," Snook said.

Snook said he hopes to bring in bands from the east and west coasts.

"I want to bring in different styles. I want to build up live music like it is in Lawrence," he said.

Different types of music will be the key to making the bar a success, he said.

"It's going to be totally diverse. We're going to have a lot of blues, but even some reggae and African music," said Mitch Ulrich, owner of Vital Vinyl and Snookie's band promoter.

"Mitch does a real good job with bringing in blues events," Snook said.

Ulrich said he believes that Rhythm and Brews will be the new hot spot in town.

"It's gonna be rockin', man," Ulrich said.

Most of the live music at the bar will be performed on weekends.

"It's like this. You can go see a movie for $5, or you can go listen to a real great band for around $3," Snook said.

Snook said he thinks the live music scene has been dead in Manhattan for about two years.

"I just hope people will support it so we can keep it around," he said.

Cover charge for the two bars will be split. Rhythm and Brews will charge more because of the live music. But once in the bar, one can walk up to Snookies.

"Snookies will also have some live music sometimes," Snook said.

"We've done extensive remodeling to the dance floor. We've even added a house P/A system," he said. "I just really want to get the whole thing going again."

Along with new additions to the two bars, there will be space to rent for private parties or functions.

Meyer said he didn't take the section of the course for learning Italian very seriously while at K-State, but once in Italy, he had to learn the basics.

"A lot of people blew it off. It was at the bottom of their priorities," he said. "But once you are immersed in it, you have to learn it."

Once their semester is over, the students have an opportunity to spend the summer traveling throughout Europe at their own expense.

Meyer traveled through France, Germany, Switzerland and Spain.

"I think Europe is kind of intimidating for people who haven't been. I realized it wasn't as difficult to learn the culture and get around as I thought it would be," he said.

"I would go back in a minute."

LIVE MUSIC

Love of good music bring blues to Manhattan

COMMENTARY

TOM PTACEK

Vital blues — the blues scene in Manhattan is alive, well and thriving.

At present this statement may be a little premature, but in time it may become quite appropriate. This is in large part due to the vision and efforts of Mitch Ulrich, owner and manager of Vital Vinyl in Aggieville.

Through his Vital Vinyl blues series, Manhattan is being exposed to some of the finest musicians in blues, as well as other forms of music, which Ulrich describes as an alternative to the mainstream.

During the past year, he has showcased this talent at Snookie's Bar in Aggieville. The series has now moved downstairs, with the opening of Snookie's Rhythm and Brews.

Formerly Brothers Tavern, Rhythm and Brews will be open Thursday through Saturday with Ulrich doing all the bookings. The bar could very well become an oasis for music lovers on weekends, especially on Thursdays, when nationally touring acts will be in town.

The Vital Vinyl blues series began with such acts as Mike Morgan and the Crawl, who will be in town again Feb. 11 for what will be their final appearance in Manhattan. Joanna Conner will also return to town Feb. 18.

With recent appearances by the blistering Mike Griffin and the Unknown Blues Band, as well as the soulful Buster Benton, it appears that the blues series is picking up momentum and fans.

However, Ulrich is quick to point out that the series is not just blues anymore. Vital Vinyl and Rhythm and Brews Feb. 4 will bring to Manhattan reggae from Leroy Shakespeare and Ship of Vibes and will sponser Local Fest '93 Feb. 5 and 6.

Local Fest '93 is billed as a two-night music fest and will feature six local bands, including Jeb Bolan on the first night and Lumber and Truck Stop Love the following night.

March could well be the month that puts this music series over the top, with such acts as Rory Block March 4 and Larry McCray March 6.

You won't want to miss either of these shows. McCray has had the enviable task of opening for the legendary B.B. King, and no other female contemporary blues artist can match Rory Block when it comes to soulful acoustic blues.

The series is definitely catching on, and Ulrich is quick to share some of the credit.

"We've got the best crowds, and the bands realize that. That's why they'll always want to come back here," he said.

Ulrich often works 15-plus hour days dealing with bookings, promotion, agents, even working the door the night of the show. For his efforts, his shows have been called the best entertainment within 100 miles of Manhattan.

When asked if the series was yet profitable, Ulrich quickly replied, "No,not at all".

One might then wonder why he continues to do it. It's simple — a love for good music, which for many of us stems from childhood, and the desire to share that feeling.

As the name acts keep coming and the crowds grow, the profits will undoubtedly come. Until then, his plan remains a simple one — just keep it going.

So if you like good music, especially blues, come watch the shows. If you happen to see Mitch — a pleasant man with black hair, a beard and pony tail, often wearing an Army jacket with the name Ulrich above his heart — tell him thanks. Because without his efforts, the Vital Vinyl blues series wouldn't exist, and that would truly be a shame.

Recycling the wave of the future

Craig Miller, employee, and Howard Wilson, owner, dump newspapers into a paper shredder Thursday afternoon at Howie's Recycling. Once a large amount of paper is gathered, Howie's shreds it and makes bales. Scott Merril, senior in physical science, places a bale of shredded newspaper onto a cart after it has gone through the shredding machine.

Howie's to bring newspaper bin back again

"It used to be $30 per ton. But everybody wants to recycle now so there is a glut."

The same paper that lines the bottoms of bird cages and garbage cans is also popular to recycle.

Manhattan presses print more than 150,000 newspapers a week, and recycling those papers has been difficult in Riley County.

Difficult until recently, when Howie's Recycling decided to accept newspapers from the general public again.

Last year, Howie's Recycling halted the policy of taking newspapers for recycling from the public. Howard Wilson, owner of Howie's Recycling, said the problem was financial at the time.

"We're going to pay him 40 dollars a ton, less what he receives in the marketplace," Monty Wedel, Riley County planner, said.

Basically, that means if Wilson receives $7.50 a ton for recycling newspaper in Wellsville, where a processing center is located, the county will pay him $32.50 to make up the difference, Wedel said.

"He will net $32.50. That takes care of labor, transportation and supplying trailers to get it to Wellsville," Wedel said.

If the price per ton goes up from $7.50, the county will pay less to Wilson.

"It used to be $30 dollars per ton. But everybody wants to recycle now, so there was a glut. It's slowly making its way back though," Wedel said.

When Wilson stopped taking paper from the general public last spring, he only took paper deposited at recycling bins in the Wal-Mart parking lot. Those papers were then taken to Howie's, but the volume was much less than it had been when Howie's accepted them directly.

The bins were the only depository in Riley County for newspapers, and earlier this month Wal-Mart officials announced they would stop accepting the newspapers at the end of January.

Then the officials changed their minds.

"I found out Monday or Tuesday that they will continue to do just as they do now. How long that will last, I don't know," Wilson said.

Wal-Mart officials were not available for comment on the change.

The Riley County Commission decided not to subsidize Wilson last spring, but a shortage of straw and a hard winter changed their minds.

"It basically worked for a

Fatal fall claims life of professor

Faculty and students were shocked Thursday to learn of the death of Orma Linford.

Linford, associate professor of political science, died Thursday morning at Memorial Hospital after suffering severe spine and brain injuries from a fall Tuesday morning. She was 57.

"I am completely shocked about her sudden death," Michael Harders, senior in political science and history, said. "She was always generally concerned about students."

Harders said Linford was his adviser for four years, and he also took classes from her.

"She always had an open door," he said. "She was compassionate and very witty. I consider this a huge loss to the University, and it will be hard to replace her."

Orma Linford

A Utah native, Linford joined the K-State political science faculty as an assistant professor in 1966 after earning her doctoral degree at the University of Wisconsin.

Linford was promoted to associate professor in 1979.

Previously, she had been an assistant professor at the University of Wisconsin from 1964 to 1966 and an instructor at Beloit College in Wisconsin.

While at K-State, she taught a variety of classes relating to law and the judicial system.

"Her case-based, Socratic teaching influenced a host of lawyers now practicing nationwide at all levels of United States jurisprudence," T. Alden Williams, professor of political science, said. "She was widely acclaimed for her humanitarianism and her commitment to academia as professor and author."

Judith Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said she was a influential teacher to her while working on her master's degree.

"In and out of the classroom, she called on us to be better citizens and better people," Davis said. "She exemplified dignity, integrity and strength."

NEWS DIGEST

▶SUPER BOWL SUNDAY TIME OF VIOLENCE

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Super Bowl Sunday is one of the most widely anticipated days of the year for football fans. For women, it can be a day of dread and injury.

"There is significant anecdotal evidence that Super Bowl Sunday is the biggest day of the year for domestic violence against women," Sheila Kuehl, managing lawyer of the California Women's Law Center, said Thursday.

Many women's shelters report as much as a 40-percent increase in calls for help on Super Bowl Sunday and the following Monday, Linda Mitchell of Fairness & Accuracy in Reporting said at a news conference at the Rose Bowl.

"The betting, the bonding and the beer for the men can turn into beating for women," she said.

Allocations for multicultural council passed in special orders

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

A meeting lasting less than one and a half hours was the highlight of Student Senate Thursday night.

In limited business, a resolution was passed by Student Senate Thursday night to approve Michael Henry as the Associated Students of Kansas Campus Director.

It was also approved by Senate to appoint Sharmeen Irani as the International Affairs Director and Jim Teel as the Non-Traditional Affairs Director. Amy Smith will serve as the Union Activities Board Chairperson.

Senate passed in Special Orders an allocation to the multicultural student leadership conference in the amount of $1,500.

This allocation was designated by the Multicultural Student Council for the leadership conference because the money given to the council by corporate sponsorship was withdrawn.

The funds will be used to pay the keynote speaker, Kansas City Mayor Emanuel Cleaver, who will be speaking at the conference Feb. 13.

The money also will be used to defray costs of the conference and posters advertising the speaker. These funds are to be taken from the Reserves for Contingencies Account.

Government accessibility concern of candidates

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Making city government more accessible to citizens is a common concern for city commission candidates this year.

Eight candidates have filed for three open seats on the Manhattan City Commission.

Aside from Edith Stunkel, Eugene Klingler, Sydney Carlin, Paul Palenske, Steve Hall and Tom Whalen, Stanley Crowder and Bob Rogers are also running for the three seats.

Crowder has run for commission three times and has never been elected. He said he continues to run because he thinks things can be done better.

"I don't like the way the other commission members handled the mall situation," he said. "They threw all that at the taxpayers."

Crowder said he is concerned about issues such as road, bridge and airport expansions in Manhattan.

"If I do get elected I'm going to put all of this in front of the voters," Crowder said.

He also said he thinks Manhattan needs stricter housing regulations.

"I wouldn't even put my dog in some of the apartments I've seen in this town," he said.

Rogers shares many of Crowder's concerns about inadequate housing.

"With some of the apartments K-State students have to live in, there is room for improvement," he said. "And the rent some of them have to pay is outrageous. Manhattan should definitely be ashamed of this."

Rogers served as co-chairman of Citizens for Representative Government, which sought to change Manhattan city government from the current city commission form, to a mayor-council type of government.

Such a change would allow for more public involvement in city government, he said.

If elected to the commission, Rogers said he hopes to create a hot line for Manhattan residents who have questions concerning city government.

"I intend to bring the people closer to government," Rogers said.

"We can't make any changes unless we know what the people want."

Rogers is also concerned with the city budget, drainage in various areas of the city, the elderly and teen-agers.

Vocational schools provide alternative

PAM WRIGHT
Collegian

By the year 2000 companies may be expecting more than a college degree.

Vocational schools have a stereotype following them.

They are thought of as second best, said Pat Dunaway, information coordinator at Manhattan Area Technical Center.

The students, or anyone who has looked into the center, always react positively to it, he said.

Bill Berry, director of the center, attended a seminar conducted by the American Vocational Association, with Hillary Clinton as one of the guest speakers.

Berry quoted Clinton as saying: "As a culture, you can't get to heaven without a college degree. Americans would rather be a third-rate insurance agent with a college degree than a skilled, productive high-paid worker without a college degree."

But the times are changing.

According to the Secretary's Commission on Achieving Necessary Skills report, the U.S. Department of Labor indicates 18 of the 20 fastest growing occupations in the next decade will require technical education. And more than 70 percent of the jobs in America will not require a college education by the year 2000.

"In our opinion, it's best to at least start here," Berry said.

Even though the average age is 26, there are also students with master's degrees enrolling for the technical training in their fields, Berry said.

He said chances are good for the center's students to find jobs after graduation.

"Ninety-four percent were placed on the job out of all the

Injectable contraceptive gets OK

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

The U.S. Food and Drug Administration has approved Depo-Provera, the first injectable contraceptive available in the United States.

Depo-Provera, according to a report in the January 1993 Contraceptive Technology Update, is already used as a contraceptive in more than 90 countries in Europe, Asia, Latin America and Africa.

Although popular in these countries, "the FDA was reluctant to approve Depo-Provera as a contraceptive because of concerns about its potential cancer-causing effects, studies linking the drug to low birth-weight babies and osteoporosis, and suggestions that it could be used coercively," the report said.

Depo-Provera has been used for treating endometrial and kidney cancers since the early 1970s, but it has never been approved as a contraceptive until recently.

The decision to approve Depo-Provera for contraceptive use came down to weighing the potential risks against the benefits of the drug.

All women, regardless of weight or height, receive the same dose of the injection containing a synthetic hormone similar to the natural hormone progesterone.

Injections are given to the muscle of the arm or buttock, where it is slowly released into the bloodstream.

The injection protects a woman from pregnancy for three months, but does not protect against sexually transmitted diseases.

The exact price hasn't been determined, but professionals expect a single dose to be comparable to a three-month supply

French, Spanish taught on-air

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

Students in 150 high schools, spanning 13 states, are learning French and Spanish from K-State.

Twice a week, live broadcasts of Spanish I and II and French I are transmitted via satellite from the Kansas Regents Educational Communications Center, housed in Bob Dole Hall.

Barbara Newhouse, associate director of academic programs at the ECC, said the schools participating in the program are usually small and can't afford to hire a teacher for foreign language courses.

Newhouse said in states like Kansas there is a foreign language mandate, stating that schools must offer at least two years of foreign language. For small schools, the satellite language program is the most economical way of meeting that mandate.

Nancy Worthington, instructor at the ECC, said once the schools have the transmitter and satellite uplink, which cost about $4,500, the only fee they pay is an annual per-student fee. She said K-State provides the class as a service and does not make a profit from the broadcast.

"We keep the costs as low as possible so it is available to all schools," Newhouse said.

The Spanish class is in its fourth year, whereas the French class just started.

Mostly former or current K-State students make up the production crew for the shows.

"This gives them hands-on experience with state-of-the-art

ATTENTION

After 2/13/93, students of Kansas State University wishing to enroll in the 1992/93 Student Health Insurance Plan may enroll at any time during the plan year, provided they meet the following requirements.

1. You must be a degree-seeking student, enrolled every semester except Summer semester as:
   a. an undergraduate student taking seven or more hours all semester; or
   b. a Master's degree-seeking student taking three hours or more all semester; or
   c. a Ph.D.-seeking student.
2. Plan will terminate for all insureds on 8/31/93, or through the period for which premium was paid, whichever is earlier.
3. At the time of initial enrollment, you must remit the full applicable Spring/Summer premium or the applicable Quarterly premium and you will be billed for subsequent payments.
4. Your effective date will be the first of the month following the date your premium is received at the office of the Plan Administrator.
5. The waiting period for pre-existing conditions would be 365 days (one year).
6. Students Students and their eligible dependents must enroll at the same time; dependents cannot be added at a later date except due to marriage or birth of a child.
7. Coverage will terminate at the end of the semester that the student ceases to be eligible under the Plan eligibility requirements.

This Plan contains no Conversion privileges.

Crossings must be safer

THE ISSUE

Some intersections near campus are unsafe for pedestrians and motorists.

WE SUGGEST

City officials should install a crosswalk at Vattier Street and Manhattan Avenue, as well as a left-turn arrow at 17th Street and Anderson Avenue

Every day, students entering from the east side of campus are forced to play a dangerous game of chicken.

This continuous game takes place at the intersection of North Manhattan Avenue and Vattier Street. The problem is that for such a heavy pedestrian traffic route, there is no designated pedestrian crosswalk.

Many students who choose this direct death route to McCain Auditorium, Anderson and Fairchild Halls are faced with the daunting challenge of weaving between the endless traffic that rumbles down Manhattan Avenue.

In order to enter campus with the safety of a crosswalk, students must either go one block south or two blocks north to cross.

Students can choose to play chicken or go out of their ways. Either way, they often end up being late for class.

Because this area is a universal entryway to campus for many students, a pedestrian crosswalk at this intersection is the only suitable solution for students' safety.

Motorists venturing east or west on Anderson during rush hour find it virtually impossible to make a left turn at this much-used intersection.

With no protected left-turn arrow at this intersection, traffic often gets backed up by at least 10 cars. This also creates a serious danger when drivers, stranded in the middle of the intersection, attempt to turn left when their light has already changed to red.

It seems rather illogical not to have a protected left turn signal at such a busy intersection, when one block west and two blocks east, there are such signals installed.

These pedestrian and traffic hazards are in vital need of immediate change. In both situations, there is an obvious safety threat that can be easily fixed.

CHANGE HAS WORKED BEFORE

SHAWN WOODFORD

President Bill Clinton's fight to lift the Pentagon's policy of preventing homosexuals from serving in the armed forces has taken a depressingly familiar turn.

Last Monday, Clinton met with his Joint Chiefs of Staff, who were unanimous in expressing their desire to see the ban remain in place. General Colin Powell, chairman of the Joint Chiefs and the highest ranking black military officer in history, has indicated that he "is very much opposed to lifting the ban."

This opposition is marked by fears that allowing gays to participate openly in the military will result in everything from degraded combat efficiency to chaos deriving from uncertainty over the status of same-sex marriages, spousal benefits and the need for vast sums of money for courses to teach soldiers tolerance for homosexuals.

In addition to military opposition, Clinton also faces the entrenched bipartisan resistance of congressional legislators. This includes Sen. Sam Nunn, D-Ga., the powerful chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee and Rep. Newt Gingrich, R-Ga.

Gingrich warned Clinton that he "would weaken his presidency if he picked a fight with Nunn 'over turf'" and affirmed his own opposition to lifting the ban for "'social engineering' because it would weaken morale and efficiency in the armed forces."

The "sky-is-falling" rhetoric of the generals and politicians is reminiscent of the hysteria of the Cold War. It is also a painful reminder of the bigotry Harry S. Truman fought against during his battle to end segregation in the armed forces in the aftermath of World War II.

Black Americans had long served this country, dating back to when armed slaves fought side-by-side with their white masters. This was during conflicts with Native Americans along the western colonial borders.

Despite their willingness to risk their lives for a country that regarded them as little more than third-class citizens, black soldiers were rewarded with the same indifference and bigotry that faced them in civilian life.

Unofficial segregation policies during World War II were described by one white Air Force officer as an attempt to "'impose' them upon as few people as possible, on the assumption that it is far better for a hundred people in one place to worry about the problems surrounding a thousand Negroes than for a thousand people in several places to worry about the problems surrounding one hundred Negroes."

As the armed forces were reduced in the post-World War II environment, the attempts to impose prewar segregationist policies aroused the opposition of President Truman, a man known to refer to blacks as "niggers" in casual conversation with white friends.

American public opinion, molded by wartime stories of German and Japanese racist atrocities, was open to the official integration of the armed forces. However, the resistance from the services was formidable.

Army Air Force Lieutenant General Elwood "Pete" Quesada, a hero of the war in Europe, declared that "anyone who says the Negro is up to the white man is just not telling the truth."

Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff General Omar N. Bradley worried that the difficulty of absorbing poorly educated blacks, taught in second-rate segregated schools, into the modern Army would impair combat efficiency.

On July 26, 1948, Truman delivered the following executive order: "It is hereby declared that there shall be equality of treatment and opportunity for all persons in the armed services without regard to race, color, religion or national origin." The new policy was to go into effect "as rapidly as possible, having due regard to the time required to effectuate any necessary changes without impairing efficiency or morale."

Truman's stance on civil rights provoked a fire storm within the Democratic Party as it faced the election of 1948. Progressive members of the party included civil rights measures in the party platform, inciting the conservative wing to split away and form the Dixiecrat Party, nominating Governor J. Strom Thurmond of South Carolina, a staunch segregationist, as their candidate for president.

Despite the defection of the party's right wing, Truman won the election, supported by a coalition of blue-collar, war veterans and black voters. Integration of the armed forces proceeded, and American fighting units, with black and white soldiers fighting side by side, have proven their combat effectiveness from the mountains of Korea to the sands of Iraq.

Marx once said that history repeats itself, first as tragedy, then as comedy. The irony of Colin Powell's success in the military and his current stand against the civil rights of homosexuals is palpable.

"People-haters" Anonymous

TOM LISTER

Well, that Village People recruitment song worked after all. Homosexuals want to join the armed forces, and Bill Clinton is giving it the OK.

The other day in the newsroom a friend asked me about it. Like most of my opinions, this one was self-serving.

"Hell, I don't care," I said. "I never plan on joining the military. I'd never have to be around them."

But I did tell him my father spent some time in the Navy, and that he never had any real problems with the homosexuals he encountered there.

"He shouldn't have," my friend said.

A lot of people must have problems with them, though, I told him.

"Yes," he explained, "they're people-haters. They don't like people that aren't just like them."

From what I came to understand, the group "people-haters" encompassed a wide variety of people, from serial killers to those who oppose homosexuals joining the military.

Kind of a queer label, I thought. Labels seem to float around everywhere today, though: bigot, sexist, homophobe.

Now this new one, "people-hater." Although labels like "faggot" have been deemed unfair, I guess "people-hater" is all right to use.

If it gets you what you want.

I'm not a "people-hater." At times, I can't stand most people, but I never single out homosexuals for any special kind of hate.

My views toward homosexuality generally correspond with my old friend Darren's. He was a little shocked when Pete Townsend came out of the closet. You see, The Who had been like a religion to us in high school, and Townsend was the band's lead guitarist.

Although Darren was disgusted at first, he came to accept it.

"I don't care if he's a butt pirate," Darren said. "That boy can play guitar."

If Darren ended up meeting Pete, though, I think he'd still feel a bit uncomfortable. And I think a lot of guys would, too. I don't think it's hate, though. I think it's natural.

It might all stem from the movie "Deliverance." Did Ned Beatty really put up that much of a fight?

In its own weird way, the emergence of AIDS in the 1980s really seems to have increased acceptance of the homosexual community, at least from the college perspective.

Mainly, it's because no one likes to see other people die. It's a basic human courtesy to extend sympathy toward people who are dying.

However, the status of "victim" among the homosexual community is being overused, and the courtesy being extended to the community during an epidemic is being abused.

We forget things in the midst of the epidemic's panic. WWe forget that unlike cancer and Alzheimer's, AIDS can be controlled through precautions. And the number of cases for those other diseases far outnumbers AIDS statistics.

New York schools, during a panic, propose that it is "multicultural" to include texts on homosexuality in a child's education. And if we think kids might shoot heroin, we'll probably teach them the proper way to shove the needle in their arms.

It's only natural that with the number of homosexuals in the United States, a few would want to join the military. However, considering that the military is one of the ultimate vehicles of conformity available, I can't see how someone with an "alternative lifestyle" would automatically expect to fit in.

There's a lot of friction in society concerning homosexuals and there will be for some time to come. A lot of it comes from clashes in ideologies and the fear of AIDS.

But to associate someone with hate because they don't accept the homosexual community is wrong. And it's cheap

Housing department makes many mistakes

Editor,

In my four years of living in the dorms, I have served on both the Judicial and Hall Governing Boards. These boards try to make the dorms a better place to live.

Nothing is more frustrating than trying to work with the Department of Housing and Dining Services. The housing department needs to be aware of the residents' views. There have been several decisions that the department has made that the residents find appalling.

The housing consolidation policy was, and still is, a thorn in the side of the housing department. To refresh your memory, the department decided to compact all of its residents into the least amount of space.

The policy states that if your roommate moves out, you have one week to move to another room, find a new roommate, or start paying the single-room rate. Many disagree with this policy.

Once the semester starts, don't make residents change rooms. Enough goes on in the course of the semester without changing rooms.

Another big decision in the department was the new option of the 15-meal plan. The department profits from meals that residents miss. To appease the masses, the department came up with a meal plan that it knew would fail so it could tell the residents that it tried. Most residents I know feel this way.

The department is now going to raise rates to $390 per month. In the past few years, housing numbers have been dropping. The department claims this resulted from a smaller number of incoming freshmen. Wouldn't it make sense to try to keep as many upper-classmen as possible?

Last spring, the department held its annual spring dinner. They decided it would be good to have invitations sent out to all of the residents and include a button with a picture of Jim Morrison. They spent more then $1,200 on these invitations. This was wasted money. You don't need to send invitations to a dinner that everyone will attend anyway.

The department spends like this so it can win awards. If the department is so worried about its finances, it should watch how it spends its money. That's how the rest of the world works.

Pedestrians becoming moving targets

Editor,

I would like to ask a favor of everyone who drives along Denison Avenue.

When you see a pedestrian in one of the crosswalks — STOP. I have lived in Goodnow Hall for three weeks and have nearly been hit twice while crossing Denison. I'm not alone. Several people on my floor have had similar near-misses. One man had his backpack knocked off.

I admit that it is frustrating when someone walks out in front of you, but please stop or slow down. The only way to lessen the problem is for everyone, pedestrians and drivers, to be patient and slow down. If this does not happen, someone is going to be badly hurt.

On a personal note, to the young blonde girl who was driving the new green Dodge Shadow through the crosswalk by Durland Hall Monday at 10:30 a.m. I'm the woman in the brown coat you tried to run over. Be glad I stopped walking because your parents would be paying for your education and mine. Stop and think about that before you go gunning for pedestrians next time.

Expect cold reaction to gays in military

Editor,

I felt compelled to assist my fellow students toward a better understanding of why soldiers vehemently oppose the admittance of homosexuals into the Armed Forces.

I am a military wife and have been surrounded by the Army mindset for the past eight years. As a college student, I understand the dismay most students express toward the reactions of the Joint Chiefs of Staff in regard to President Clinton's proposals.

However, as a member of the Army family, I know why they are motivated to behave in such a manner.

In the mind of most soldiers, the military is a brotherhood of men who stand for the best that the United States has to offer. These men are willing to fight and die for what they believe in. They are a very idealistic crowd. Women have a hard time being accepted. Gays don't stand a chance.

I am not saying that their beliefs are justified, I'm just saying that they exist.

The Joint Chiefs of Staff were not exaggerating the degree of breakdown in esprit de corp that would occur if open acceptance of gays is allowed in the military. Fort Riley is already buzzing at just the thought.

Has President Clinton stopped to consider what the work conditions would be like for those individuals who did decide to brave it and join? I fear for their safety.

I believe if President Clinton tries to push the military before it's ready, the results could be disastrous.

Eat hot muskrat, sucker

Tell us it's just a bad "Beverly Hillbillies" episode.

It would appear there is some sort of famine on the Atlantic coast that we are not aware of.

We say this because we just heard about the $7.95 Wednesday night special at Mary Etta's Family Restaurant in Smyrna, Del.

For such an economical price, you can have a heapin' helpin' of fried potatoes, stewed tomatoes and some tasty muskrat.

"It's good stuff. It's better than chicken," said diner Bill Starkey.

Have it be known that these are unsolicited testimonials.

"The secret is what you put in it when you parboil them to get the wild taste out," restaurant owner Mary Etta Workman said.

"I'm 54, and I've been eating them since I was old enough to know what they were," she said.

And for those few of you who haven't stopped reading to run off and catch yourself one of these swamp-dwelling rodents, it's rumored that muskrats are aphrodisiacs.

"They're so good they'll make a bulldog break its chain," said Leon Powell, as he finished up his mess o' vittles.

You'd have to pay us to mingle with Zsa Zsa

Zsa Zsa Gabor, an idol to millions of potential short-tempered actresses around the world, is a little bit poorer today.

Tuesday, a San Antonio jury said, in essence, "Why can't you be more like your sister, Eva? See how nice she plays?" and slapped her with the losing side of a $200,000 judgment.

Gabor was being sued by Leonard Safir, president of Hollywood Fantasy Corp., a company that preyed on people whose self-esteem was at such a low level that they'd gladly pay $7,500 for a week of make-up lessons and an opportunity to mingle with a celebrity.

Zsa Zsa was to do the professional mingling gig one week in 1991 but backed out when a challenging cameo appearance in the critically acclaimed sleeper "Naked Gun 2 1/2" was offered to her.

Now hear this: Read more children's books

Cynthia Rylant and Emily Arnold McCully have, in our insignificant opinion anyway, taken home the most prestigious awards in literature.

The 1993 John Newbery and Randolph Caldecott medals for children's literature were handed out Monday in Chicago.

Rylant took home the Newbery, which marks the most distinguished contribution to American literature for children, for "Missing May," a book about the death of an elderly woman and her friends' efforts to comfort one another.

The Caldecott award honors the year's most distinguished American picture book for children and was bestowed upon McCully for her illustration of "Mirette on the High Wire." The book tells the story of a little girl in 19th century Paris who assists a high-wire artist overcome his fear.

Now the last time Weekend tried to give someone a genuine compliment, somebody thought we were being bitterly sarcastic (who, us?). So we'll spell it out here — we would rather read Richard Scary or Beatrix Potter than Stephen King or Tom Clancy, any old day of the week.

Why it's so hard to say that we're sorry

Because of a suspicious printing error in the Jan. 15 Smatterings column, there were a few mistakes in an item titled "Coming soon: 'Hamlet' starring Don Knotts."

The printed version of this item described the ridiculous theory of "Hamlet Fatigue" and how so many productions of "Hamlet" were currently running. It also continued with the truly ludicrous notions that a good majority of the earth's population had played the title role, and that one of the better versions was a play by some Tom Stoppard guy, called "Rosencrantz & Guildenstern Are Dead."

First of all, the words "Ferngully: The Last Rainforest" should have appeared in every instance where the word "Hamlet" appeared.

Second, the inexplicable title "Rosencrantz & Guildenstern Are Dead" should be replaced with the words "Herbie Goes Bananas."

Glad we got that cleared up. Now, if anyone else has been made to feel immensely insecure about any of their upcoming artistic endeavors, for pete's sake, let us know.

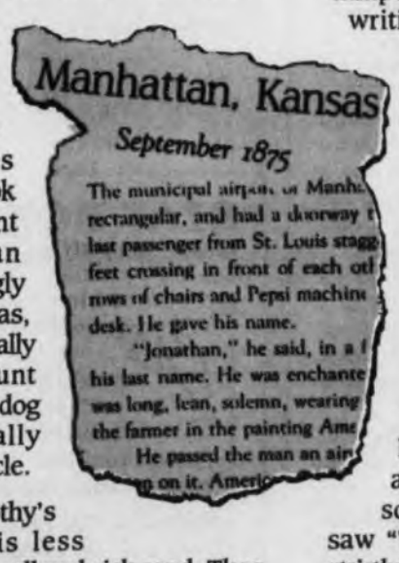
THE WIZARD OF WAS

LONDON AUTHOR GEOFF RYMAN TELLS WHY HE WAS DRAWN TO MANHATTAN

Geoff Ryman may be the only person to ever have had a religious experience by discovering Manhattan.

It happened as Ryman pored over a map, looking for the perfect place to serve as a setting for his fourth novel.



"I was looking at a map of Kansas, and the town of Manhattan went PING," Ryman said, in a telephone interview. "I knew God was on my side."

Ryman's 369-page effort, mysteriously titled "Was," was published last year by the major publishing house Knopf, thus immortalizing the Little Apple on acid-free paper, in Goudy Old Style type.

If it was divine intervention that led Geoff Ryman to Manhattan, it was first the author's imagination that was the catalyst to the grimly creative tale of the "real Wizard of Oz."

"Was" is an Olympic speed-skating race of three individual stories that come off the mark separately, yet end up weaving gracefully among each other.

The first story chronicles the life of one young Dorothy Gael (as opposed to the 1939 cinema classic's main character, Dorothy Gale), who is sent in 1875 from her New York home to live with her Aunty Em and Uncle Henry in the farming community of Zeandale.

Unlike the kindly relatives portrayed in the book or movie, the aunt and uncle Ryman paints are strikingly different. In Kansas, Dorothy is emotionally abused by her aunt (who also kills her dog Toto) and sexually abused by her Uncle.

In essence, Dorothy's life in Kansas is less comforting than a yellow brick road. Then one day at school, Dorothy encounters a traveling actor and playwright from New York — Frank L. Baum (the author of the original novels that led to the 1939 film). Baum hears Dorothy's story and later writes "The Wonderful Wizard of Oz."

The second story is set in the present day and tells the story of a movie actor named Jonathan who, dying of AIDS, is consumed with a desire to discover the "real" Dorothy. He spends his final days in and around Manhattan, searching for evidence of her existence.

The third facet of "Was" relates the true story of Frances Gumm, a girl who lives a pitted childhood in a 1920s California town, before she ends up in Hollywood with the new name Judy Garland.

Some may visualize Baum's original story as one literary sacred cow, too honored to be tampered with, but the idea of writing about such an icon of literature was appealing to Ryman for a variety of reasons.

"I'd always played around with doing a western, actually, and I'd also loved the Oz books, but I'd never connected the two," he said. "Then I said, 'Ahhh, that's a new kind of western.'"

Ryman, who was born in Canada but now lives in London ("That's the thing about Canadians, we end up somewhere else."), never saw "The Wizard of Oz" as a strictly American literary legacy.

"Oz is very, very big in Australia, in Britain. What it touches on is a lot of powerful theories," he said. "'The 'School Ties' struggles with anti-Semitism knot

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

Upholding school and self-honor in the late 1930s is the main message of "School Ties," the latest offering from UPC films.

David Greene, played by Brendan Fraser, is the center of the film's struggle. His great football skills deliver him from his dead-end hometown to Saint Matthew's Academy, where he spends his senior year as the star quarterback.

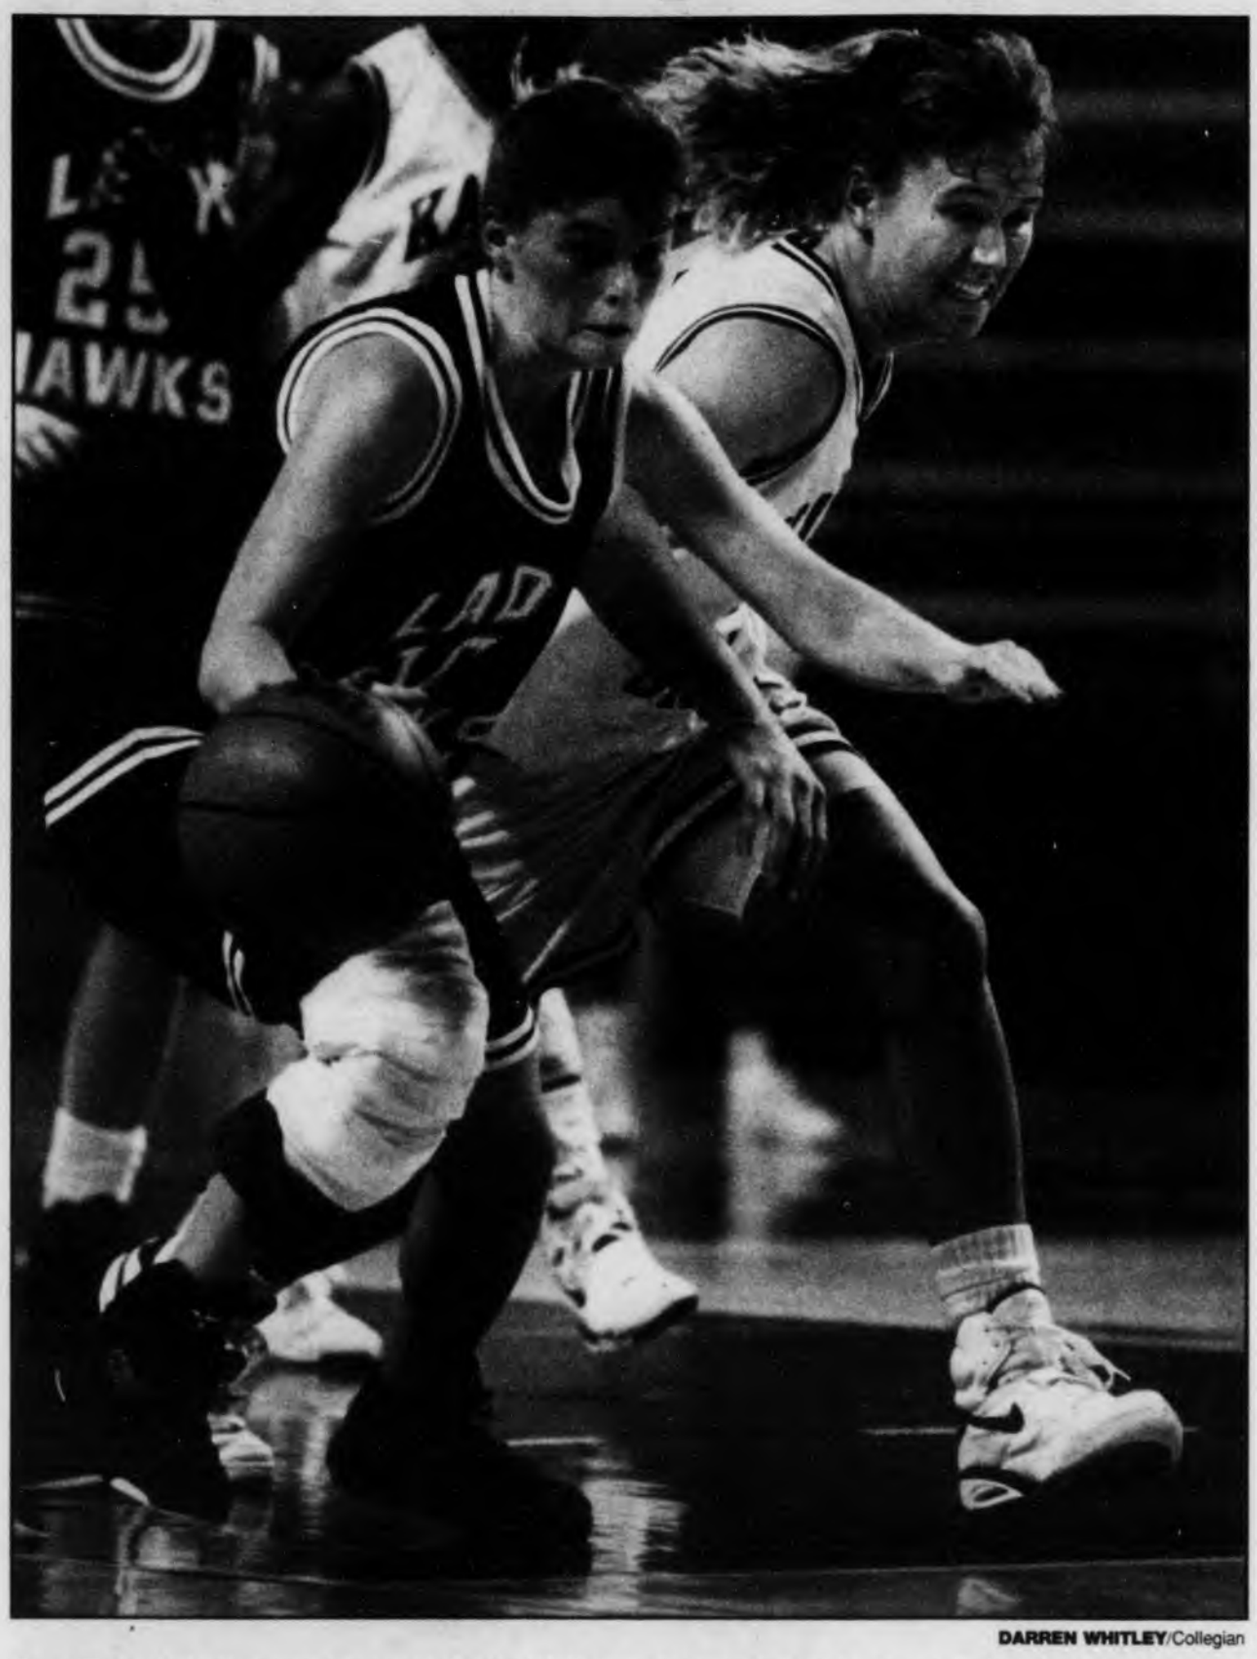
His likable personality and his football talent help him fit in. But only one thing might hold David back in his success at the academy — he is Jewish.

In the 1930s, there was no tolerance at the academy for anyone different from the white Catholic majority. This attitude is evident from the prejudiced remarks David's schoolmates make about Jews. So he keeps his mouth shut about his true identity.

David's struggle comes down to a question of honor, which the academy promotes in a stringent honor code. The code calls for him to be truthful to himself, to his classmates and to his school.

David thinks he is making the right decision by not revealing his true background, but is he really honoring himself and his friends? Is it worth covering up in order to get what he wants, the chance to go to Harvard?

David also has to deal with the "big man on campus," Charlie Dillon, played by Matt Damen. At first, Charlie and David become close friends, especially as they work together to bring their football team to a victorious season. But as David's popularity rises, Charlie starts to lose his self confidence, his girl and his chance as quarterback to David.



Charlie then combats his own struggle with honor, when he stumbles upon a way to get back at David. His insecurity leads him to lying and attacking David's identity, so he can protect himself and feel more worthwhile.

Even though both Fraser and Damen are virtually unknown actors, they handle their characters with depth and feeling. The flimsy script, however, keeps them from exploring any new ground in fighting and defeating anti-Semitism.

It may be worth seeing the movie to get an idea of how much people's views about anti-Semitism have changed, and how much they have not.

"School Ties" will show at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Friday and at 7 p.m. Saturday and Sunday in K-State Union Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75 with student ID.

Win is 1st since Jan. 3

BRIAN ANDERSON

Senior Leah Honeycutt scored 13 of her game-high 17 points and grabbed nine of her 10 rebounds in the second half to help K-State pull away from Quincy College Thursday night and beat the Lady Hawks 62-44 at Bramlage Coliseum.

The win for K-State, 8-9, ended a seven-game losing streak that started after the team won the Holiday Inn Beach Blast earlier this month.

Coach Susan Yow said she was not pleased with her team at halftime, when the Lady Cats led just 22-20.

"We didn't play together," she said. "We needed to establish a system on offense, and we needed to be more aggressive.

"We weren't getting to the boards," she said. "We had to take it up a notch. That's hard to do when you're in a losing streak. I'm glad we were able to do that."

The K-State defense forced Quincy to shoot 36 percent and commit 10 turnovers.

The Lady Cats improved offensively as well. They shot 44.7 percent from the field in the second half after hitting 29 percent in the first.

"We didn't come out intense to start the game," said Honeycutt, who collected her second double-double in three games. "A lot more intensity was applied in the second half."

"Her intensity picked up and went to another level," Yow said of Honeycutt. "She is the key for us to get going."

"I needed a game like this to build my confidence," said Stires, who scored 15 points and pulled down nine rebounds. "This helps build the team's confidence. It's a good springboard for the Kansas game."

Stires and Honeycutt scored 12 consecutive points for K-State in a four-minute span to pull away from the Lady Hawks. Ten of those points came near the basket, something Yow wanted at halftime.

"I felt we needed to get the ball inside more," she said. "We had to make things happen."

Yow said she was pleased with the numbers at the end of the game.

"It had been a while since we had 14 turnovers," she said of the second-least amount of turnovers since the first game of the year. "We had more steals than the other team."

K-State gets back into conference action Sunday with a game against Kansas, followed by Missouri and Colorado at home.

Wildcats to face 9-5 Temple Owls

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

K-State wraps up its non-conference season this weekend with a game against a team that is the Cats' toughest test outside of the Big Eight.

The Temple Owls, 9-5 after Thursday night's 69-67 win over Rhode Island, will come to Bramlage Coliseum at 1 p.m. Saturday afternoon trying to cool off the 12-3 Wildcats.

K-State has won seven of its last eight games, the lone setback being a 6-point loss to the No. 1-ranked Jayhawks.

The Owls, ranked 20th in the nation in the USA Today computer rankings, have faced some tough competition thus far in the season. They have beaten the likes of Massachusetts and Florida, while dropping close games to Florida State and UMass.

"They are very athletic and talented," Cats' coach Dana Altman said. "They are all able to create their own shots."

Temple has three players averaging more than 12 points a game, and Aaron McKie is leading the pack with 20.

"Those three guys score a lot of points and do most of their shooting."

Indeed, between McKie, Eddie Jones and Rick Brunson, the Temple trio takes more than 68 percent of the Owls' shots and scores 68 percent of their points.

The Wildcats, on the other hand, have six players averaging more than 10 points a game — the five starters and sophomore Brian Henson.

K-State continues to lead the Big Eight in defense, giving up just 65.7 points per game. Wildcat opponents are shooting just 42 percent from the floor and turning the ball over almost 20 times a game.

But K-State followed the same script in Tuesday's win over Central Connecticut State that they have been using much of the season — sloppy second-half play.

Against the Blue Devils, a team that scored 16 points in the first 20 minutes, K-State was outscored 40-37 in the second half — something that has the Cats worried.

The same thing has happened several times this season, including games against Ohio, Kansas and Nebraska.

"It's just a matter of taking pride in our second half," Beane said. "It's like we come out and say, 'Hey, we got them now.'

"We look at the score, we see we're up by a lot, and it's very easy to get out of sync."

But the Wildcats continue to thwart preseason picks that tabbed K-State as the seventh-best team in the Big Eight. The Wildcats, 3-1, are currently in sole possession of third place in the conference, trailing Kansas and Missouri.

"I've seen articles that had our team down," junior center Deryl Cunningham said. "And I've seen articles that had me as the biggest bust in the Big Eight.

"It still didn't bother me. Everyone has a right to his own opinion. It's not the first time that this team has been put down."

And K-State got plenty of criticism after falling to this Temple team 68-65 a year ago. In that game, Askia Jones scored 28 points.

In fact, it was the only time in the past two seasons that K-State has lost when Jones scored more than 20 points.

Four of the Cats' next five games will be at Bramlage Coliseum.

The next conference game for K-State is Oklahoma on Feb. 3.

■ Three players combine for 68 percent of Temple's scoring.

Missouri, Kansas to visit for Triangular

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

K-State's track and field team will play host to the fourth annual KSU/KU/MU triangular Saturday at Ahearn Field House. K-State has won each of the first three meets.

"I will be surprised if we don't win by 20 points," interim head coach Cliff Rovelto said.

Rovelto said the meet is important because it's against conference rivals, and it is in Manhattan.

Field events will begin at 11 a.m. with the women's long jump, followed by the men's. Preliminary running events will begin at 11:30 a.m. with the women's 55-meter hurdles

Rovelto said the Missouri men's team has strong hurdlers and shot putters.

"In my opinion, they have the best team they've had in years," he said. "But Kansas' men's team has more depth."

Rovelto said Kansas will be the tougher competition for K-State. He said they have a couple of good middle-distance runners.

The high jump will begin at 1:45 p.m. In last week's meet in Manhattan, Wildcat high jumpers Percel Gaskins and Itai Margalit qualified for the NCAA nationals. Gaskins also set a meet record.

But Rovelto said qualifying for the national championship was not important enough to make special changes in order to get athletes qualified.

"If we have to rest people to get them qualified, they aren't going to do much at nationals," he said.

"I would expect to see a lot of really good performances and a lot of meet records broken," he said.

Suzanne Sim practices Wednesday at Ahearn Field House. Sim and her partner, Linda Neethling, will be the No. 2 doubles team.

TENNIS

Netters to open spring with Creighton match

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Last season, the K-State tennis team had a lot of firsts.

The Wildcats finished third in the regular Big Eight season, beat perennial powerhouse Oklahoma State, made it all the way to the Big Eight Tournament championship game and received votes for the Top-25 poll — all for the first time.

Now the spring 1993 season brings another first — how does K-State top the accomplishments of its best season?

"I'd like to be able to say, 'Girls, we were second in the Big Eight last year, we're going to be second again,'" Coach Steve Bietau said.

"I'd like to implant that in their brains, but I don't think that's something I can do. A lot of it this year will depend on where they set their own expectations."

Those expectations will be tested for the first time this year as they duel the Creighton Bluejays at 12:30 p.m. Sunday at the Cottonwood Racquet Club in Manhattan.

The 1993 team will bring with it a load of question marks. In singles play, only K-State's No. 1 seed for the tournament, out of an eight-member team, has been decided on at this point — senior Susana Labrador.

"Susana's played big-time tennis before and is an extremely talented player," Bietau said. "She had a kind of a rough time of it in the fall, but outside of that, she has the potential to beat their No. 1 player and compete very well.

"If Susana shows up to play, she's clearly our No. 1."

Bietau's main worry going into the season is getting the new faces on the team game experience. Two freshmen, Amelia Van Der Merwe and Linda Neethling, came to K-State in the spring semester.

"I've got two girls that, if they're finding their way to class right now, I'm pretty happy," Bietau said. "They just got here two weeks ago.

"They're great girls, and they're going to do well, but it's going to take them some time."

Labrador said helping the newcomers adjust will be the main task for the seniors.

"We have some young players," she said. "And the ones that are seniors have to be models for them.

"The first couple of matches will be a big introduction."

Depth is also a concern for the Cats. Angie Gover and Evelia Alvarez are both undergoing rehabilitation from shoulder injuries and are questionable to play this year.

"We need to be intelligent about our workouts this year," Bietau said. "We've got to not take any unnecessary risks and hope for the best."

Admission will be free to the Cottonwood Racquet Club's indoor courts, located at 3615 Claflin Road.

The teams will begin Sunday with doubles play, followed by the singles matches.

◀ Tyrell Stevens takes time out to listen and learn a new song that the group is working on. Stevens has been in Titus' class for three weeks.

A new way to learn with

VIOLINS

When you enter Mary Ellen Titus's classroom, you sense immediately the vibrant excitement the children have for learning.

Chinese checkers, chess and American games are a few of the analytical challenges in progress. Besides teaching her students critical thinking, Titus encourages them to appreciate music and art. Her students have an unusual opportunity — the chance to learn violin at an early age.

"Each student has their own violin, which has been loaned rent-free for the year," Titus said.

Since mid-September, the Hume Music Store in Topeka has loaned the violins to the primary multi-age classroom at Theodore Roosevelt Grade School in Manhattan, she said.

"Every Wednesday, Neta Stanley, the K-State orchestra concert mistress, comes into our class to give an hour-long lesson," Titus said. "The students also practice as a class for about 15 minutes on Tuesday and Thursday."

The lessons are paid for by Varney, Mills, Rogers, Burnett and Associates, a Manhattan accounting firm.

"Neta Stanley is a wonderful teacher for these children," Titus said. "She is really good at explaining to the students how to play. You couldn't ask for a better teacher."

Although Titus plays the cello rather than the violin, she has always dreamed of having a class of students playing the violin.

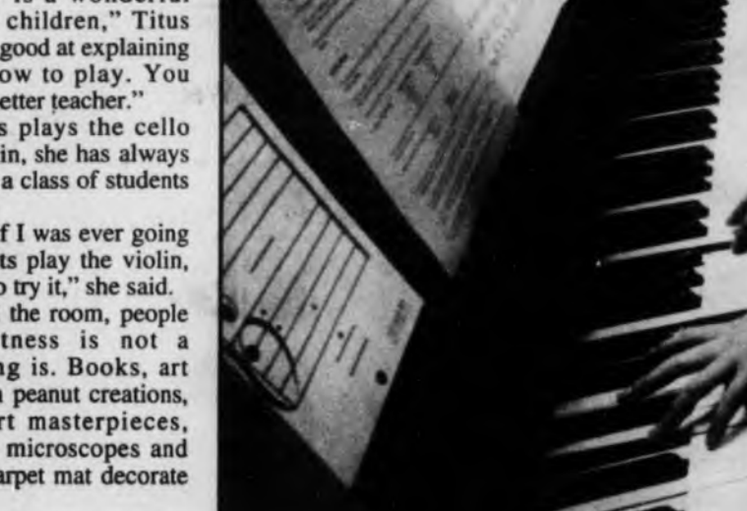
"I decided that if I was ever going to have my students play the violin, now was the time to try it," she said.

Looking around the room, people will notice neatness is not a priority—Learning is. Books, art supplies, styrofoam peanut creations, class banners, art masterpieces, bacterial cultures, microscopes and even a continent carpet mat decorate the room.

Getting into the primary multi-age classroom is not difficult.

"The parents just asked to have their children put into this class," Titus said. "There is no set reason why they are in this class."

Besides arranging for her class of 21 students to explore the violin, Titus's class is unique because of the various ages of the students.



"Because they range in age from 6 to 9 years old, the students are able to learn from one another," she said.

The three-year age difference between the the students is beneficial, Titus said. Besides helping students excel socially, Titus said peer-group learning is one of the most effective ways for children to learn.

"At the beginning of the year, only one boy knew how to play chess," she said. "Now, all of the students know how.

"Every child is gifted. It's just a matter of discovering their abilities."

Some of her students have the potential to be gifted musicians. Three of Titus's students take private violin lessons.

Shozo Wynkoop, a 9-year-old, has been taking violin lessons since he was 5. His 16-year-old sister currently attends Interlochen boarding school near Crystal Lake, Minn. Eventually, he said he hopes to do the same.

Lindsey De Noon, an 8-year-old, also enjoys playing the violin.

"I love playing the violin," De Noon said.

Other students said they agree that playing the violin at least 15 minutes a day is enjoyable.

"It's fun," Casey Devore, an 8-year-old, said. "I'm trying to learn to play a piece that I've written for the piano on the violin."

The class's music talent does not stop there.

Titus pointed to one of her students named Lynn Lee, an 8-year-old, who can play the piano by ear, unaided by sheet music.

"When our music teacher isn't here, Lynn plays the violin to accompany us on the piano," Titus said.

"Lynn, tell about your solution to the ozone hole."

After Lee modestly said he would rather not discuss it because he has not figured out those slight details, Titus quietly explained his idea.

"Lynn has it all worked out," she said. "He has been reading about the ozone problem, and now he just needs to figure out how to get the extra oxygen atom on the molecule."

Titus takes her students' dreams seriously and tries to avoid discouraging them.

"Lynn also wants to invent a time machine some day," she said.

"Yes, but my dad says I shouldn't even dream about it," Lee said.

But such lofty goals are only encouraged in Titus's classroom.

"I want my students to learn about the joy of music and the discipline it takes to play an instrument," Titus said.

Part of the challenge of learning to play a musical instrument is learning how to perform for others. Already, the students have given four performances this school year.

Certainly the violin program is unique, if not one of a kind, for a public school, Titus said.

"It is very unusual for an entire classroom to play the violin," Titus said. "Usually, when students play the violin, it is done on an individual, pull-out basis. And if it is done by an entire grade school class anywhere else, we are unaware of it."

Although teaching violin to such a large group is difficult, Titus and Stanley said they try to see to the students' individual needs.

"An instrument is a very individual thing," Titus said.

▲ Lynn Nee leads Mary Ellen Titus' class on the piano as his classmates play a version of 'Twinkle, Twinkle Little Star.' Nee has learned, by ear on the piano, most of the songs the class performs with the violins.

Military ban on homosexuals debated

Clinton estimates lifting order in six months, Dole says to take time-out

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton said Thursday he remained committed to suspending the ban on homosexuals in the military and was "pretty close" to resolving congressional objections to his interim plan. Aides worked feverishly to mute opposition from Congress and the Pentagon.

Whatever their sexual orientation, Clinton said, "Americans who are willing to conform to requirements of conduct in the military service, in my judgment, should be able to serve in the military."

But the president, trying to avoid a backlash in Congress that could weaken his week-old administration, postponed for a second straight day an expected announcement of action.

Republicans pressed him not to take any immediate action and said they would try to stop him if he went ahead. "Take a time-out for six months," Senate Minority Leader Bob Dole said.

Clinton said there was "an enormous amount of agreement" on ending the practice of asking military recruits about their sexual orientation. However, he said there was still disagreement with Congress and the military over the second part of his interim plan dealing with treatment of acknowledged homosexuals already in the service.

The president gave no indication of backing away from his ultimate goal, which aides have said would be reached in an order six months from now, of lifting the military's 50-year-old ban on homosexuals.

"People should be disqualified from serving in the military based on something they do, not based on who they are," Clinton said.

White House communications director George Stephanopoulos said the interim order, the first steps, would come "relatively soon," perhaps Friday. It originally had been expected to be released Wednesday.

According to White House expectations, Defense Secretary Les Aspin would draft an executive order for Clinton to sign, formally lifting the ban after six months. Details would be worked out by then on how the military should put the new policy into effect.

The two-step approach is designed to give the administration time to solve problems with morale, recruitment, discipline and conduct and also time to stave off a revolt in Congress.

Clinton said the Joint Chiefs agree recruits should not be asked about their sexual orientations.

Finding another point of agreement with the military, which fears promiscuity and resulting morale problems, he said, "I agree that any sort of improper conduct should result in severance."

Under the interim order, cases based on sexual conduct would proceed because they involve violations of the military code of justice.

Here is an excerpt from the novel "Was" by Geoff Ryman:

"There is a town called Manhattan, Kansas, that is very like the one in this novel. It was settled by people called Purcell and Higinbotham and Pillsbury. There was a Professor Mudge, an Etta Parkerson and her Mr. Reynolds. There was even a Dr. Lyman. To my knowledge, however, he was not related to Lyman Frank Baum, nor did Baum visit the town, though he was in Kansas in the 1880s. ...

There was a Blue Earth village on the Manhattan side of the two great rivers. ... There is a Zeandale; there is a Pillsbury's Crossing. The Aiken family still lives in the area. There were indeed two Sunflower Schools, one of which has disappeared, leaving only a clearing in a small hump where the lane meets the main road. That lane does lead to a smooth, zigzagurat-shaped hill. ... If memory serves, the last buffalo in Zeandale was seen at Pillsbury's Crossing, by a member of the Aiken family, in 1882.

Ryman finds inspiration for story in Manhattan

Wizard of Oz' is an experience that a lot of people share."

Even the film version, shown religiously on television every year, holds a mystique for Ryman.

"It's not the greatest film ever made on one level, but there's something going on underneath," he said. "There's a lot going on in finding of identity, the finding of self."

Ryman wrote the first draft of "Was" in 1987, from September to December, doing almost all his work on weekends while working his regular job producing leaflets for the British government.

After the first draft, he spent his holidays flying to the United States, then to Manhattan, to do research for "Was." Besides gaining a feeling of modern-day Manhattan, he found himself spending long hours searching for pieces of the town's past.

While wandering around New York City in 1991, on his way to Manhattan, Kan., for the first time, Ryman ran into an omen of sorts. On a television mounted in a bank, "The Wizard of Oz" had been rigged on a tape loop to play continuously.

In the final chapter, after the novel is finished, Ryman describes and acknowledges Manhattan for the foundation of reality he built his story on. These include thanks to the Riley County Historical Museum, where he spent long hours absorbing local history.

"I had to work very hard when I was in Manhattan," said Ryman.

"Looking through old newspapers of that time (1870s), I came across an advertisement placed by a man whose wife had left him, and which stated that he would appreciate it if no one mentioned her to him anymore," Ryman said.

And once the author saw Kansas, he said he felt that an injustice had been done to it in the movie.

"One of the things I wanted to do was redescribe Kansas differently than it was described in the film — flat, dead and gray."

The original ending had the character Jonathan finding the answer to his Oz search in Mexico. But Ryman suddenly realized the story couldn't possibly end that way. So he re-wrote the ending and Jonathan returns to Manhattan.

"When you write books, they have this very nice, neat shape, like this street in Manhattan called Oz Circle," he said. "I think it's a nice thing we end up in Manhattan to see it round."

Despite its local ending, "Was" remains a work of dark currents. Dorothy cannot take the punishment of her life in Kansas and goes insane, dying in 1956 in a nursing home.

Yet, Ryman maintains there is a spring of hope in the story.

"I think the main person in the book is Dorothy Gael, but I think the main character is the spirit of "The Wizard of Oz."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Mr. Shakey Foot finds some support

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I usually object to taking sides with men, but this time I have to say that I'm for Mr. Shakey Foot. I want him to know that not all of us girls dwell on old boyfriends. If he meets another lady that catches his eye, he shouldn't be afraid to pursue a relationship regardless of her past experiences. Look at the bright side, not all women are mean, and you've already eliminated one of the few that is.

Responsive Reader

DEAR RESPONSIVE,

Right on, Sister.

You're not alone. Read on.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

This is in response to Shakey Foot's letter from Tuesday.

Hang in there buddy! I went through the same stuff with my ex and was confused for quite some time. But, as the saying goes, there are more fish in the sea. I know, I've got me a trophy right now. Anyway, you do run a good chance of meeting another girl with previous relationship problems. If you're lucky, she won't be a bitch to you. Peace.

4-the-Boyz

DEAR 4-THE-BOYZ,

I'm glad you found a "keeper." I have a good feeling that patience is one of her many attributes.

I'm sure Shakey appreciates the encouragement.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

Linford's death great loss to University campuses, Williams said Linford assisted the defense of scores of alleged victims of civil-rights violations and racial and gender discrimination.

"She was a friend of multicultural students during the civil rights movements," Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said. "She also marched and gave advice to students."

Linford was a long-time member of the K-State Faculty Senate and author of many of the University's due process guidelines, said William Richter, head of the political science department.

From 1966 to 1976, Linford was the pre-law adviser and director of the pre-law program in the College of Arts and Sciences.

"She built the pre-law program here," Michael Suleiman, professor of political science, said. "She was a very dedicated teacher, a person of principle and someone who was always ready to help people who are disadvantaged."

Outside of the University, Linford liked gardening, Trisa Linford, her niece, said.

"As a child, she was always out in the sun," she said. "She really liked the outdoors, and she loved to read."

Trisa Linford said her family was her No. 1 priority, but the students were her life.

She is survived by her brother, H. G. Linford, a sister, Lynda Linford, both of Salt Lake City, and a nephew, Scott Linford, a third-year K-State veterinary medicine student.

A memorial service will be at 5 p.m., today, in the First Congregational Church. The burial will be in Salt Lake City.

Her family requests that in lieu of flowers, contributions in memory of her can be made through the K-State Endowment to the Lou Douglas fund, named for her former colleague and mentor.

technology, and it gives us people we can depend on every day," Worthington said.

Chuck Thorpe, Spanish instructor, and Jane Riles, French instructor, both teach at the ECC. Although they are the ones actually teaching the class, teaching partners are the ones giving the grades.

The partners are certified high-school teachers at the school, who in many cases are learning the language right along with the students, Newhouse said.

"This is not designed to replace the in-class teacher," Newhouse said. "But, there are so many smaller schools, and this allows them to have a foreign language before they go to college, and maybe put them on more of an equal level with students from larger schools."

while, and then when the weather hit, there was a tremendous need for animal bedding and the Wal-Mart supply couldn't handle it," Wedel said.

"He didn't want to tell anyone to bring papers and then in a few months have to quit again. We had to do something or just drop everything and don't recycle."

Wilson sells shredded newspaper as animal bedding for $1 a bale. A bale typically contains 45-55 pounds of paper. All the paper Wilson gets now will be used as animal bedding.

"We won't pay the subsidy until the demand for animal bedding slows down," Wedel said.

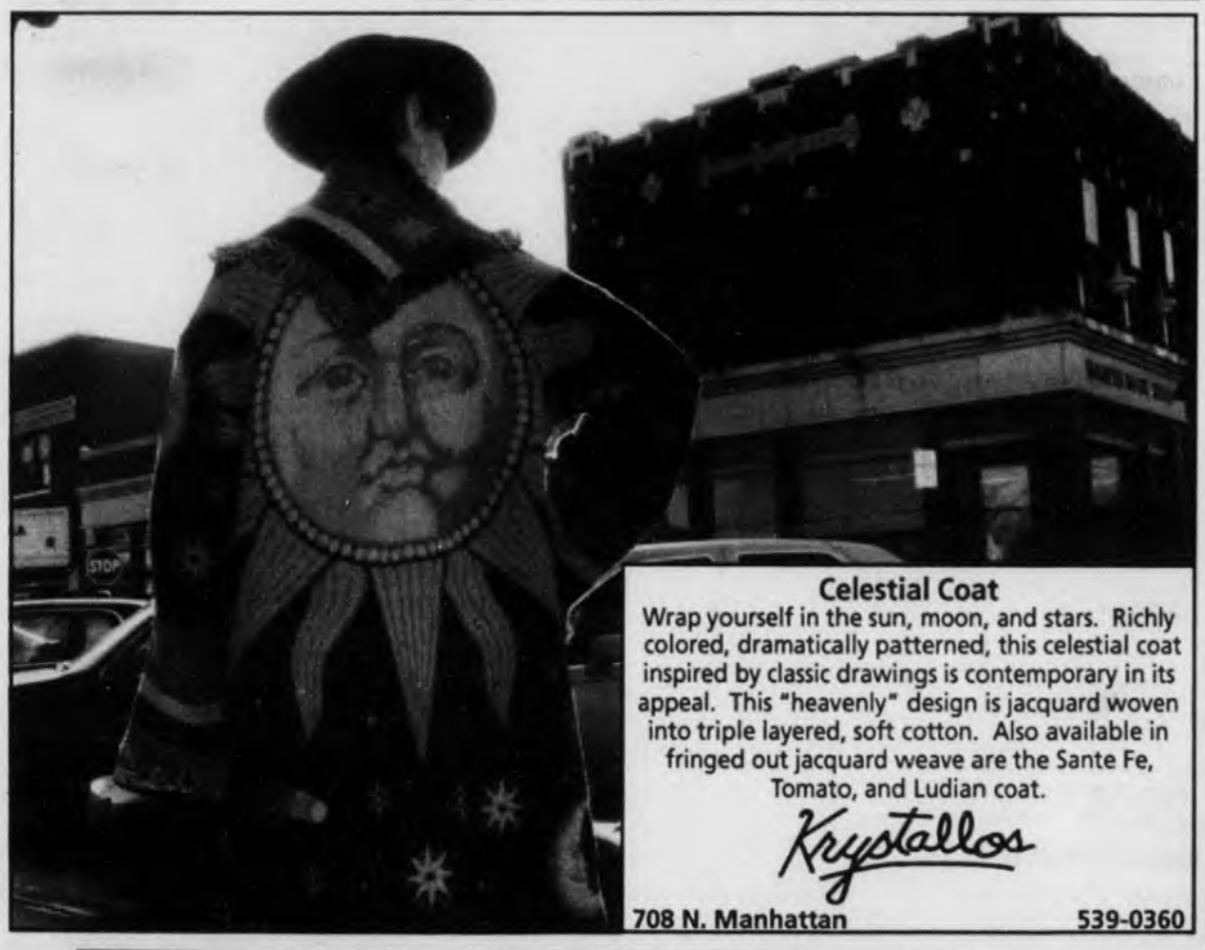
Mark Edwards majored in electric power and distribution and graduated in December.

He said he has a couple of job offers he is looking into but nothing concrete.

Edwards attended K-State for two years before he went to Manhattan Area Technical Center. He said he learned valuable skills through the hands-on training.



"You get a genuine feel for what it's like, not repeating something new every day. It's more hands on — college was more reading," Edwards said.

He said his plans are to get a good-paying, full-time job and go back to college.

Berry said he likes to see everyone walk away with a marketable skill.

Manhattan Area Technical Center offers a wide range of classes, from air conditioning and refrigeration to welding.

Other classes offered are computer operations, computer programming, computer repair, drafting technology, graphic arts technology and marketing education.

of oral contraceptives.

Dr. Anne Wigglesworth, a Manhattan obstetrician and gynecologist, said Depo-Provera is unpopular with women's health care activist groups.

"It has been used for years — with or without approval — and the problem is that it's not known how long the effects really last. Many women hated the way it made them feel."

Wigglesworth said women who used the drug in the '70s are just now coming forward. A lot of women have said it caused such changes as unusual hair growth, water retention and weight gain — all of which are side effects of progesterone, she said.

"The consensus at this time is that the injection causes more problems than it solves," Wigglesworth said.

Wigglesworth does not intend to promote the use of Depo-Provera and said it's hard for her to understand what population would find it useful.

SUPER BOWL XXVII '93 ISSUE

WIN?

STEVEN ROCK

No team in the National Football League has ever lost three successive Super Bowls.

Pay attention, folks — the Buffalo Bills are about to make history.

With the emergence of a bountiful crop of new-generation talent, the Dallas Cowboys have all the tools to add to the Bills' Super Bowl woes.

Never mind the fact that the Bills have 37 players who have been to the Bowl while Dallas, with an average age of just 26, have two. How much does the experience factor truly mean?

If you'll remember, Dallas had to play a much more experienced San Francisco team — on the road — to get this far.

Once he found his helmet, he finished with just 13 rushing yards.

And that was against a defense that doesn't hold a candle to this Cowboy crew.

You want to talk defense? Let's talk defense.

Dallas, under defensive coordinating guru Dave Wannstedt, had the top-ranked D this season. And America's Team spends so much time shuffling players in and out of the game that Jim Kelly won't have a chance to wear down the Dallas defense — precisely the reason Buffalo was able to overcome Houston.

Never mind the run and shoot — no defensive unit that Buffalo has overcome has either the speed or agility that the Cowboys have.

Charles Haley anchors that Cowboy defense, and his leadership ability has brought the younger Russell Marylands and Robert Joneses into the limelight.

Then there's that Emmitt Smith guy.

Hell, you want to talk offense? Let's go.

Smith's 1,713-yard rushing gave him his second straight NFL rushing championship. He's a strong runner who has not only the moves Thomas has, but also the strength to run people over.

And then there's Troy Aikman, one of the best young quarterbacks in the game. Dallas' No. 1 draft choice in 1989 finished third in the NFC in passing, throwing for 3,445 yards and 23 touchdowns.

Aikman has the best big-play man to throw to in Michael Irvin, another Cowboy youngster. Irvin averaged almost 18 yards a catch, and his 78 catches and 1,396 receiving yards ranked him fourth in the NFC.

And then there's Jimmy.

You want to talk about coaching? You're on.

What Jimmy Johnson has done in Dallas is nothing more than phenomenal. Just four short years ago, America's Team was 1-15 and the armpit of the NFL.

But Johnson has brought football back to Dallas. His trust in the rookies has produced one of the most confident teams in the NFL, something the Bills desperately lack with their recent failures.

Marv Levy, great as he is, has been out-coached in each of the last two Bowls.

All seriousness tossed aside for a moment, can you whole-heartedly support a team that lost a pair of games — in back-to-back weeks, no less — to the Indianapolis Colts and the New York Jets? Is this the best the AFC has to offer?

Ouch.

That's an NFL equivalent to the K-State basketball team losing a pair of nail-biters to the ever-tough Coppin State and Northeastern Illinois.

In closing, allow me to remind you what Scott Abel wrote in his column dated Oct. 20: "Just ship the Lombardi Trophy to whoever wins the NFC championship, and we'll think about having a real Super Bowl another year."

And now this hypocrite is trying to brainwash you into thinking that the Bills actually have a shot?

Hey — I think somebody needs to beam Scotty aboard.

SCOTT ABEL

Let's get this column off the right way — I hate the Bills.

It hasn't always been this way. But you see, Buffalo broke my heart in the AFC Championship game last year when they beat my beloved patched-together, rubber-band Broncos 10-7.

If it wasn't for three missed field goals, Denver would have had an opportunity to set a new standard for getting their teeth kicked in, courtesy of the Redskins.

But that was then, and this is now, and I am relieved to see the Buffalo Bills represent the AFC conference in Super Bowl XXVII.

After some rocky play they have given me new hope that the AFC banner may yet be held high in Pasadena, Calif., — showering glory on the conference once again and breaking the evil stranglehold of the NFC.

Here, in no particular order, are my reasons why I am optimistic.

■ ARE YOU EXPERIENCED?

The Buffalo Bills are. Unfortunately, they're only experienced in losing Super Bowls, so far. But you've got to start somewhere.

A big chunk of winning this game is learning how to handle the circus hype surrounding it. Dallas is returning after disappearing from the radar in the 1980s. They have two players on the roster that have been in a Super Bowl before.

On the third go-around, expect Buffalo to be calm, cool and collected for Pasadena. Dallas is there for Disneyland.

■ HOT, HOT, HOT.

Through the playoffs, there was no team that played with more intensity, more momentum, than the Bills did. Denied the top seed in the AFC, Buffalo did it all the hard way.

Down 35-3 to Houston in the second half, they logged the biggest gut-check in NFL history by winning in overtime.

A lot of teams would come crashing down after that kind of emotional comeback, but the Bills downing Pittsburgh and Miami in workmanlike style.

■ HUDDLES NOT ALLOWED.

"America's Team" is going to have plenty of trouble against Buffalo's no-huddle offense Sunday. It's hard to compensate when your opponent is snapping the ball every 20 seconds.

Dallas played three decent run-and-shoot teams — similar to Buffalo's no-huddle — last year. The Cowboys were 1-3 against those teams, including a spanking by Detroit in the playoffs. Look for it to drive the Cowboy defense nuts this year, too.

■ THE TALE OF TWO DEFENSES.

The Bills' defense is better and deeper than in its last two appearances, and Bruce Smith is relatively healthy for the first time in two seasons.

The D is playing at its peak in the playoffs. In nine playoff quarters, it has given up only three field goals and one meaningless touchdown.

It also held Pittsburgh's Barry Foster, the AFC's leading rusher, to 77 yards. Can Dallas match that feat against a top running back, like Detroit's Barry Sanders? With 108 yards on 18 attempts — a 6-yard a carry average — maybe not.

How much do you think Thurman "The Thurmanator" Thomas will have? Count on triple figures for that Bill.

■ ALL RIGHT AGAINST THE NFC.

Think that it was a feat for the Cowboys to beat San Francisco in Candlestick? There was another team to do it this season. Da Bills, 34-31. In fact, Buffalo went 4-0 this year against NFC teams, something the AFC champion usually doesn't have on its résumé.

The line is favoring Dallas by seven. Don't believe the hype. Don't bother to read Steve Rock's column. Do not pass Go.

The third time will be the charm for the Bills. But hey, I thought the Broncos had a chance against San Francisco.

Sunday's game brings back bittersweet memories for this

Former Cowboy

STORY BY STEVE ROCK

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Kent Dean, owner of Dean's Liquor and former Dallas Cowboy tight end, is looking forward to a long career as a retailer in Manhattan's Aggieville shopping district. Dean decided to leave America's Team while recouperating from a severely broken arm. His decision to leave was primarily due to the firing of Dallas coach Tom Landry.

Kent Dean will be watching Sunday's Super Bowl with guarded enthusiasm.

Dean, a former Wildcat tight end and the owner of Dean Retail Liquor in Manhattan, got a taste of the National Football League — the Dallas Cowboys, to be exact — after his K-State playing days.

And that sampling has left an awkward taste in his mouth.

"My involvement with the Cowboys was kind of bittersweet," Dean said. "And I think anyone that you talk to after they're done, whether it's two years or eight years or whatever, you'll find that it's just not what you think it is in the pros."

Specifically, with the Cowboys.

Dean, who is from Wichita, graduated from K-State in 1987, after a storied collegiate career at tight end. He led the Wildcats in receptions and receiving yards his senior year and was selected Wildcats co-player of the year.

He led all tight ends in the country in receptions that year and was projected to be drafted between the third and fifth rounds of the NFL draft.

But in Dean's final game as a Wildcat, a 7-7 tie at Iowa State, he hurt his knee and was unable to work out fully with NFL teams. As a result, he wasn't contacted through the first six rounds.

"We just went round by round by round, and I was like, 'When is something going to happen?'

"I was getting worried."

When something did happen, and it was the Green Bay Packers that contacted him in the seventh round, Dean was advised by his agent not to accept any offers — that he could get more money as a free agent.

Dean refused more than 10 phone calls through the 12th round.

Twenty-four of the 27 NFL teams called Dean after the draft, asking for a tryout. Dallas out-bid the Denver Broncos, and Dean was headed to America's Team under the direction of head coach Tom Landry.

"Things had been looking up the whole camp," Dean said. "I did enough good things to impress Landry."

His leg fully healed, Dean had been having a good preseason and putting up good numbers when the unthinkable happened.

"You could hear it," Dean remembers, wincing. "It was like a shot."

Dean had been hit by Dallas' Charlie White after making a reception in practice.

"I tried to put my hand down, but instead of coming straight down on it, it just crumbled."

Dean broke two bones in his right arm, and his season was over. To this day, he has 12 screws, two plates and one rod in that arm.

But Landry held onto to Dean, hoping that he would be able to play some time during the season. The arm didn't heal as quickly as doctors had anticipated, though, and Dean didn't play a snap all year.

And then Landry was released by the Cowboys.

"I was supposed to be at minicamp that afternoon, and nobody knows anything," Dean said. "I'm watching on ESPN here in Manhattan that Landry got fired.

"It was a raw deal."

Out with the old, in with the new.

Experts predict Cowboys to win

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LOS ANGELES — The experts maintained the Dallas Cowboys are a touchdown better than the Buffalo Bills. The Bills said being the underdog isn't a problem.

"All year, when we've been underdogs, the team seemed to respond," center Kent Hull said Monday. "This football team likes challenges, and being an underdog, that's certainly a challenge. And I'm confident we're going to rise to the occasion because of that."

Despite Buffalo's track record of success — except for the last two Super Bowls — in the last five years, the oddsmakers are putting their faith in the Cowboys.

It doesn't matter who the AFC representative would have been, Jim Kelly said. The oddsmakers would have made the NFC champion the favorite because of the AFC's woeful performance in recent Super Bowls.

"I've always liked being the underdog," Kelly said. "If you noticed in the past, we haven't been the underdog too many times. Going into the Super Bowl, I think that no matter who the AFC team was to get in, we were going to be the underdogs."

During that time, the AFC has lost the last eight Super Bowls, including the two most recent losses by Buffalo to the New York Giants and Washington Redskins.

During their run of success, the Bills have done well when not much is expected of them — with one exception.

"Look at last year," Kelly said. "We were underdogs against the Redskins, and we didn't play too well."

Other than that, Kelly said, "It seems like when we have adversity, we do play a little better. I think it shows the character on the team."

Character through adversity has been a theme the Bills have been building throughout their up-and-down season.

They offer their record comeback win over the Houston Oilers in the wild-card playoff game as proof. Down 35-3 early in the third quarter, the Bills won in overtime 41-38.

"After what's happened — no one thought we could come back in the Houston game, and no one thought we could get back to the Super Bowl — I think this team has taken to that underdog atmosphere," wide receiver Don Beebe said. "I think it's human nature to do that, and we've used that to our advantage."

Despite the possibility of being the first team to lose three Super Bowls, the Bills say the minimal expectations of others actually will allow them to play looser.

"I think being the underdog and not being expected to do things we have to do takes some pressure off," strong safety Henry Jones said.

Most of the Bills' dismiss their position on the wrong side of the point spread.

"I don't look at it as a lack of respect because I don't care," linebacker Shane Conlan said.

That's for the gamblers, he said.

"It's something that the fans and the people betting on the game look at," wide receiver Andre Reed said. "As far as a player is concerned, it really doesn't matter."

In 26 Super Bowls, the underdog has won nine times. Two years ago, the 7-point favorite Bills lost to the Giants.

things suddenly changed.

"I bet you couldn't talk to an ex-player who was involved with both regimes who says he was happy with the way Johnson treated the personnel in Dallas," he said. "It was just the way he treated a lot of the people down there."

Between Johnson and owner Jerry Jones, the Cowboy personnel was changed drastically, from the front office to the field.

"They used everything they could from people. Then they fired them. That was the whole attitude — that they were just screwing people around, and that they're going to get rid of me, too.

"And that's what happened."

Dean was eventually released by the Cowboys, and his football career was over. His final NFL stats? Zero catches for zero yards in two seasons with the Cowboys.

Dean was contacted by some teams — including the Pittsburgh Steelers and, once again, the Packers — but chose to get out of football.

The liquor store satisfies Dean's thirst for competition, Dean said.

And though his football career didn't work out according to plan, he said that he doesn't regret any of it.

"It was great for me," he said. "I was just really fortunate that things worked out as they did for me.

"Basically, the nice things that I have — I bought a house this last fall, I have a boat, a really nice stereo system — you can just point to athletics, to football, to the Cowboys."

All the same, he doesn't regret his ultimate decision.

"I'm going to be here for a while," he said. "I have a girlfriend here now, and I'm happy. And I don't miss football.

"I plan on staying in Manhattan. I wouldn't trade it for anything."

Fite Nite KO'd by insurance struggles

"Last year we were among the top-five philanthropies in the four-state area."
SCOTT PHILLIPS
SIG EP PRESIDENT

Annual event is largest charitable fundraiser at K-State

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

The largest charitable fund-raising event on campus will not take place this year.

Sigma Phi Epsilon has sponsored Sig Ep Fite Nite for the past 13 years.

The philanthropic event began in an Aggieville bar. It became more popular every year until it grew to the point that it had to be moved.

It was then moved to Weber Arena and Golden Gloves boxing from Topeka became involved.

"This made it more of a professional event," Scott Phillips, junior in pre-professional secondary education and president of the Sig Ep house, said.

Last year, Fite Night was moved to Ahearn Field House for the first time. More than 80 boxers competed, and more than $30,000 were raised for the American Heart Association.

"Last year we were among the top-five philanthropies in the four-state area," Phillips said.

Not only does Sig Ep sponsor Fite Nite, but other organizations across the nation put on similar events.

"All of these organizations are struggling to find an insurance company that will insure them," Phillips said.

Due to the amount of injuries over the years, the fear of a lawsuit is too great, he said. This has lead to the termination of the event.

Sig Ep's national insurance carrier insisted upon a non-debatable recommendation to cancel Fite Nite.

"In order to remain with our national insurance, we had no choice," Phillips said.

The K-State chapter of Sigma Phi Epsilon was recognized by its national fraternity for an outstanding record of success and having no lawsuits or incidents occurring, he said.

"It's too bad they can't have it any more," said Steve Lebeda, junior in construction science and past participant in Fite Nite. "It was the biggest fundraiser on campus and a lot of fun for both the boxers and the crowd."

"The thought of having Fite Nite under the sponsorship of a different organization had come up, but we couldn't find a sponsor who would take the risk," Phillips said.

"We are now debating over a few ideas for another philanthropy in the future," he said. "We're taking this semester off to hopefully plan something that will be comparable."

Speech kicks off Black History Month

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

K-State will recognize the contributions of black Americans this month.

Black History Month's theme is African American Scholars, Leaders, Activists and Writers. It starts today and is a whole month scheduled with speakers, presentations and special activities.

"The importance is coming together and sending a message to acknowledge and appreciate the contributions of each other," Mordeen Taylor-Archer, assistant provost of multicultural affairs, said.

These activities are to remind students and the community of the achievements and contributions by black Americans.

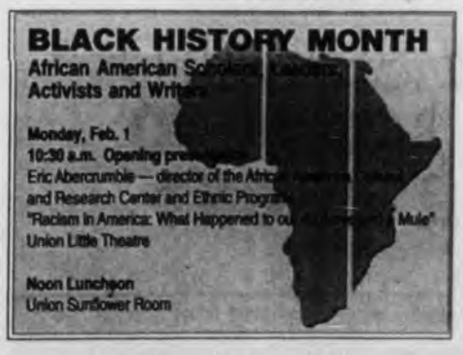
"We're paying tribute to a lot of folks," Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said.

Franklin said this month has great significance because there were a lot of people that died and never got credit for their contributions.

"There are more contributions than what are told in history books. The bicycle frame, potato chip, ice cream, pencil sharpener, elevator, fire extinguisher and a lot of others were created without America giving black people credit," Franklin said.

"The opening ceremony on Feb. 1, will set the tone for the whole month," Taylor-Archer said.

The opening presentation will begin with Eric Abercrumbie, Director of the African American Cultural and Research Center and Ethnic Programs at the University of Cincinnati, giving a speech entitled, 'Racism in America: What Happened to our 40 Acres and a Mule.'"



Syvette Davis, freshman in English and chairperson of the black history committee, said when we come together and learn about black history, it helps us grasp a better understanding of ourselves.

"It's important to become involved and to understand what African Americans have done," she said.

Davis also said she feels the month will help K-State and society come together.

Davis said the highlights of the month will be focused on the numerous speakers.

K-State not commemorating ASK awareness Week

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

K-State's student government has opted not to commemorate Associated Students of Kansas Awareness Week, which begins today.

The student organization, made up of six Kansas universities, has found itself increasingly under scrutiny.

Headquartered in Topeka, ASK lobbies the Kansas Legislature for action favorable to its member schools, both as a whole and individually. Funding for the organization comes through student fees.

No special events are planned to let K-State students know that ASK Awareness Week is this week.

Michael Henry, freshman in pre-law and ASK campus director, said the simple reason is money.

"Funds are short right now," Henry said. "We plan to use the funds we have for a great Lobby Day instead of a great Awareness Week."

ASK Lobby Day is scheduled for Monday, Feb. 8. K-State Lobby Day will take place Wednesday, Feb. 17.

Henry said the basic idea behind ASK is that it unites the Kansas Board of Regents schools' basic goals and ideas for change.

"Even though you're KU and we're K-State, we can together accomplish a similar goal. It doesn't matter what school you go to."

Besides K-State, the other members are the University of Kansas, Pittsburg State University, Emporia State University, Fort Hays State University and Washburn University.

Wichita State University withdrew from the organization last year, citing concerns over ASK's effectiveness and cost.

K-State representatives also criticized ASK's effectiveness and high cost, and reduced funding to the organization last year.

K-State students now pay a line-item fee of 51.34 cents each semester for ASK membership dues. That represents an almost 25-cent-per-student reduction, $8,000 less revenue per year than the fee raised before it was cut.

However, even with the reductions, many students still think ASK's cost is too high for what the lobby group accomplishes.

"A lot of students think ASK isn't doing anything," said Jim Persinger, senior in marketing and chief of staff to K-State Student Body President Jackie McClaskey .

"When the state was rolling in money, ASK was very influential in getting some of those state funds to come our way." Persinger said, "ASK can't take full responsibility for the Margin of Excellence but certainly is one of the efforts that brought money to campus."

Lately however, Persinger said he believes ASK has been at a stalemate because the state has been financially strapped. He said member institutions are competing for the same money.

Both Persinger and Henry said this has compelled K-State to take it upon its own initiative in several cases.

"We have students who are very interested about working on things that are very specific to K-State, be it our library or support of higher

Unusual courses offer flexibility

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE
Collegian

The Division of Continuing Education is responding to the academic needs of students by offering courses that can be added as late as Feb. 12. These courses can be added late in the semester and used for scholarship or financial aid reasons.

"Continuing education has the responsibility to offer unusual courses, at unusual times, in unusual places and unusual ways," Peg Wherry, program coordinator in Academic Outreach, said.

She said students can enroll in everything from individual guitar lessons to advanced steel design.

"Education courses are graduate level, while undergraduate courses are in food sciences and social sciences with credits ranging from one to three," she said.

Wherry said a conscious effort is being made to diversify the courses to meet the particular requirements of the curricula and provide courses that are multicultural in nature.

"There is no need for cramming. It is not as intensive as intersession," she said. "Some courses are self paced, but there are deadlines, too."

Melinda Sinn, public information coordinator, said the cost for the courses is minimal and full-time K-State students are allowed a fee waiver.

"These courses have been available for some time now, but students were not always aware of them," Sinn said.

For students living outside of Manhattan, the courses can be viewed on cable television and public television. Or, videos can be rented at the Distance Learning Program at the Division of Continuing Education.

Courses offered vary from one semester to another, depending on the availability of faculty and programs on the education channels, Wherry said.

"Some programs seen on Mind Extension television are produced right here at K-State," Wherry said.

She said James Higgins, professor of statistics, and Stanley Elsea, associate professor of management, are two K-State professors who produce such programs.

This semester a variety of courses will be offered in 12 Kansas communities. Students from across Kansas can remain in their communities while taking these courses.

Information about the courses is available from all deans' offices and academic advisers, and at the Academic Outreach and registration offices at the Division of Continuing Education, Wherry said.

Brides to be attend show

MICHELLE HAUPT

Faces full of anticipation as well as reluctance Sunday afternoon filled the crowded Houston Street Ballroom.

Prospective brides at the 1993 Manhattan Bridal Show, Inc. pored over handouts in search of wedding tips to make the upcoming day perfect.

With standing room only, more than 600 people were present to see the bridal fashion show at 2 p.m. Models in a large array of wedding gowns, bridesmaid dresses and tuxedos showed the crowd the latest fashions in wedding attire. Clothes for the honeymoon and post-wedding, going-away outfits for this season also were shown.

Displays of jewelry, flowers, cakes, china and clothes were available from area merchants. Store representatives were there to give brides helpful hints.

Betty Campbell, owner of Campbell's China & Gifts in Manhattan, said the people who put on the show try to display things as seen in bridal magazines. She said the show had been going on since 1971, but there were some differences this year.

"There aren't as many grooms this year, but a lot more mothers," Campbell said.

Jan Miller, owner of Steve's Floral in Manhattan, said she was pleased with the crowd.

"It seems to consistently grow each year," Miller said.

Some brides in attendance had wedding plans well under control while others were just beginning.

Shawna Goodwin, junior in early childhood education, is planning an August wedding and said this is the fourth bridal show she has been to.

"I don't have anything definitely planned," Goodwin said. "I just came to get some ideas."

Ashley Pontius, sophomore in social work, is one of Goodwin's bridesmaids. Pontius said Goodwin was actually quite prepared.

"She's filing all names of people she's inviting so she'll have them when she's ready to write thank-you notes," Pontius said. "She started with a one-inch binder and now has a two-inch one."

Angie Doyen, Manhattan resident, is planning an April wedding and came to the show to get more ideas about the reception and flowers. She said until all plans are made, nothing is set in stone.

"I'm just nervous about getting everything done," Doyen said.

Get to know your cabinet

WE SUGGEST

The new secretary of agriculture needs to remember importance of America's rural areas.

With all the uproar that comes with the changing of the presidential guard, most people are more preoccupied with the new big chief than they are with his cabinet.

They shouldn't be. The people that a president chooses to surround himself with are his advisers on almost any critical issue imaginable, and their power and influence is much greater than most citizens realize.

One man who will have a direct effect on the agricultural region that surrounds us is the new secretary of agriculture, Mike Espy. His plans for the future will set the crucial course for the many small farms that exist in Kansas.

But what plans are those?

According to an article in the Jan. 31 Kansas City Star, Espy has expressed the desire to "clean shop in Washington" before carrying out the former agriculture secretary's plan of disabling 1,200 USDA field offices around rural America.

He said he knows the value of international trade and the seriousness of the critical decision on extending grain credits to the former Soviet Union after they defaulted on $200 million in U.S. loans.

The widening gap between environmentalists and farmers is an area where Espy said he hopes he can be a "bridge builder."

From what he has said, it seems that Mike Espy has a true concern for this country's rural areas, a topic that many of us know firsthand. "I think rural America has been left out of the plan to rebuild America," he told the Star.

We think he's right.

Espy's concern for the often overlooked countrysides of America, far from the glitter of the big cities, is enough to spark a hope that perhaps places like the family farm will not become pure nostalgia.

Military isn't giant Boy's Club

I'm not gay, and I'm not in the military, and for that matter, I don't particularly pay very much in federal taxes. So, maybe it's none of my business.

Then again, I am registered with Selective Service. So, I could end up in the military in a time of war. Maybe I should care.

At any rate, being a moral person means having an opinion on these sorts of things, and my job is to tell you what that opinion is and the reasons behind it.

JOHN HAWKS

Personally, I don't care whether homosexuals choose their sexual orientations or not. Also, I don't care if fundamentalist Christians choose to hate homosexuals or not. I care primarily about two things in this matter: money and myself.

My concern for myself is a fairly small part of my opinion, and amounts to this: I find it morally repugnant that I could be pressed into service in a time of war, in the place of someone who is exempted because of his or her lifestyle.

This may not be the most patriotic feeling, but when it comes to dying for my country, I would like to think that my chances are the same as everyone else's.

Of course, the military itself is willing to give in to me on this point. As Newsweek reported last week, the military tends to overlook the sexual orientation of its personnel during armed conflicts. A look at dismissals for homosexuality found that military officials knowingly overlooked reports of homosexuals in the ranks, and attempts to avoid service through claiming a homosexual lifestyle were ignored. So, during wartime, homosexuals serve in the military anyway.

On to money. Millions of dollars are spent each year on attempting to root homosexuals out of the ranks of the military. There is no excuse for millions of dollars of spending for this purpose, in these days of budget deficits and shortages.

To justify this spending, the military claims that homosexuals have a devastating affect on morale. Officers claim that heterosexual soldiers or sailors will feel uncomfortable fighting next to a homosexual. Whether it is right or not, they assert, the military will perform better without homosexuals spreading sexual tension throughout the ranks.

I don't believe this logic for a moment. No doubt it is true that many soldiers hate homosexuals and would spit on them before serving with them, but I suspect it is also true that many of these men already have served with them without knowing it. The problem here is only in the mind of the soldier.

That problem may be very real, but I don't think that banning homosexuals from the military is the answer any more than banning blacks was the answer to racial bigotry in the military before integration.

Jokes aside about the "Gay Brigade," maybe we could commission entirely homosexual platoons. That would certainly allow the "battlefield effectiveness" of the troops to remain high.

But I don't think that is necessary. We don't, after all, pay for the military so that it can be a giant boys' club where men can slap each other's backs and talk about their conquests. We pay for these professionals to defend us in the most effective way. It is just as inappropriate for heterosexuals to brag about their behavior and hate anyone who does differently as it is for homosexuals to do the same.

I believe that the problem lies not with the homosexuals but with those who hate them. Even if their behavior is religiously immoral, I can safely say, in quoting Samuel Purchas, that "they are enemies not of you or I, but of God."

With the downsizing of the military due to changing conditions around the world, I think we can improve our defensive forces not by continuing to ban homosexuals from the ranks, but by eliminating all those who behave in an unprofessional manner.

After all, we pay the bills. Do we want to pay for a military that finds manhood more important than doing a good job? I think not.

I am reminded of the marine commercial that claims that the marines help a man "find the meaning of the word honor." I hope they know what honor truly is.

▶ GAYS IN MILITARY

Going from one side of the issue ...

Editor,

The Bible is clear that homosexuality is wrong. Since those advocating homosexuality in the military don't believe in such principles, here are some secular arguments against it.

First, operation of the military depends on the unity of the troops, which depends on them trusting each other. This is possible only when soldiers are comfortable and at ease with each other. When you know the soldier sleeping next to you may be fantasizing about you, all of the aforementioned is obliterated.

Second, normal soldiers would demand separate facilities from homosexuals.

Third, the unnerving prospect of your fellow soldier lusting after you would be distracting, and lack of concentration toward your duties would ensue.

Lastly, homosexuals, a frighteningly high-risk group for AIDS, would inevitably suck military health care dry.

The culmination of these certainties is increased military spending and ineffectiveness of the armed forces. There are many more reasons for banning homosexuals from the service, and when those are understood, it becomes clear that admission of homosexuals into the U.S. military is nothing short of sabotage.

... all the way to the other side of the issue

Editor,

It seems all we hear about lately is the controversy of letting homosexuals in the military. Sen. Dan Coats of Indiana even said gays in the military would "destroy the discipline and esprit de corps of a military unit."

What I don't understand is why anyone cares.

Homosexuals have served this country with as much honor and valor as any "straight" soldiers. What one does in the bedroom does not affect the ability to aim a gun, run tactical maneuvers or destroy the enemy.

In history, I learned of the huge protests against the Vietnam War. Thousands of young men burned draft cards, fled to Canada or pulled special favors to get out of going to war.

If America went to war today — and I mean a real war, not a "military action" in some tiny country no one's heard of, but a full-scale war in which the draft was re-instated — would these banned homosexuals be able to say, "Gee, sorry, Uncle Sam. I can't go because I'm gay?"

Would all those die-hard homophobes protesting gays in the military say, "Oh, that's okay. We'll go die for our country. You can stay home where it's safe and sell war bonds?"

I don't think so.

I think that people's irrational hatred of homosexuals has spilled over onto a totally unrelated issue.

If people want to go through torturous basic training, rigorous discipline, subservient behavior to superiors, and possibly die for doing all this — who is to say they cannot? Certainly not red-blooded Americans who appreciate the God-given right to die for this country.

If being gay becomes a way to get out of going to war, come draft-time, I'll bet there will be many able-bodied young men running to the BaGaLs office instead of Canada.

Display sickens rather than informs students

Editor,

Friday, in the Union, I was deeply saddened and disgusted. I saw a display for the Right To Life group, which showed a dead fetus and other graphic pictures of abortion.

I am not arguing for pro-life or pro-choice, but the way in which this group has chosen to get the point across. Whether or not you are pro-life does not give you the justification to exploit this dead fetus. I think the manner in which this display protests abortion legalization is distasteful and disrespectful of the fetus.

If this is really a "right to life" display then why is it using this dead baby to make its point? Exploiting this fetus and others like it is just as sick as you claim the people getting abortions are.

This type of protest is not the answer. This is a sad attempt to persuade people to see the pro-life perspective.

Athletes get better deal than students do

Editor,

I consider myself to be a hard-working student with good potential. I graduated at the top of my class in high school, I published an original mathematics formula, I won an award from USA Today that recognized me as one of our nation's top 20 students, I studied last year in Germany, and I am currently one of K-State's nominees for a Goldwater research grant.

Now that you know about me, you might want to know how much of a scholarship I have from K-State. The answer is: from the KSU Foundation, the mathematics department and the College of Engineering, I barely have enough to cover my in-state tuition and books.

Housing and food I pay for myself by working summers, a time athletes do not have to work. But they don't need to work. I can't make $3,000 in a summer to offset the expenses.

In this article, one line read, "Full scholarships cover the cost of attendance, which includes room, board, books, tuition, fee and transportation." The next line read, "Athletes on full scholarship are not permitted to work during the school year to help offset costs."

My question is: what costs are left?

Keith Loseke
Senior/Electrical engineering and mathematics

Students get better deal than athletes do

Editor,

Most students don't understand the story of the student-athlete. We are just normal people with special physical talents. Because of these talents, we get to represent K-State before thousands of people each year. But this isn't the most envious of positions.

We must take 14-16 hours per semester so that we can make sure we remain eligible. We also must put in 30-40 hours of practice per week. K-State recommends that if a person works 30-40 hours per week, he or she should take about 8 hours of classes, half as many as we take. Competition also takes anywhere from a half-day to two days away from school. Obviously, from this schedule, it is impossible to be an athlete and have a job.

During the summer we can work, but to stay competitive we must train also. This cuts into the only time of the year when we can earn some money.

I earn about $2,000 a summer. This must pay for all my expenses for one year including insurance, gas, school expenses, entertainment, food, clothes and taxes.

Bob Krause said that our scholarships include transportation cost, but the only transportation that is paid for us is a bus to a competition.

I'm not saying that there should or shouldn't be an allowance for student athletes. I'm just trying to explain to you what we, as athletes, have to go through to put a team on the field so you can come and watch, and then tear the goal-posts down or throw coins at the other team.

News report missing important facts

Editor,

I think it was very wrong for you to refer to Scott Sanders death as just a "Junction City man stabbed to death," as if he didn't deserve the title of being "a K-State student," just because he's from a criticized town.

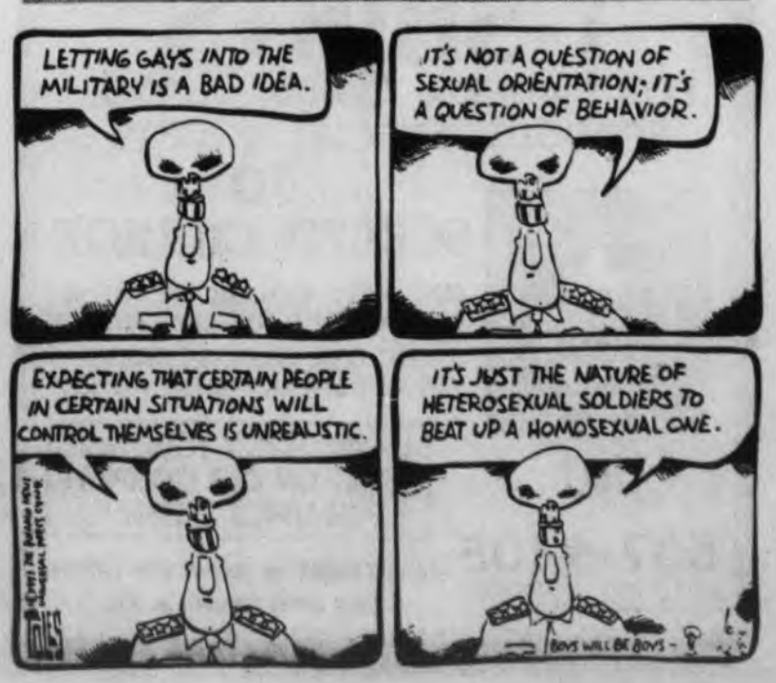
Then, of course, if he had been a student from any other town, you would have given him the title he deserved and a place in the newspaper in his honor.

Personally, I never met or heard of Scott, but I am very sorry for what happened to him. It irritates me that he wasn't given the proper courtesy in the announcement of his death as "a K-State student," as if it were shameful to have students from Junction City at the University.

Moreover, I can't believe that you had to wait for complaints from Scott's friends to finally print a small biography in his honor — or was it just that you ran out of advertisements and needed to fill out that empty space?

Ivonne Zaldumbide
Sophomore/Advertising

Editor's note:



A week ago, the Collegian printed an Associated Press news brief about a Junction City man being stabbed to death near Council Grove. At the time, we were unaware that Scott Sanders was a K-State student.

The Collegian tries to cover as much news about students as possible. For this reason, we regretted not having a more complete story in the Jan. 25 Collegian.

Readers can help by letting us know when news affecting students happens. A simple telephone call to 532-6556 or a note brought to Kedzie 116 can help us to inform others.

To the family and friends of Scott Sanders, we apologize for not having a more complete story. We also want to thank all the friends who let us know and took the time to talk with reporters.

Truck Stop Love's third album released

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

Early in January, Manhattan's own Truck Stop Love released its third self-titled album.

The band's four members hope this recording will allow them to bring their music to more people.

They recorded their first six-song cassette at Red House Records in Lawrence, said guitarist Matt Mozier.

The tracks were laid down in October 1992 in about 15 hours, even though it was the first time most of the band had been in a studio.

The first side of the album consists of the band's three newest songs — "River Mountain Love," "Townie" and "Hand."

The second side, featuring "The Way," "Amphetamine" and "Fried," is the band's "rock 'n' roll trilogy in B minor," Mozier said.

The album's production was overseen by Lawrence's E.J. Rose, who has worked with Ministry and the Manhattan band Roach Factory, said drummer Eric Melin.

This is quite a step up from the first Truck Stop Love cassette, which was recorded in the back room of the old Vital Vinyl store, Melin said.

The second album, which was never marketed, was recorded in the living room of a Manhattan orthodontist, said bassist Brad Huhmann.

After a month off, the band is ready to "shift into high gear," Mozier said.

"We're going to try to play a lot more regionally — all over the Midwest," he said.

"We're also going to cut back on our drinking, lose a little weight and get fit. Seriously, though, we are looking for a way out of this town. There's not a real big market here,"

Guitarist Rich Yarges agrees with this statement.

"One gig every two months, and you're basically screwed, at least financially," he said.

The main problem is that some people don't give Manhattan bands a chance, Melin said.

"They might be surprised that somebody from this town can really play their instruments," he said.

However, the band appreciates the local support that it gets and is pleased with the sound of the new album.

"It's really full, and it's got a lot of styles," Melin said.

Melin also said he isn't bothered by the fact that grunge purists may not enjoy some of the new styles.

"We don't consider ourselves an alternative band, just a rock 'n' roll band. But once you get branded as alternative, you can never live it down," he said.

Gay, lesbian group denied funds at Nebraska

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. — A member of a gay and lesbian group at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln said the group would appeal a student committee decision to abolish its funds for the 1993-94 school year.

"It's blatant homophobia," said Gwen Fischer, a spokeswoman for the Committee Offering Lesbian and Gay Events.

"We will appeal it," she said. "We will make a ruckus. We will make a fuss."

The Committee for Fees Allocation, an arm of UNL student government, eliminated the funds Thursday for the 1993-94 school year.

Student fees allocated for the Nebraska Model United Nations also were eliminated because of a lack of student participation, but the program receives outside funds. The committee also decided to maintain the same level of funds for two groups that had requested more money.

Fischer alleges the funds were cut because COLAGE represents gay and lesbian students and because the group had not spent the $1,900 allocated to it this year.

UNL Student President Andrew Sigerson said the committee decided to eliminate COLAGE funds because the group hadn't spent the money it received this year.

Strong 2nd half propels Wildcats

Ron Lucas, right, and Anthony Beane, middle, try to stop Temple's Derrick Battle Saturday night. Battle scored 10 points in the Wildcats' 86-63 victory.
SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

SCOTT ABEL

The Wildcats left no doubt Saturday afternoon what their goals are this basketball season.

In front of 9,136 fans at Bramlage Coliseum, K-State used a strong second-half surge to thrash the Temple Owls — a team that has made the NCAA tournament eight of the last nine years — 86-63.

The Cats, now 13-3, have suffered several second-half letdowns this season but blistered Temple under 62-percent shooting in the final half. K-State fashioned the 23-point rout by outscoring the Owls 53-25 after halftime.

"This was the best second half we've had all year long," Cat guard Anthony Beane said.

"It lets us know if we can put two halves together, we can really be great. I just want to show everybody that this year's team is a lot better than last year's."

But Saturday the Cats first had to survive a rocky start against Temple. K-State trailed the Owls by as many as 10 points in the first half as Temple guard Rick Brunson scored 18 points on six of nine shooting from the field.

"They were playing harder than us," head coach Dana Altman said.

"I thought, fundamentally, we were sound, but they were getting all the loose balls and the offensive rebounds. It was very disappointing."

K-State forward Vincent Jackson kept the Cats within striking distance in the first half by hitting seven of eight from the field for 17 first-half points.

Jackson went on to finish the game with a career-high 29 points and held Aaron McKie, Temple's leading scorer, to a career-low 2 points

McKie is the Owls' leading scorer, averaging more than 20 points a game.

"Vince did a good job both halves of taking it to them and knocking down 3-pointers," Cat guard Askia Jones said. "He was penetrating and dishing it out and got some people some good shots."

The Cats closed the gap to 5 points at halftime when Jones hit a 3-pointer with less than a minute before intermission.

Jones ignited the K-State offense at the start of the second half by hitting three 3-pointers in the span of two minutes. The Cats gained the lead for the first time, 44-42, and never trailed again.

"We're a very young ballclub in many instances," Temple coach John Chaney said. "Our defensive lapses hurt us. When Askia hit those 3-point shots, that broke our backs."

Jones finished with 19 points, 12 of which came in the second half.

K-State also connected on 88 percent of its free throws by hitting 22 of 25 attempts — the team's best game percentage in two years. The Cats had been averaging 63 percent this season, seventh in the conference.

"Eighty-eight percent is outstanding in anybody's book," Altman said. "For us, that's next to a miracle."

Chaney said that while K-State is a good team, guard Anthony Beane was the most impressive player of the day.

"This team has some good players on it," Chaney said. "But Beane is the key."

Beane had 15 points and connected on four of his five treys. He also dished out three assists.

"The other youngsters are very, very shaky when he's not on the floor," Chaney said. "He sort of controls everything for them. All they've got to do is sit at the table and wait for him to make the delivery.

"He gives them great leadership and great ball-control," he said. "There is none without him on the floor. I'd like to have him."

Conference woes continue for Lady Cats

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

An 18-game Big Eight losing streak.

That's what the Lady Cats were left with after losing 58-51 to the Kansas Lady Jayhawks Sunday at Bramlage Coliseum.

The loss moved K-State's record to 8-10 for the season and 0-7 in the conference.

The two reasons K-State lost were Lady Cat turnovers and Kansas' Shannon Kite.

Kite had a season-high six 3-pointers in eight attempts to break the Lady Cats' zone.

"I'd say Kite was the difference in the game," Coach Susan Yow said. "She's a tremendous shooter. We had to go zone to protect our inside."

It was Kite's last shot from behind the arc that deflated K-State.

Senior Kelly Moylan had just hit a 3-pointer to cut the game to 3 points with 1:36 left in the game.

"I thought maybe that was the key to our turnaround," Moylan said of her only 3-pointer of the day. "But Kite came back."

Kite went to the right side of the court and made the shot along the baseline to put the Lady Jayhawks back up by six points with 1:20 left in the game.

"It took the air out of our balloon," Yow said.

K-State had 27 turnovers, including 19 in the first half.

"It's been our Achilles' heel," Yow said. "Turnovers seem to haunt us."

Yow said that her team was playing the way the Lady Jayhawks wanted them to.

"We were playing into KU's ballgame," she said. "We sped it up. At one time, we had 16 possessions and never scored."

And when K-State didn't score, Kansas scored 12 consecutive points to give the Lady Jayhawks a 30-20 halftime lead.

Lady Cat Shanele Stires came alive in the second half, scoring 15 of her game-high 21 points and grabbing 10 of her 16 rebounds to help K-State close the gap.

Stires scored on five of K-State's eight possessions, including a 3-pointer, to give the Lady Cats its only lead in the half.

"Shanele had an outstanding game," Yow said. "She was awesome. When someone has 16 rebounds, you know that person is working."

Stires entered the game as the leading rebounder in conference play.

"There are days where things fall in place," Stires said. "I sealed my man and went to the ball."

CONFERENCE UPDATE — BIG 8 CONFERENCE

▶KANSAS

Record: 17-2
Big Eight: 4-0
Last week: lost to Long Beach State 64-49, beat Rollins College 103-56.
Coming up: is host Monday to Missouri and plays Sunday at Nebraska.
Notes: KU leads the nation in field-goal percentage, connecting on 55.6 percent of their shots. Richard Scott's 68 percent leads the Big Eight in the same category. Kansas is averaging 22 points more than its opposition — 89-67.

▶MISSOURI

Record: 13-5
Big Eight: 3-1
Last week: beat Notre Dame 73-57 and lost to Nebraska 87-88 in OT.
Coming up: plays Monday at Kansas and is host Wednesday to Cal State-Northridge.
Notes: Missouri made just 19 of its 38 free throws in the overtime loss to Nebraska, dropping the Tigers' free-throw percentage to 60 percent for the year — last in the Big Eight. Only one team, UNLV, has shot 50 percent from the field against Missouri.

▶OKLAHOMA

Record: 14-5
Big Eight: 2-2
Last week: beat Florida A&M 146-65 and beat Colorado 94-70.
Coming up: plays Wednesday at K-State and Saturday at Oklahoma State.
Notes: Terry Evans recorded the fifth triple-double in Big Eight history in the Sooners win over Florida A&M. He recorded 17 points, 15 assists and 12 steals — all in just 23 minutes of play. The Sooners lead the Big Eight with an average of 97 points a game.

▶OKLAHOMA ST.

Record: 11-4
Big Eight: 2-2
Last week: beat Iowa State 94-77.
Coming up: plays Wednesday at Colorado and is host Saturday to Oklahoma.
Notes: The Cowboys are scoring an average of just 77 points a game — ahead of only K-State's 76. On the flipside, Oklahoma State's defense is second in the Big Eight, giving up just 66.9 points a game. The No. 1 defense? K-State's 65.6 per-game average.

▶NEBRASKA

Record: 14-6
Big Eight: 2-3
Last week: beat Colorado 82-67 and beat Missouri 88-87 in OT.
Coming up: plays Wednesday at Iowa State and is host Sunday to Kansas.
Notes: Husker Erick Strickland scored 28 points in the win over Missouri, breaking the Nebraska record for freshmen. The previous record of 27 was shared by Jerry Fort and Dave Hoppen — both against K-State.

▶IOWA STATE

Record: 12-6
Big Eight: 2-3
Last week: beat Drake 119-81 and lost to Oklahoma State 94-77.
Coming up: is host Wednesday to Nebraska and Saturday to Colorado.
Notes: Iowa State's Julius Michalik and Ron Bayless are Nos. 1 and 2 in the Big Eight in free-throw percentage, and the Cyclones are shooting 75 percent from the line, also tops in the conference. The Cyclones are last in the Big Eight in rebounding, being out-boarded by an average of more than 10 rebounds every game.

▶COLORADO

Record: 8-9
Big Eight: 0-5
Last week: lost to Nebraska 82-67 and lost to Oklahoma 94-70.
Coming up: is host Wednesday to Oklahoma State and plays Saturday at Iowa State.
Notes: The Buffaloes leading scorer — Donnie Boyce, who also leads the Big Eight with 19.4 points a game — has scored 746 points in 45 collegiate points. That is 87 points above former Jayhawk Danny Manning's pace.

Bills come up just a tad short, fall 52-17

Dallas forces 9 turnovers as Buffalo drops 3rd straight

ASSOCIATED PRESS

PASADENA, Calif. — It was quicker than anyone could imagine.

Three seasons ago, the Dallas Cowboys were the worst team in NFL history. Now, they're Super Bowl champions, and they did it with four of the quickest touchdowns ever.

That left the Buffalo Bills as the first team to lose three straight Super Bowls and the NFC's supremacy intact — nine straight NFL titles, seven in overwhelming fashion, this time 52-17.

With MVP Troy Aikman throwing four touchdowns, and Charles Haley and Ken Norton leading a defense that forced a record nine turnovers, the Cowboys scored two touchdowns 15 seconds apart in the first period of Sunday's Super Bowl and two more 18 seconds apart in the second.

"Our defense is somebody now," Norton said of a unit that had no pro Bowlers to six for Dallas' offense. "Everybody knows who we are."

Along with Aikman, the defense was the factor that made Buffalo the first team to lose three straight Super Bowls after becoming just the second team to make it three straight times.

"You always wonder why, why us?" said Buffalo quarterback Jim Kelly, who was knocked out of the game with 6:52 in the first half with a sprained right knee.

"We turned the ball over nine times, and you can't beat a college team doing that."

Kelly didn't help matters much for the Bills, throwing a pair of intercepions before he was injured.

He also fumbled once after being hit by the Cowboys' Charles Haley. The ensuing touchdown gave Dallas a 14-7 lead.

Two of Aikman's TD passes went to Michael Irvin and one each to Jay Novacek and Alvin Harper as the NFC East won the Super Bowl for the third straight year, a record. The three winners were different — Dallas, Washington and the New York Giants — but the victim each time was the Bills.

"Early on, the whole team was a little uptight," said Aikman, who was 22 of 30 for 273 yards. "I really had to talk myself into staying relaxed out there. This is the greatest feeling that I've ever had in my life, and I wish every player could feel it."

There was another first — Jimmy Johnson became the first coach to win both a national college title and a Super Bowl. The NFL title came just three years after he began his pro coaching career with a 1-15 record.

It was the Cowboys' third Super Bowl victory, but their first in 15 years. And Johnson got his just reward — a dousing by his players at the 2-minute warning that left his hairsprayed coiffure uncharacteristically mussed.

"I played for a national championship team, I coached a national championship team, and I coached a Super Bowl team," Johnson said. "There's a common thread in all three — quality people who are committed to do their best."

Cats claim Triangular for 4th time

CARY CONOVER/Collegian

Ed Broxterman, freshman, knocks down a hurdle while running in the 55-meter hurdle preliminaries Saturday afternoon.

COLLEGIAN STAFF

K-State won the KSU/MU/KU Triangular for the fourth year in a row over the weekend at Ahearn Field House.

K-State scored 137 points, Missouri 97 and Kansas 94.

"I think the kids competed well," K-State interim track coach Cliff Rovelto said. "We didn't have too many letdowns."

K-State swept the men's 55-meter dash. Thomas Randolph won with a time of 6.30, and J.J. Smith took second with a time of 6.44.

Chris Pryor placed first in the 400-meter dash with a time of 49.01.

K-State also took the high jump. Percell Gaskins and Itai Margalit each set a new meet record and tied for first with a jump of 7 feet 3 inches. Ed Broxterman took third with a jump of 7-1.

Travis Livingston won the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.68. Brian McAlpin took first in the 600-yard run with a time of 1:13.22, and Anthony William finished second at 1:13.79.

Rovelto said he is appreciative of football coach Bill Snyder's cooperation. Several football players, including Williams, Gasins and Thomas Randolph, run track.

"I accept that their main focus has to be football, but if we don't have them, it's hard to cover it all," Rovelto said. "Because of Bill Snyder, we can recruit in other areas."

Ryan Clive-Smith won the 3,000 meters with a time of 8:26.75, finishing ahead of Wildcat teammate Mike Becker.

Randy Helling set a new meet record in the 800-meters at 1:52.35. Francis O'Neill set a new K-State, meet and Ahearn Field House record in the 1,000-meters with a time of 2:24.53.

In its first run, K-State placed first in the 4 x 800-meter relay with a time of 7:44.28.

But Helling said the team needs to shed some seconds off the relay so it will be qualifiable for the next meet.

"This is the first time we've run it this year," he said. "Last year we dropped the baton at the last chance qualifier. So, we are hungry for it."

In the women's long jump, DeeDee Tribue placed first as she leaped 19-4 3/4, and Gwen Wentland placed second at 19-4. Wentland also set a new meet record in the high jump at 6-0 1/2.

Jennifer Hillier won the 3,000 meters with a time of 9:57.99.

"Jennifer is running really well this year," Rovelto said.

Paulette Staats won the 1,000 meters with a time of 2:54.49, and Melissa Swartz placed third at 2:58.47.

K-State's next meet will be next weekend at Ahearn Field House. The Wildcats play host to both the KSU Men's Septathlon and the KSU Women's Pentathlon.

Netters cruise in Creighton match

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

The K-State women's tennis team opened the 1993 spring schedule on an high note, handing the Creighton Bluejays a 7-2 loss in dual play at the Cottonwood Racquet Club.

"The new girls all showed potential to play well," head coach Steve Bietau said. "They also showed a lot of toughness today."

The Wildcats had a clean sweep in the doubles matches. In the No. 1 seed, Susana Labrador and Amelia Van Der Merve won in straight sets, 6-4, 6-4.

Suzanne Sim and Lindy Neethling won the second-seeded doubles, 6-2, 6-4.

In the No. 3 seed, Maria Uson and Martine Shrubsole were shut out in the first set, 6-0, but battled back to take the last two sets, 6-3, 6-3.

"Maria was nervous about the match," Bietau said. "But to her credit, she relaxed and played a lot better. Once she calmed down, they were pretty much in control of the match."

K-State beat Creighton despite battling health problems. Labrador played in the first doubles match despite being ill.

"The doctor didn't want me to play today," she said. "They don't really know what I have yet. But at the beginning of the match, we didn't know if we were going to win or not."

But with the Cats up 3-0 after the doubles round, Labrador defaulted her singles game against Debbie Johnson, Creighton's No. 1 seed.

Bietau said that Neethling also had been sick during the week. She won her No. 3 singles match, 6-4, 6-3.

"Lindy really fought her heart out today," Bietau said.

In the other singles matches, Shrubsole won her fifth-seed match in straight sets, 6-1, 6-1.

Sim made quick work of her opponent in the fourth-seed match, 6-1, 6-0.

"Suzanne played fantastic," Bietau said. "She played today like she was in the Big Eight tournament."

Uson lost the first set of her sixth-seed match, but won the next two, 6-3, 6-4.

The Blue Jays only point came when Van Der Merwe fell to Creighton's Cheryl Meyer in the second-seed singles match, 6-2, 3-6, 2-6.

"We did pretty well," Labrador said of the dual. "It was the first match for three of our players.

"(Creighton) is not as strong a team as we'll play later, but with all the new players on our team, it was a good introduction for us."

The Cats will play their next dual matches against Drake and Arkansas Feb. 13-14 in Topeka.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶FLORIDA STATE'S WARD SEPARATES SHOULDER

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Two-sport star Charlie Ward sustained a separated left shoulder early in the second half Sunday, a big loss for No. 18 Florida State in its 96-77 victory over Georgia Tech.

Ward, the Seminoles' starting point guard, will be out indefinitely, team doctors said. Ward is the quarterback on the football team and was considered a leading contender for next season's Heisman.

Ward was injured with 16:17 left in the game while scrambling for a loose ball with Tech's 6-foot-8, 240-pound James Forrest. The Seminoles have won six out of seven games since Ward returned as a starter following the football season.

Lady Cats drop 18th straight Big 8 game

Even though K-State hasn't won a conference game since beating Iowa State on Jan. 25, 1992, the Lady Cats earned some respect to start the second half of the season.

"If they keep playing like they did, they will upset some people," Kansas coach Marian Washington said. "They are better than last year. They are playing together, and they're aggressive."

And the players found something good in the game, too.

"If we can take something from this game, it is that we played a good game against a good team," Stires said.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

More on pesky parking predicaments and 'Lot Lizards'

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Believe it or not ... another letter that is not about sex, loneliness or how to talk to that cutie.

I am writing in response to the letter printed in Thursday's column from "Frustrated Lot Lizard." I too have felt his or her frustration many times in my three years at K-State. However, my first comment concerns the name, "Lot Lizard."

I couldn't help but laugh, but then realized that neither this person nor you knows the language of the world of the trucking business, or I feel you would have brought it up. With no embarrassment intended, I feel this person should know the meaning of this term as used by truck drivers and probably many others. Then maybe a more appropriate name could be substituted for the poor souls in waiting. For when I am patiently waiting my turn to park, I do not want to be referred to as a Lot Lizard, a.k.a. — a prostitute.

Back to the original issue, here are three suggestions to help eliminate the lack of parking spaces in the future. 1) Build a high-rise garage in the lot behind Waters Hall — think of the number of spaces it would add. 2) Put a parking lot in the large grassy area east of Anderson Hall (for students only). 3) Convince Parking Services to sell only the number of parking permits that would match the number of parking spaces, on a basis that those who live the furthest from K-State are to get the permits first.

For some students, an immediate remedy to this problem would be to get to the parking lots by 7:30 a.m.

The Early Bird

DEAR BIRD,

10-4, Good Buddy, I read you loud and clear.

Give me a dozen lashes with a wet noodle for missing the obvious sexual innuendo in the term "Lot Lizard." I'd better dust off my C.W. McCall albums and bone up on the many subtleties of trucking jargon.

I'm sure the face of the person who signed his or her letter "Lot Lizard" is red today as is mine.

Your suggestions for parking improvements are good. Some have been mentioned before and are still worth further consideration. I would offer yet another. How about shuttle buses that would haul students between the expansive parking lot at Bramlage Coliseum and campus?

Thanks for writing. And keep your ears on, the pedal to the metal, and watch out for Smoky Bear.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Last week, while on my way to class from the dorms, I started walking behind a very attractive young woman. I was about 10 feet behind her, and I noticed that she was having trouble walking on the icy sidewalks. I would have liked to help her to class, but I wasn't sure as to how to do that.

My question to you, Cassandra, is what would be an acceptable way to offer help to a lady who is having trouble on the ice, without looking like you are trying to "come on" to her?

Dazed and Confused

DEAR DAZED,

Believe it or not, in these modern times most of us women, attractive or not, are capable of completing such difficult tasks as opening doors and navigating icy sidewalks on our own. However, that doesn't mean that we don't appreciate such gentlemanly displays as a kind fellow offering his arm on a slippery sidewalk or opening a door.

Actually, the world would be a better place if we each offered assistance to others who appeared to be having difficulty walking on slick surfaces. If we each held the door open for the next person, life would be much more pleasant.

The best way for a man to aid a woman walking on ice without looking as if he is trying to "come on" to her is to offer assistance and then not "come on" to her.

Simply say, "It sure is slick, can I give you a hand?"

If she declines, simply nod, smile politely and go on your way. If she accepts, offer her your arm and escort her to safety. The lady should then say "thank you," and you respond with "you're welcome." Then nod, smile and go on your way.

If this process is completed correctly, I can assure you that you need not fear passionate interludes, long-term relationships or matrimony.

"On Feb. 9, Emilie Towne's speech on sexism will be very important. We chose Emilie because most of the speakers we had already chosen were male, and we needed someone to focus on the women," she said.

Others speaking throughout the month are Emanuel Cleaver, Mayor of Kansas City, Mo., on Feb. 13, and Jawanza Kunjufu, author and educational consultant, on Feb. 16.

"Dr. Kunjufu is a very powerful and motivational speaker," Davis said

Taylor-Archer said every day of this month is important.

"At K-State, we're trying very hard to cram everything in one month," she said. "We tried to make the calendar cover all aspects of the African American life."

Another event Archer said is very important is the Gospel Service on Feb. 14.

"The spiritual part is so important because it helps us sustain and persist," she said.

ASK Week not commemorated education issues," Persinger said.

At least two member schools are using ASK Awareness Week as a chance to show support and expand knowledge of the organization.

John Schwartz, KU co-director of ASK, said the university will have an information reception 7 p.m. Tuesday at the KU Alumni Center in Lawrence. Chancellor Gene Budig and Sen. Sandy Praeger, R-Lawrence, will speak. He said three Lawrence area representatives also will attend.

Andy Addis, student body president of Fort Hays State University, said Fort Hays student government has a logo "More Bang For Your Buck — ASK" that is printed on fake $5 bills to be handed out. He said the bills promote issues students are most concerned about.

Persinger said ASK's top priorities right now deal with community service, campus safety, tuition and financing higher education, Washburn University admittance into the regents system, voter registration and educational equity.

Weather shifts priorities for campus, city

Campus crews kept busy by record snowfall

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

Snow and ice are inevitable this time of year, but cleaning crews have been working overtime to keep campus sidewalks and parking lots clear.

Jerry Lane, director of facilities services, said due to the record snowfall, crews have had to come in on weekends and early mornings to remove the snow.

"We make every attempt to do what we can," Lane said. "Realistically, it takes a lot of time to get across the whole campus."

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, said he knew of only one injury.

"A student fell in front of Waters on the ice," Zweimiller said. "That's the only one I know of."

Richard Seaton, University attorney, said the University is not liable for accidents occurring on slippery sidewalks. As long as the ice is caused naturally, the University is not responsible.

"The state isn't liable for slip-and-fall cases," Seaton said. "If we leave the sprinkler on overnight, then there's a problem."

Lane said the University's primary concern is public safety. The method of cleaning sidewalks is not like a dot-to-dot puzzle. Certain sidewalks take priority, he said.

Many sidewalks are in fire lanes, and these are cleared first. Pedestrian safety is the next concern.

"We try to get mainly sidewalks that are in the core of campus," Lane said. "Then we move to the peripheral sidewalks."

Ed Rice, assistant vice president of the Division of Facilities, said the campus had done a good job, considering the amount of snowfall this year.

"With the weather we've had, it's impossible to keep all the ice off," Rice said.

Lane said there are many people responsible for different areas of campus. Custodial workers take care of building entrances, and grounds maintenance cleans campus sidewalks. Parking Services is responsible for campus parking lots, and housing services take care of the residence halls. The Veterinary Medical Complex has its own crew for snow removal.

Dwain Archer, manager of Parking Services, said private companies with necessary equipment are contracted to clean the parking lots.

"We've spent in excess of $80,000 just for Parking Services," Archer said.

"It may have been thought that the snow removal process was slow," Archer said. "Cars are here from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., and large machinery can't get in to clean. We're forced to wait until around eight or nine at night, and then generally we work through the night to ensure the lots are clean. It's not an easy job."

Residential areas cleared last

WADE SISSON
Collegian

City workers have been fighting an uphill battle this year against the forces of Mother Nature.

When continuous snow and ice fall, clean-up workers must prioritize what to do and when to do it, City Manager Jim Pearson said.

"I think our approach has been successful this year, but parking on streets does impair our ability to clear the residential areas," Pearson said.

Often, only one lane can be cleared on residential streets because of the parked cars, he said.

Though residential streets are not completely cleared of snow and ice, more accidents occur on the relatively clear thoroughfares, said Riley County Police Department Captain Buddy Mays.

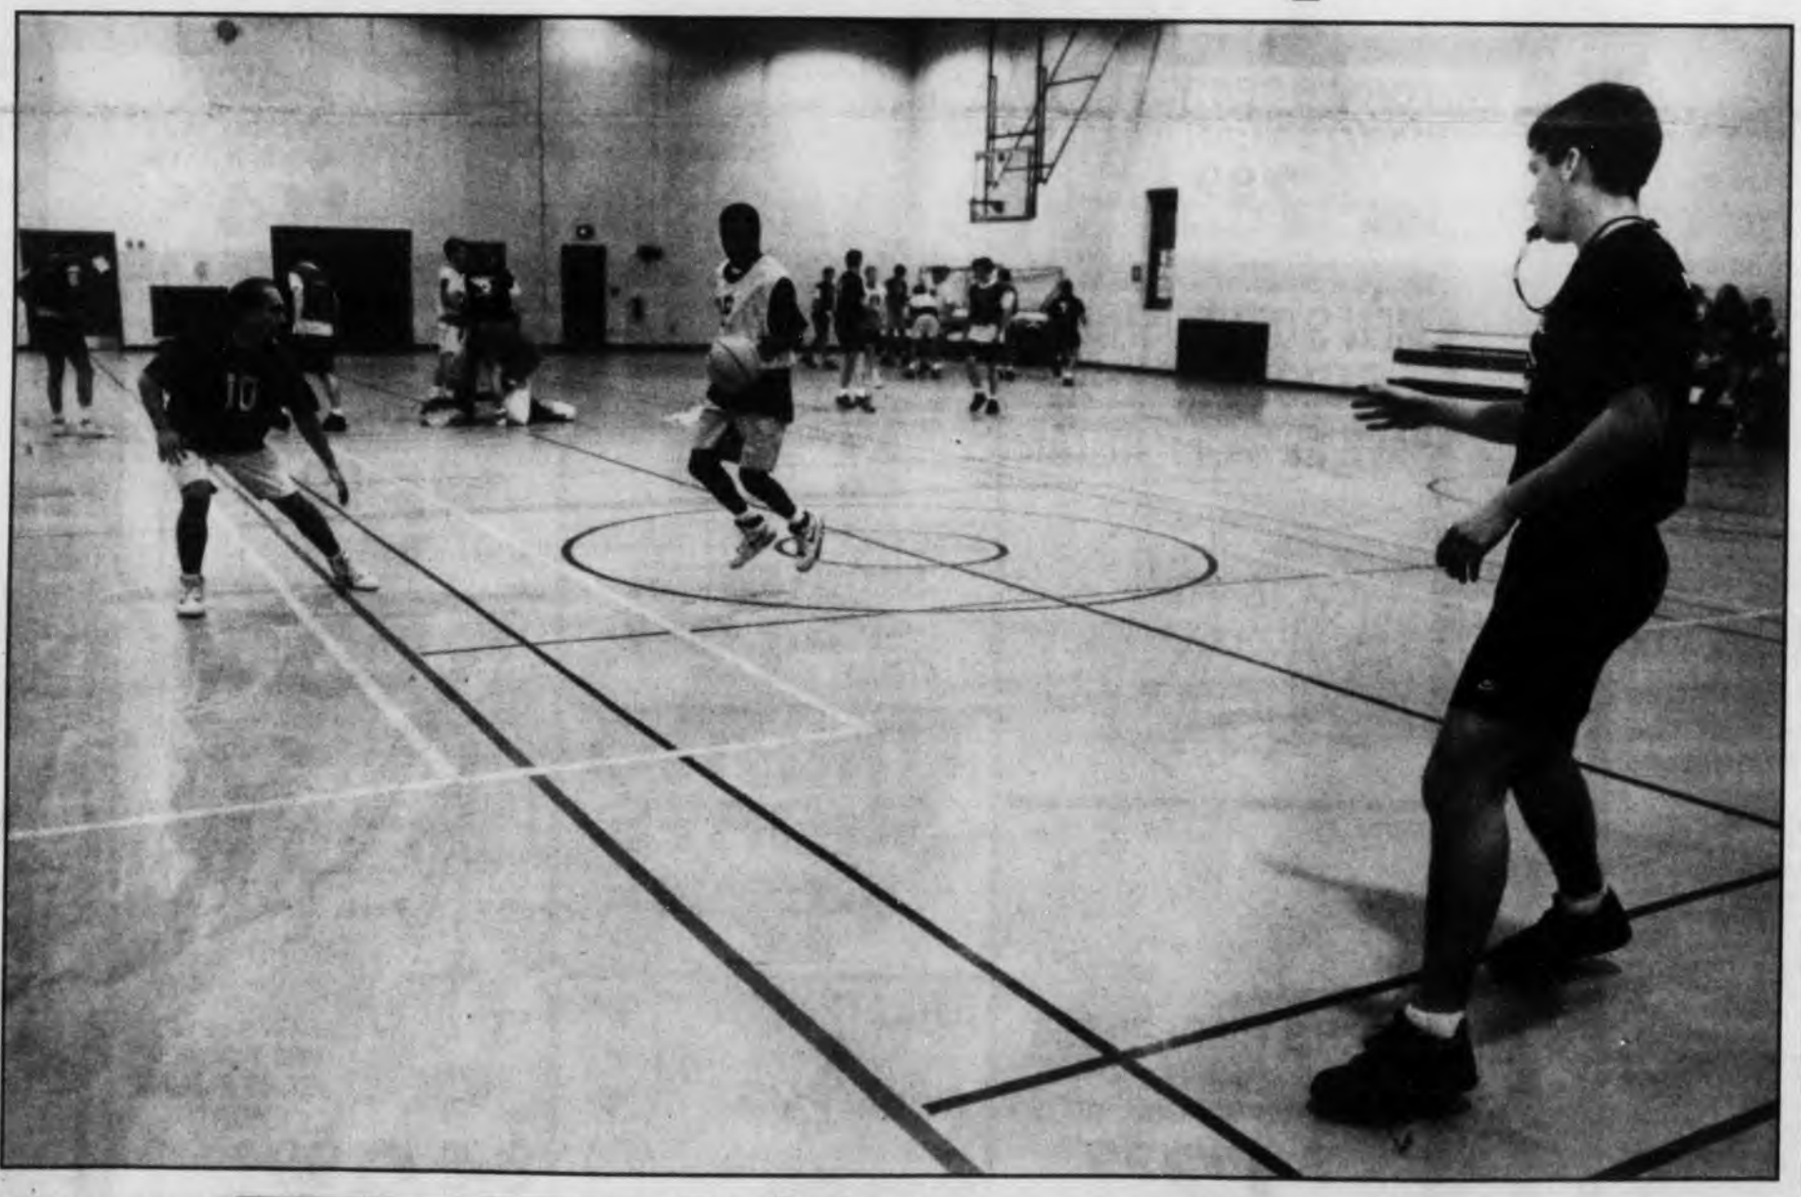
"Most of our accidents occurred on thoroughfares, not on the side streets," Mays said. "On the thoroughfares there are people going to work, following each other closely."

First priority for removal crews are the thoroughfares, such as Anderson and Claflin avenues and Fort Riley Boulevard, Pearson said. Collectors, like Sunset Avenue or College Heights Road, are the next to be cleared, he said.

The last streets to be cleared are those in residential areas. Pearson said one reason for this is the city cannot order people to move their cars from the streets except on the emergency snow route, which is predominantly made of thoroughfares anyway.

"In the past, when we have had long periods of snow, we've brought in general contractors to concentrate on the residential areas," Pearson said.

He said contractors have not been needed so far this year.



"We haven't had a lot of complaints this year because people have found that once they get out of their driveways and onto the streets, they are very passable," Pearson said. "They found there were very few hazards in driving."

Pearson said there have been complaints from home owners who scraped their driveways only to have snow piled back onto them by street-cleaning crews.

But in terms of snow, he said he has had more complaints about sidewalks not being cleared than about streets.

Intramural officials gain experience

Refs learn rules through seminars

They are the ones who wear the stripes. They are the ones who blow the whistles. They are the ones who take the jeers from the crowd.

They are the intramural officials.

"The refs are one of the most important parts of our program. It helps make intramurals as popular as they are," Scott Gilmore, intramural supervisor, said.

Becoming an intramural basketball official takes a lot of work.

"It's the toughest situation — officiating your peers," Steve Martini, intramural director, said.

But to actually become a basketball official, you must receive training. All of the intramural officials must attend three nights of training seminars.

"It's the most important thing for our officials. We teach them from the ground up," Martini said.

The training seminars cover a wide array of subjects that officials need to know and are even more intense than those of high-school officials.

"High-school refs don't need any training, they just pass a test. This is a good starting ground for those who want to referee high school," Bryan Skinner, assistant intramural director, said.

The first night of training consists of an orientation, payroll procedures and an introduction to their role in officiating, Martini said.

But, Martini said, most of this time is spent studying the rules of basketball.

The second night focuses on mechanics. Martini, Skinner and the intramural supervisors teach the officials proper mechanics and how to enforce the rules.

The officials go through correct hand signals, game-time preparation and even get to officiate a scrimmage.

"They don't get much true-life experience anywhere else," Darin Scheer, intramural supervisor, said.

"It gives the vets time to refine their skills, and it gives the rookies a chance to see what they're going to face," Skinner said.

On the last night of training, the officials review the rules and their techniques. They then contract for the games they will work. The officials get a chance to choose when they want to officiate and at what times.

An important part of their training rests in the hands of the intramural supervisors.

They have an important responsibility in the officials' education, and they earn their

▶HEARING POSTPONED IN STABBING DEATH

DEBORAH WHITSON
Collegian

The preliminary hearing for Scotty R. Adam of Council Grove, which was scheduled for yesterday at the Morris County District Court, has been postponed to Feb. 17 at the defense's request.

Adam was charged in the Jan. 23 stabbing death of Scott Sanders, 19, K-State freshman in mechanical engineering.

Robert Daub, Morris County Attorney, said Adam, 18, who had originally been charged with second degree murder, was released on $50,000 bond Jan. 25.

His charge was changed to first degree murder after investigators found new information last week. Daub said he assumed the defense had asked for the continuance to have more time to prepare a case.

Steven Opat, Junction City, was hired by the Morris County Board of Commissioners to assist Morris County prosecutors in the case. Opat is a locally reputed criminal trial attorney.

Investigators from the Morris County Sheriff's office, the Kansas Bureau of Investigation and the Council Grove Police Department continue to work on the case. Daub said he expects additional charges to be filed in connection with the case.

▶STORE OWNERS ANTICIPATE VIOLENCE

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Store owners are hiring extra security guards and drafting elaborate riot plans in preparation for more violence if a federal jury hands out acquittals in the second Rodney King trial.

"I will have to have employees on the roof with guns, I guess," said Bob Bower, owner of Bower Wholesale Inc., a South Central sport gun store that sustained $700,000 in losses in the spring riots.

The second trial of four white police officers charged with beating the black motorist is scheduled to begin Wednesday with jury selection. The trial, expected to last two months, is in federal court.

LYNX catalog system, campus featured on TV

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

New students may find it easier to learn about their campus thanks to K-State's low-power TV station.

The station is broadcasting some instructional videos to help students become familiar with various services on campus.

The Educational Communications Center will broadcast the two videos on local channel 21. The channel is funded by the University administration.

The time for the videos' running was extended. They are each about six minutes long and run back to back. They can be seen from 3 to 9 p.m. Monday and Wednesday, and from 3 to 5 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday.

"Any TV that is not on cable, but has a loop, can pick up the station," Mel Chastain, director of the center, said. "The University asked that we broadcast the two videos."

One of the videos is about how to use the LYNX catalog system in Farrell Library.

"It's for any student who has never used the system," Nancy McFarlin, assistant professor of library, said.

The video was produced last semester. McFarlin said that it has been available for students and faculty to check out. Showing it on the channel was a way to reach more students, she said.

"We're always looking for a way to reach the most people because there are about 20,000 students and 47 of us," McFarlin said.

The funding to produce the video initially came from the provost's office. It is the first in a series of five videos.

"The next one will deal with periodical search process," McFarlin said. "It will be much more tutorial. The first is more like a commercial. One of the producers referred to it as an infomercial."

McFarlin said they hope to do other videos on the government document section and on general research methods. The last one will be a general overview of Farrell after the renovations are completed.

"We're trying to develop help sources so that people don't feel intimidated in the library," McFarlin said.

The other video was done by Pat Bosco, associate vice president for institutional advancement.

Chastain said that it describes the basic features of the University, and that it is used for recruiting new students.

"We approached him to run the video because it has a lot of useful information," Chastain said. "We thought since the video for the library was running, this video would kind of run along the same vein."

Bald eagles migrate to Tuttle

Attractions are open water, food availability

PAMELA WRIGHT
Collegian

Twenty to 40 American bald eagles are spending their winter at Tuttle Creek State Park.

The eagles have migrated from the northern states and Canada to spend their winters here for the last 10-12 years, said Paul Whitehouse, a park ranger with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers.

Whitehouse said the eagles are drawn to Tuttle Creek because of the open water. Eagles feed on fish and sometimes injured water fowl, and they will only fly as far south as they need to.

The eagles arrive from late October to early November and stay until March.

A pair of eagles had built a nest in the fall of 1991 at Mill Cove. They built the nest then abandoned it, which was expected, Whitehouse said.

Whitehouse said he thinks the eagles have returned. The Army Corps is going to measure, weigh and band the male eagle's leg to determine if the pair is the same if it returns next year.

Eagles are monogamous creatures, which means they mate for life.

Whitehouse said there has been an increase in the number of juvenile eagles this year. He said that is a good sign.

ELIZABETH FERGUSON/Collegian

An American bald eagle perches in a tree near the Tuttle Creek Reservoir outlet tubes in the morning. Tuttle Creek has become the winter home to a group of eagles that feasts on fish and waterfowl carcasses. The eagles migrated from the northern states and from Canada.

"They made a strong comeback from the DDT days," he said.

DDT, before being outlawed, was used as a pesticide. It was ingested by the eagles as part of the food chain. Unfortunately, the result was that the eagles' egg shells became thin and a large number of birds never reached maturity.

Characteristics of the adult bald eagle include a snow-white head and tail, large size and a massive yellow beak. An adult eagle is usually 30 inches tall, with a wing span of 72-90 inches.

An immature bald eagle will have white splotches on the wings and back, and black and white streaks on the head.

Whitehouse urges caution to those who want to try and see the eagles.

"People are invited to come look at the eagles, but if we find them being unintentionally harassed we will block off the area," he said.

Some good spots to see the birds are Outlet Park, Riverpond State Park, Mill Cove and Eagle Island, Whitehouse said.

He added that the eagles are pretty active, usually leaving their nests early in the morning and staying out until the evening.

Speech on racism begins month

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

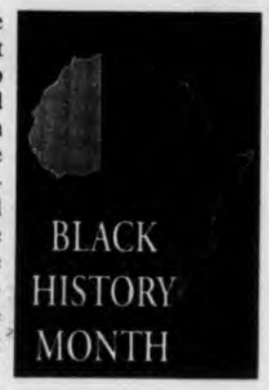
Eric Abercrumbie kicked off Black History Month yesterday with a presentation about the continuation of racism and oppression in the United States and on college campuses.

Abercrumbie is director of the African American Cultural and Research Center and of Ethnic Programs and Services at the University of Cincinnati.

The address in the K-State Union Little Theatre was attended by 140 students and faculty.

Abercrumbie said that black history should not be restricted to only one month — it should be a continual learning process.

"African Americans have made outstanding contributions," Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said. "There should be recognition every month of the year."



Abercrumbie encouraged the audience members to share their creative intelligence and not to wait for others to give it to them.

"We must be willing to go beyond that that is ordinary," he said. "The reality of today and what we're talking about is serious business."

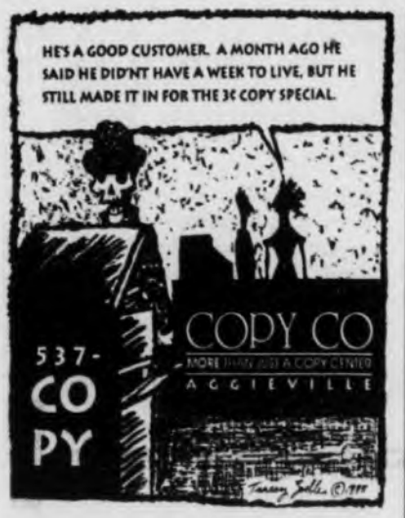
Abercrumbie also emphasized the importance of authentic black history.

"Our story is different from 'history,'" he said.

"It is important for people to preserve and teach black history," he said. "Yesterday tells you what today is about."

One student who attended the speech said he thinks students need to hear the message Abercrumbie was trying to convey.

"I don't think people want to hear it, but they need to hear it, and I think they will be better off if they do hear it," said Gabriel Bailey, freshman in criminal justice.



In addition, Abercrumbie challenged universities to improve their black history and black leadership.

He encouraged the crowd to be thankful to those who fought racism and died in order for different ethnic groups to be able to attend universities together.

"Racism works in two ways, by a concept called divide and rule," Abercrumbie said. "Never give up on our people and our struggle."

He said that understanding what racism really is and being educated in black history and the problems that face black people are two key factors in eliminating racial unrest.

"All of us need to acknowledge in some way that those who contribute are not talked about," Mordean Taylor-Archer, assistant provost of multicultural affairs, said.

Pay-raise bill with a twist

THE ISSUE

The process in which state legislators get pay raises has come under fire.

WE SUGGEST

Legislators should pass a new bill that would make it more difficult for them to vote themselves pay increases.

A bill was introduced Monday in the Kansas House of Representatives that brought up the always nasty issue of pay raises for legislators.

But it's not what you think.

Seven Democratic representatives — Denise Everhart of Berryton, Jim Garner of Coffeyville, Ruby Gilbert of Wichita, Bruce Larkin of Baileyville and Rocky Nichols, Kathleen Sebelius and Bob Wootton of Topeka — sponsored the bill, which would make it more difficult for legislators to give themselves a pay increase.

As it stands now, state law mandates that whenever state employees get a boost in their pay, legislators also get a raise.

The new bill would cut the strings attaching both items, thus allowing legislators, who earn about $18,000 annually, to grant pay raises without facing accusations of trying to line their own pockets.

It's interesting that the introduction of such a beneficial bill was sparked by the workings of the political campaign process. In the 1992 elections, incumbents were oftened criticized by their opponents for voting themselves pay increases through the guise of pay hikes for state employees.

"I got hit with this during the campaign," Everhart said. "Let's just unhook it. People don't like it."

He's right, people don't like it. People don't like to see such important budgetary matters "hidden" in such suspicious ways.

Yet, now is a chance for members of the Kansas Legislature to make themselves look that much more respectable by showing how unselfish they can be and voting for this bill.

Christians and politics

Mix with care

JOHN HART

"Who's to say religion and politics shouldn't mix? Whose Bible are they reading anyway?"
—Archbishop Desmond Tutu

Mixing religion and politics elicits passionate responses in people, ranging from repulsed shoves to wild embraces. Some want to completely divorce religion from politics in America, while others hope to establish a theocracy. Neither response, however, exhibits much wisdom.

A group of 40 pro-life leaders wrote Billy Graham a letter on Dec. 29 asking him to skip the inauguration. They wrote, "The last thing we need is for a prominent and respected Christian leader to appear with (Clinton) to seemingly endorse his agenda. Never in recent history has a presidential candidate with such an explicitly unbiblical platform been elected to our nation's highest office."

Graham declined their suggestion and accepted President Clinton's invitation to pray at his inaugural ceremonies. The decision was wise for two reasons. First, Graham, a world famous evangelist whose foremost calling in life is spreading the gospel of Jesus Christ, would undermine his mission by participating in partisan squabbling. Why would Graham, or any other prominent evangelist, want to spite or divide the people he hopes to save?

Second, Graham set an outstanding example for all Christians by accepting Clinton's invitation. Instead of railing Clinton, he prayed for Clinton. Of course, Clinton's policies and actions should be critiqued and, when appropriate, opposed, but Christians should first put their faith into action and pray.

So, should the Christian's sole act of political involvement be prayer? The answer must be a vehement no. Scripture teaches us to "be in the world, but not of the world", not to "be isolated in another world." Too often, Christians turn up their noses to the dirty business of politics. Young Christian men and women are encouraged to go to Bible college, lead a youth group, pastor a church, or become a missionary, but whatever you do, don't get involved in politics.

During the last few decades we have turned America over to people who don't share, or are hostile to, our values and goals. As a result, Christians have lost much of their ability to interject their values in government. Also, our basic civil rights are being threatened at an unprecedented level.

For example, the courts, with the help of the American Civil Liberties Union, have twisted the First Amendment into a device to purge Christian values from the public sector. This will only continue if Christians don't get involved. Christians share the same rights as every other American and, therefore, have every right to participate in the political process.

Support for many typical Christian initiatives is widespread. A recent Time/CNN poll revealed that 78 percent of Americans favor voluntary prayer in classrooms. Seventy-three percent support prayer before athletic events. Seventy-eight percent believe students should be allowed to attend voluntary Bible classes. Sixty-seven percent favor the display of religious symbols on government or public property. These goals can be met with greater involvement.

Christians have no reason to yield to the political intimidation, sometimes subtle, sometimes not, expressed in the media and, need I say, universities. For example, the labels associated with Christians in politics such as the "far-right" or "religious-right" imply fanaticisms while ardent liberals are referred to as "progressives."

Mixing religion and politics should be done with the utmost care. Too often, Christians in politics allow their political orientations to become their religions. Political orientation should be made compatible with faith, not the other way around. The fact that most Christians find the Republican platform more compatible with their beliefs doesn't mean that all Christians should be Republicans, nor should anyone be judged for their decision. Neither party is perfect.

Christians feel a real sense of urgency regarding the state of our country. However, that urgency should not be expressed with anger but transferred into disciplined prayer and political action.

Christ's exhortation to his disciples in Matthew 10:16 applies to today. "I am sending you out like sheep among wolves. Therefore, be as shrewd as snakes and as innocent as doves."

The tight-rope: Self defense and gun control

This spring, Congress will likely vote on several harsh gun-control bills. Before we support such bills, we need to consider two facts.

First, the police do not exist to provide personal protection to anyone. This principle can be found in numerous court cases. The most infamous is Warren v. District of Columbia (1981) in which three women college students sued the city after several men invaded their home, raped and tortured them for an entire night. According to the court, "for ... 14 hours the women were held captive, raped, robbed, beaten, forced to commit sexual acts on each other and made to submit to the sexual demands of their attackers." An officer did respond to a phone call for help from one of the students, but after no one responded to his knock on the door, he left.

RICHARD GRIFFITHS
GUEST COLUMNIST

The high court of the District of Columbia in its decision expressed sympathy for the victims and outrage at what occurred but still ruled that it was "fundamental [in] American law" that the duty of personal protection was the responsibility of every individual and not of the police and dismissed the case. Remember, there are only 100,000 police officers on patrol at any one time. It is impossible for these officers to protect 240 million Americans from upwards of 10 million violent criminals.

Second, the best and most recent social science research supports the effectiveness of firearms for personal self-defense, especially for women. For example, research by Gary Kleck (arguably the foremost expert in the nation) has found when a criminal confronts a man or a woman armed with a firearm, the criminal surrenders or flees 83 percent of the time. Unfortunately, too many Americans have listened to misguided advice from the media and from Handgun Control Inc. not to protect themselves with firearms. As a result, they are easy victims to be brutally robbed, murdered or raped. One shocking report, "Violence Against Women," issued by the Senate Judiciary Committee, estimates the chance of an American woman being raped at some time in her life is now one in five.

Civil rights attorney Don Kates, in "The Gun Control Debate: You Decide," especially criticizes Handgun Control Inc. for continuing to ignore the now overwhelming evidence that women can successfully defend themselves with a firearm and for urging women to submit to rapists. For example, Pete Shields, the founder of Handgun Control Inc., tells women that the best way to "keep you alive [is to] put up no defense — give them what they want or run." Kates contends this advice is horribly wrong and Handgun Control Inc.'s goal to outlaw all handguns will simply deprive most women of their most effective and, in some cases, their sole means of defense. As Kates points out, outlawing handguns will not stop a rapist or other criminals because in most cases they don't need a handgun to commit a crime. For example, from 1972 to 1982, the criminal did not have a gun in 89.6 percent of attacks on women.

Before we support gun-control bills that prevent the lawful ownership of firearms for self-defense, I urge the students at K-State to read Kleck's recent book "Point Blank: Guns and Violence in America" and his article "Rape and Resistance" in the journal Social Problems, volume 37.

▶ BLOODMOBILE

Your chance to save someone's life

Editor,

Blood comes from the heart! Right now, a friend, family member or neighbor needs your blood to live. You can help by becoming a volunteer blood donor when the American Red Cross Bloodmobile visits K-State from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., Feb. 16-19, at the K-State Union.

Giving blood is a safe and simple process. You cannot get AIDS or any other disease by giving blood. The materials, including the needle used for your donation, are new, sterile, disposable and used only once — by you for your blood donation.

Healthy K-State and Manhattan residents need to accept their responsibility for ensuring that blood is available for all patients in our community when it is needed. Each donation can help as many as three different hospital patients.

Are you a potential Red Cross blood donor? You must be 17 or older, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in general good health. You can never have had hepatitis and must not be in an AIDS at-risk behavior group.

You may make an appointment from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m., Feb. 1-3, in the Union or call 537-2180.

If you've never been asked to give blood, I'm asking you now. Please donate. Someone needs your blood to live.

▶ ABORTION

You can only have a choice if you live

Editor,

I applaud John Hart on his recent editorial concerning abortion. It seems that today, if one is opposed to abortion, he or she is instantly labeled as either a conservative or a "radical" Christian activist.

The issue is not about values or religion. It is, as Hart suggests, about protecting the rights of those without a voice. Abortion may be a continuing debate, but it is one that cannot be won. As long as life, the one thing that unconditionally allows us choice, is destroyed, we all lose.

Poverty could be a fate worse than death

Editor,

I'm writing in response to John Hart's Jan. 26 article on abortion. Upon reading this article, the first thought that sprang to mind was, "Does this guy know what in the hell he's talking about?" My guess is ... NOT. All biological arguments aside, Hart displayed colossal ignorance by saying that poverty is better than not being born. I seriously doubt that Mr. Hart has had any experience with poverty. So, I feel the need to enlighten him and anyone else planning to use that ridiculous pro-life argument about the characteristics of poverty.

Poverty is a family of four living on $471 per month, which has to pay for rent, utilities, clothes and small luxuries such as toilet paper. Poverty is buying stained, raggedy clothing from second-hand stores. Poverty is bitter cold in the winter and stifling heat in the summer. Poverty is substandard housing in substandard neighborhoods with substandard schools. Poverty is houses infested with cockroaches and mice. Poverty is buying the cheapest brands on the market so the food stamps will last. Poverty is your children receiving old, used toys on Christmas morning. Poverty is having to swallow one's pride and accept token gestures of charity. Poverty is having to be thankful for anything that comes your way because to do otherwise would be ungrateful. Poverty is having to support a family on minimum wage while paying taxes, child care and insurance, and realizing you would be better off on welfare. Poverty is a vicious cycle. Poverty is being stereotyped as lazy, shiftless, and ignorant — even when you know that you're not. Poverty occurs when women can't afford or can't choose abortion and are forced to raise their children on welfare. Poverty occurs when men leave women to face the responsibility of child-rearing alone. Poverty occurs when men refuse to pay child support. Poverty is the kind of life most people would rather not live. Poverty is a lifestyle many people wish they had never been born into. Does poverty sound like the kind of life you would want for yourself or your children?

Mr. Hart says he wants to protect the rights of the unborn by lobbying to make abortion illegal. But denying a woman the right to make a choice about her life is the same as condemning the life of the child to what some might call a fate worse than death.

Where is it written that anyone has the right to decide if a life of poverty is better than no life at all? I think the bottom line here is that a woman should have the right to make a choice about her own life, and about the kind of life her unborn child will live. If abortion is the choice made by a woman, then the judgment of that decision should be reserved for God alone.

Drink Less To Drink Better!

BOULEVARD BREWING CO

BOULEVARD BREAKS THROUGH!

Boulevard Beer has finally made it's way to Manhattan.

The Kansas City, Mo., based brewer has finalized a deal with Campbell Distributors, Inc. to bring it's four beers to bars and liquor stores throughout the area.

But don't think that Boulevard is just another beer taking up space behind the counter or sitting on the shelf. Boulevard is not only small enough, but also cares enough to make commitment to quality it's first concern.

"The large brewers all make excellent products," Boulevard President John McDonald said, "But it's generic. There's very little difference."

That's why the self-described "beer lover" and ex-carpenter founded the Boulevard Brewing Company five years ago. Two years later, the brewery delivered it's first products to customers.

The customers loved them. McDonald thinks he knows why.

"People are drinking less, and they're wanting to drink better," he said. "People who love hops and malt love our beers."

There has been a good response to Boulevard Beer. Already three Aggieville bars have all agreed to carry Boulevard Beer. McDonald is convinced that others will soon follow.

"The KSU, Fort Riley, and Junction City market is really promising for us," he said.

"I think were going to do really well."

No. 3 Jayhawks stay atop Big 8 Conference

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE. — Eric Pauley scored 18 points as third-ranked Kansas raced past cold-shooting Missouri 86-69 Monday night for the Jayhawks' fifth win in a row over the Tigers.

Steve Woodberry added 17 points as Kansas (18-2 overall, 5-0 Big Eight) won its 19th straight league game at home.

Roy Williams lost four straight to Missouri (13-6, 3-2) after becoming Kansas' coach in 1988, but he now has a winning record against every Big Eight team.

Kansas held a big edge on the boards and at the foul line. The Jayhawks made 17 of 21 free throws, while Missouri made just three of six, all in the first half. Kansas also outrebounded Missouri 47-31.

Missouri coach Norm Stewart did not start Jevon Crudup, the Tigers' second-leading scorer with a 15.5 average, for apparent disciplinary reasons.

Crudup, who picked up his fourth technical foul of the season in an overtime loss at Nebraska Saturday, didn't play for the first eight minutes and finished with only nine points.

Crudup finished the game with eight rebounds, tops on Missouri.

Mark Atkins led Missouri with 30 points. Melvin Booker added 18 for the Tigers.

The Jayhawks went on a 17-2 run to take a 43-26 lead with 5:40 to play n the first half. Missouri missed 16 of its last 18 shots of the half, and trailed 49-34 at the break.

Atkins kept the Tigers in the game early, making seven of 13 field goal attempts for 17 points in the first half. Atkins made three of five 3-point shots in the first half.

Rex Walters and Adonis Jordan hit 3-pointers around a field goal by Atkins at the start of the second half to give Kansas a 58-40 lead with 16:37 remaining. Pauley hit a basket midway through the half to put the Jayhawks ahead 74-53.

Jordan finished with 14 points and Walters had 13. Walters also pitched in eight assists to lead the team.

For the game, the Tigers connected on 10 of their 19 3-pointers, led by Atkins six of 11 performance.

Skaters fall to Memphis State

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

K-State blows early 3-goal lead

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Physically, K-State's goalie Steve Kaploe showed up for the Wildcats' weekend loss to Memphis State in Wichita.

Mentally, however, may have been a different story.

"I think he just fell asleep at the wheel," hockey president Jake Kisel said of Kaploe, who gave up all eight Memphis State goals.

"And he knows he screwed up."

The result was a 9-8 Wildcat loss in a game that K-State led, at one point, by as many as three goals.

The Cats went up 4-1 in the first period, but that lead proved to be short-lived. Memphis State chipped away at the K-State lead, and by the time the final period rolled around, Memphis State was up 6-4.

"Once they started scoring some goals, people just kind of got down," Kisel said. "But if our goalie would have played up to his potential, I don't think they would have scored on us."

Memphis State, a member of the Southern Collegiate Hockey League, avenged last semester's 8-1 loss to the Wildcats.

"At the end of the game, everybody was upset," Kisel said. "But we still knew that when Kaploe is on, it's hard to beat us.

"And this was just one game."

Kaploe went to Kansas City following the game and could not be reached for comment.

Despite the loss, not all was lost during the weekend.

"I managed to keep my record for leading the team in penalty minutes," said Kisel, who was benched for six minutes in the loss to Memphis State.

"And that was my season low."

Kisel also said that since Memphis State is not part of the Central States Collegiate Hockey League, the loss would not hurt K-State in the standing.

K-State's next contest is a home game in Kansas City against Washington University of St. Louis.

COLUMN

Altman's scheduling shouldn't be criticized

Wildcat coach Dana Altman said before the season that he would receive some criticism for K-State's non-conference schedule.

He has.

"I'm not going to sit here and tell you it's a tough schedule — it's not," he said at the time. "It's a schedule that we prepared to give us an opportunity to bring some of our players along."

Like junior college transfers Anthony Beane and Ron Lucas. Like returning players Aaron Collier and Deryl Cunningham. And like incoming freshmen Brian Gavin and Jerrell Roberson.

STEVEN ROCK

K-State's non-conference schedule — as weak as it may have been — was a necessary foundation in the development of this club.

When a club has just two players that started more than half the team's games one year earlier, and a community-college transfer that's expected to lead the way, those early-season games are necessary.

When one of the team's two returning seniors, Collier, averaged just 15 minutes a game — and started only nine times — those early-season games are necessary.

And when you're coming off a 16-14 year that all but alienated the Wildcat faithful, those early-season games are mandatory.

Without games against the likes of Sam Houston State, LaSalle and Central Connecticut State, K-State wouldn't be in the position that it's in now — 13-3, in contention for the Big Eight title and in the running for an NCAA Tournament bid.

Which scenario would have best fit the Cats? A tough non-conference schedule that gave K-State a few non-conference losses and some shattered confidence, or a schedule that fit the team's needs and prepared them for the Big Eight?

That's what I thought.

You take away those early games, in which K-State had the chance to form a team, and we're struggling in the Big Eight much like we did last season. And then the fans would moan that we didn't schedule some weaker opponents to bring the team around.

Indeed, when Altman put together this season's schedule, he was in a Catch 22 situation — schedule some weaker teams and get lambasted with criticism, or pit the Cats against better opponents who could do nothing for the team.

And how soon we forget — the Wildcats lost to Lamar by 41 points a year ago. And we wonder why we don't have Michigan and Indiana on our schedule.

Without a doubt, K-State needed these opponents to come together as a unit. And never was that more evident than when Ohio, a team coming off a fourth-place finish in the ever-tough Mid-American Conference, took us into overtime.

Or when Wichita State shot 38 percent but still beat us by 13 points.

But the Cats are coming together now, as was evidenced by Saturday's win over Temple. The Owls, a perennial NCAA Tournament team — qualifying eight of the last nine years — came into the game with a 9-5 record against the toughest schedule in the nation.

K-State responded by being the first team to shoot 50 percent against them from the field.

Indeed, the Cats' non-conference schedule received much more criticism than it deserved.

Even Kansas scheduled two games against Division II opponents and a third against Oral Roberts, a Division I Correspondence member.

Sure, the Hawks had the likes of Indiana and Michigan on their schedule, but when you're a preseason pick for the Final Four, you have no business playing Emporia State and Rollins College.

How many Division II opponents on K-State's schedule? None.

Suddenly, Coppin State — 7-0 and in first place of the Mid-Eastern Conference — doesn't look so bad.

Moylan fulfilling life-long dream

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

Lady Cat Kelly Moylan's basketball career is the culmination of a life-long dream.

"I decided in fifth or sixth grade that I wanted to play basketball," Moylan said. "In high school, I knew I wanted to play on this level."

The 5-foot-9-inch guard averages 11.2 points per game for the struggling Lady Cats and is first in the Big Eight in 3-point shooting at 41 percent.

Moylan

But her talents extend past the basketball court. K-State coach Susan Yow said Moylan is a fine example of a good student-athlete.

"She is an excellent example of what we need more of in our program," Yow said. "You can replace positions, but you can't replace people."

Moylan grew up in Emmett, Kan., a small town north of St. Marys. She graduated from St. Marys high school, where she set 21 school records. Moylan was also honorable mention all-America and Kansas state Athlete of the Year in 1989. She was named the 1989 Kansas Sport Magazine Player of the Year.

Moylan also received all-state honors in volleyball and was a two-year letter winner in track.

She said K-State singled her out when she was a freshman at St. Marys playing a game against Alma-Wabaunsee. Former Lady Cat assistant coach Terri Lasswell went to the game to recruit a player from Alma-Waubunsee and noticed Moylan instead.

"Lasswell told Matilda Mossman (Lady Cats former coach) to 'watch the girl from Emmett,'" Moylan said.

It was a dream come true of sorts. Moylan said growing up, she always wanted to end up at K-State.

"I just thought it would be a great reward for a small-town girl to make it in the big leagues," she said.

"I worked really hard, and I accomplished it, and I have no regrets growing up in a small town — no regrets at all."

Moylan said her four older brothers introduced her to basketball.

"I looked up to them in so many ways," she said. "That's really special because I think the world of my family, and they have been my number-one supporters."

Moylan said when she was a freshman, she knew she would not play right away because

▶VJ NAMED PLAYER OF WEEK

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — K-State's Vincent Jackson, who scored 29 points in Saturday's 81-63 victory against Temple, was named the Big Eight Conference player of the week Monday.

Jackson hit 10 of his 13 shots, including three 3-pointers, in the Temple game. He was 6-for-6 at the free-throw line and had five rebounds and three assists. He also held Temple's leading scorer, Aaron McKie, to a career-low two points.

In an 81-56 Kansas State victory over Central Connecticut State earlier in the week, Jackson had 14 points, six rebounds, four assists and two steals.

Jackson, a unanimous choice for the honor, made 16 of his 24 shots during the week, a 67-percent clip.

Last week, Anthony Beane was the runner-up for the Big Eight honor.

▶GEORGETOWN FALLS, 79-61

NEW YORK (AP) — Sergio Luyk started and ended a 16-0 second-half run with a 3-pointer and St. John's remained in first place in the Big East with a 79-61 victory over No. 23 Georgetown on Monday night.

The Redmen (12-5, 7-2) have won seven of their last eight games. Georgetown fell to 12-5 and 5-4.

Title is the coolest part of Stray Cats new album

"Choo Choo Hot Fish" unoriginal, longer-than-average release

THOMAS E. PTACEK
Collegian

I must admit that I've never been much of a Stray Cats fan. It isn't that I don't like their music. It's just that whenever I'm in that mood, I find it hard to choose the Stray Cats over the originals like Carl Perkins, Cliff Gallup or Duane Eddy.

However, something did interest me about their latest release "Choo Choo Hot Fish." Looking back, it was probably just the cool title, coupled with the fact that I hadn't heard the Stray Cats for a while and had forgotten that I didn't particularly care for them.

The original band is still intact, with Brian Setzer on vocals and guitar, Slim Jim Phantom on drums and Lee Rocker on bass and vocals.

Their latest release does have many bright spots scattered throughout, and with a running time of 44 minutes, it's slightly longer than your average release.

The effort was produced by Dave Edmunds, who is a great rockabilly force in his own right. As well as producing, Edmunds also guests on the track "Crybaby," providing both guitar and vocals. This tune is, without a doubt, one of the better offerings, from the foot-tapping thump of Rocker's upright bass to the straight-ahead groove provided by the teaming up of Setzer and Edmunds.

In my opinion, the best track here is the opener "Elvis On Velvet." This tongue-in-cheek look at Presley's still-thriving empire culminates with the focal point in the chorus, which is the emotions provoked by seeing Elvis portrayed in a tacky, velvet painting.

The song flows with a very palatable rhythm and amusing lyrics throughout. It is worth noting that not one band member is credited with the writing of this clever tune, which is so firmly rooted in their own genre. In fact, the band as a whole has only two tracks in which they are credited with writing.

One of these is the Duane Eddy-influenced instrumental "Jade Idol." Although it's definitely a good representation of the style, the twang is missing, and therefore, failing in comparison to much of Eddy's work. "Can't Go Back To Memphis," which was penned by Randy Bachman of Bachman-Turner Overdrive fame, is a more traditional rocker. Yet it's still delivered with the typical Stray Cat abandon.

Setzer throws in jazz chords and changes throughout many of the songs. These, at first-listen, may sound a bit out of place, but quickly settle in and seem right at home along side the traditional blues and rock progressions.

This release is, however, not without its shortcomings, the largest being their rendition of the classic 1959 instrumental, "Sleepwalk." This tune is a particular favorite of mine, and I can safely say the Cats come dangerously close to destroying it. It does retain most of its jazz flavor, but Setzer often gets a little carried away with the guitar, keeping it from being the soothing tune it was meant to be.

If you're a fan of the Stray Cats' previous material, remember "Stray Cat Strut," or are just a general fan of rockabilly, this one is for you. However, if you never cared for it in the first place, there isn't enough here to change your mind.

Moylan continues to lead struggling Lady Cats

she was second to former Lady Cat Nadira Hazim.

"I give her a lot of credit just for the fact that I had to guard her every day and she definitely made me a better person," Moylan said. "She was so quick, and I guarded her every single day."

Moylan said she also gives credit to fellow Lady Cat senior Leah Honeycutt.

"For me to see her work ethic has pushed me, especially this year, to be a leader."

Being the sole seniors on this Lady Cat team, Moylan said, just might make this an emotional time for both her and Honeycutt.

"We've talked about it, and I think it is going to be very emotional for us," Moylan said. "We've played basketball for I don't know how many years, and this is goodbye to a big part of our lives."

Though Moylan is majoring in physical education, she said she has other aspirations.

"Some day, I'd like to be a Division I head coach — my ultimate goal."

NATION

Clinton eases Medicade rules

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton gave the nation's governors a freer hand Monday to run their financially strapped Medicaid programs.

The governors in turn promised to help him sell a tough plan to shrink the huge budget deficit.

Clinton said easing Medicaid rules was one big step on a long road to giving this country the kind of health-care system it needs.

After years of strain between the White House and statehouses, the governors were enthusiastic following a four-hour meeting with Clinton focusing on soaring health care costs that are helping drive the budget deficit to a projected $327 billion this year.

"He is someone who is fully knowledgeable and very sympathetic to what it is that we are facing," Gov. Pete Wilson, R-Calif., said of Clinton, himself a former governor.

New York Gov. Mario Cuomo said he expected Clinton to come up with a deficit-reduction plan that will receive a substantial amount of support from Republican and Democratic governors.

The administration has raised the possibility of an energy tax, limits on Social Security cost-of-living increases, higher corporate taxes and increased taxes on the wealthy.

"No decisions have been made, and I don't know that it's very productive to go into what's on and what's off the table at any time," White House communications director George Stephanopoulos said. Clinton is to announce his program Feb. 17 in an address to a joint session of Congress.

"I think that there is much more sympathy on the part of the governors for what it is that the president will be undertaking," Wilson said. "There hasn't been a great deal of concern in the Congress about the deficit."

Cuomo said, "What you need to do is convince the public that you are willing to make the tough decisions and that they will work. I can't think of anyone in a better position to do that than the governors."

The meeting gave Clinton an opportunity to jump beyond last week's controversy over homosexuals in the military and begin focusing on the domestic agenda he wants to stress.

Asserting there is an urgent need to tame health care costs, Clinton said the nation's health bill has more than tripled in the last 12 years.

BUSINESS

Family-leave bill gets support

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A group of retailers that employs about 20 million Americans endorsed the family-leave bill Monday on the eve of its scheduled Senate debate.

The National Retail Federation's support was hailed by the bill's sponsors as an indication that the legislation is not anti-business, as critics argue.

The U.S. Chamber of Commerce and other business groups oppose the legislation, which would force employers with 50 or more workers to give their employees up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave to care for a newborn or a sick family member.

The retail group said the bill, with its small business exemption, strikes a balance between family needs and workplace reality.

The measure is expected to come up on the Senate floor on Tuesday. House debate is set for Wednesday.

Supporters hope to get the measure to President Clinton by the end of the week.

In the Senate, however, the bill could get caught up in maneuvering over a Republican effort to attach an amendment keeping the government's ban on homosexuals in the military. Democrats are expected to offer a counter-amendment blocking the Republican move.

Sen. Chris Dodd, D-Conn., said that the gays in the military issue ranks about 50th on Americans' lists of what is important and said it was regrettable some lawmakers would try to link the two.

Meanwhile, the General Accounting Office said that the cost to U.S. businesses of continuing workers' health care coverage while they were on leave would amount to about $674 million a year.

Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., a chief critic, has said she might offer an amendment forcing the government to pick up any costs of the mandated leave. The GAO said there were no other significant costs.

Pat Ball, code inspection officer for the Community Development Department, said a city ordinance specifies that sidewalks must be cleared within 48 hours of the last snowfall.

When property owners fail to comply with the ordinance, and a complaint is made, Ball said she calls the owner.

Some leases hold the renter responsible for clearing sidewalks and driveways, Ball said.

Pearson said he recommends that the renter makes sure the lease holds the manager or property owner responsible for grounds maintenance before signing it.

If the owner ignores the warning from Ball's department, the matter can be taken to municipal court.

No cases have been taken so far this year, Ball said.

"Sidewalks are the main concern," Ball said. "Especially around the University, because students have to use those to walk to school."

Pearson is also concerned with the problems his department will face once the snow and ice are gone.

"The real downside to all the beautiful snow we've had is that we're facing the biggest pothole problem in this city in five years," Pearson said.

Pearson's staff is now considering its resources and re-prioritizing.

"Our question now is whether we'll be able to handle this in terms of workers and dollars," Pearson said.

ESSENTIALS

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

The best thing is to just talk to him

DEAR CASSANDRA,

There is a guy on our floor that is obsessed with feminine hygiene products and advertisements and bragging about it. We, being his friends, are worried about his comfort with his sexuality.

How do we approach this subject tactfully without hurting his feelings? This doesn't seem to be just fun and games anymore, and we seriously need some advice to lend our help. Please reply to what we feel is a serious matter.

The Hockey Fans

DEAR FANS,

I'll try to pretend that I understood your cryptic letter.

You have a friend who is obsessed with feminine hygiene products and brags about them. Hmm.

Why would he brag about them? Did he invent them?

You and your friends are beginning to question this person's sexuality because of his fascination with such products.

I guess the best thing you can do is politely and privately tell this person of your concern.

In the meantime, try writing this letter again. We're all curious now.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I met this really great looking girl last weekend in Aggieville, but I really don't know how she feels about me. I have her phone number, and I have called her once, but I don't know if I should call her back.

I am really not certain if I know the best way to find out if she likes me or not. Cassandra, what do you suggest I do?

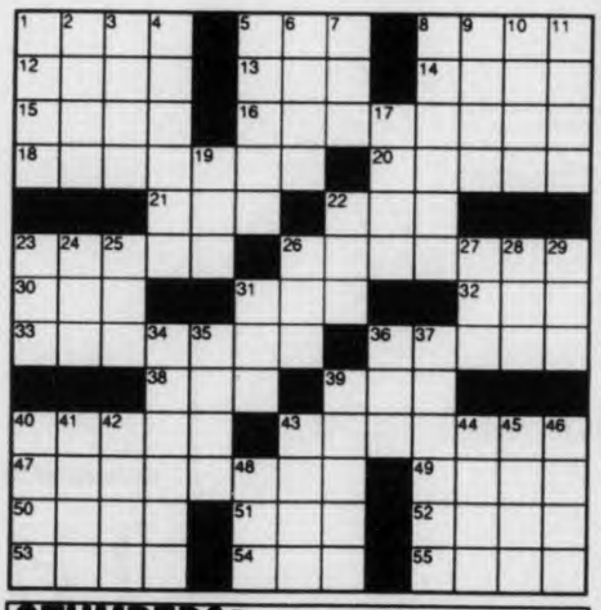
Waiting for her in the 'Ville

DEAR WAITING,

If the first phone call went well, and she sounded interested, then call her back.

If she didn't sound interested, call her back and ask her out. If she says no this time then don't press it.

Incidentally, females you meet in Aggieville are probably women, not girls.



Letters to Cassandra may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie Hall 106, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Israel offers return of 100 deportees

ASSOCIATED PRESS

JERUSALEM — Israel said Monday it will allow 100 deported Palestinians to return immediately from Lebanon and repatriate the nearly 300 others within a year under a compromise plan crafted to avert possible U.N. punishment.

The United Nations has demanded the exiles' immediate return. The impasse endangered the resumption of U.S.-sponsored Middle East peace talks and threatened to sour its relations with the Clinton administration.

Israel's environment minister predicted the compromise unanimously approved by the Cabinet Monday night would end Israel's "collision course" with the Security Council and halt moves to impose sanctions.

But the Palestine Liberation Organization quickly rejected Israel's move, announced in a nationally broadcast speech by Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin.

Yasser Abed-Rabbo, a PLO executive committee member, said from Tunisia that it was an attempt to circumvent the U.N. resolution demanding the return of the deportees, accused by Israel of being part of militant Muslim fundamentalists groups.

The PLO's observer at the United Nations, Nasser al-Kidwa, said Arabs would push ahead with a sanctions resolution.

Rabin said the arrangement was worked out in discussions with the United States, which promised to shield Israel from international sanctions and work to renew the Middle East peace process.

"It is a package deal," he told a news conference. He said the U.S. promise would apply whether or not the deported Palestinians — who have been living in a makeshift camp in southern Lebanon — accepted Israel's offer.

Rabin said Israel would help international groups get humanitarian aid to the deportees "by helicopter, not by land."

Rabin said any charges would still stand against deportees who return to Israel, meaning many could end up in jail.

Officials important part of intramurals position by officiating many seasons in many sports, Martini said.

"We know the ins and outs to officiating. It's very valuable to all the refs," Gilmore said.

Scheer said that the supervisors can help and evaluate the officials.

"We can provide them with immediate information in case they have any questions," he said.

Most of the officials found the training to be beneficial.

"It helped me a lot. I haven't officiated in two years. They gave me a lot more than I expected," Troy Fisher, senior in criminal justice, said.

"It's an excellent way to review the fundamentals of officiating and basketball," Spencer Casey, junior in accounting, said.

Martini and Skinner both have many expectations for their officials.

They expect the officials to know the rules, use good mechanics, be on time, hustle and give 100 percent.

"I expect the rookies to be nervous but confident, and the vets to help out the rookies and to refine their skills," Skinner said.

Both of them have expectations for the basketball players as well.

"I hope they understand that these are their peers. They're kids looking for a job. They need to respect them," Skinner said.

Martini said he agreed with Skinner.

"I expect more sportsmanship because they are their fellow students and are not highly paid," Martini said.

The training has changed the way officials look at officiating.

"I respect the refs a lot more," Fisher said.

This also affected the way some treated other officials.

"I no longer gripe at officials. You find out how different it is," Bryan Rickard, junior in pre-veterinary medicine, said.

Some officials have found out that officiating is very different than what they expected.

"You don't realize how hard it is until you go out there and put the black stripes on," Casey said.

Martini said he agrees.

"Anybody who's never officiated and thinks it's easy should come out and try it. Once you get a black shirt on your back and a whistle in your mouth, it's a different game," Martini said.

Do you know what your Senate is doing?

"We value what the students want, because we are students ourselves."

DARBY WALLACE
ARTS AND SCIENCES SENATOR

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

The question of the week: How well do students think Student Senate served its constituents last semester?

The answer: so-so, at best.

"All I hear is that Senate is wasting money," Bill Rowland, sophomore in agribusiness, said. "I don't know what goes on in Student Senate."

Out of 44 respondents to the question, which was posted by the Union stateroom last week, 31 said they did not think Senate was serving its constituents well.

Rowland said Senate does not keep the students informed or tell them of changes that are happening.

"Any student can come to a Senate meeting or pick up the newspaper and find out what's going on in Senate," Darby Wallace, arts and sciences senator and junior in public relations, said.

Some changes Rowland suggested were to set short-term, obtainable goals that the student body will see while they are at K-State.

DeLoss Jahnke, communications representative for Senate and junior in agricultural journalism, said that Senate is using short-term thinking when they should actually be focusing on the long-term goals.

"I feel these are good goals to have, even though they are not short-term goals," Jahnke said.

Wallace said Senate tries to work on short-term goals, but the benefits are not always noticeable.

The long-term goals of Senate must go through many different channels in order to be passed. Some of the long-term goals of Senate include restructuring of Farrell Library and trying to get a shuttle system on campus.

"We value what the students want because we are students ourselves," Wallace said. "There's a lot of time that goes into being in Senate. We're here to make K-State a better school."

Todd Stedry, junior in marketing, had a neutral view of Senate.

"Some of the senators are doing a good job, while some of them aren't," Stedry said. "I think that Senate needs to focus on residence halls and class presentations to inform the students of what is happening. Senate needs to target the classrooms."

Wallace said he agreed targeting the classrooms was a great idea.

Senate meets at 7 p.m. every Thursday, and the meetings are open to anyone. Students are invited to sit, watch and listen to how Senate is run.

"Students must realize that we are students too. We are people who care and who are trying to make a difference," Wallace said.

Instructor seeks funds for research

DAVID GROSKO
Collegian

After spending 2-1/2 weeks in Russia in August, Mike Ahern, instructor of marketing, filed for a $200,000 federal research grant.

Ahern said he was gathering support data, in connection with the International Trade Institute, for a grant advocating a linkage between U. S. and Russian universities.

"The implementation of this grant would not only benefit K-State, but possibly the entire world," he said. "You have to go over there to get a true understanding of what their business and economy is like."

He said if the project is funded, faculty and students from Altai State University in Siberia, Russia, will be able to pursue MBA classes from K-State.

"We are very optimistic about the success of acquiring the grant, although we will not find out until late spring," Ahern said.

"The exchange program would also allow people from the United States to teach the faculty of Altai State the necessary skills to establish a college of business administration," he said.

Currently, Altai State has no college of business administration. The university will need help deciding on issues such as curriculum, books and classes, Ahern said.

"The classes will be taught with a special emphasis on the teaching and training of future MBA candidates in Russia," he said. "Instructional materials will be developed at K-State to contribute to the classroom instruction at Altai State."

Ahern said, in addition, faculty at K-State will assist in the contribution of training programs in the areas of management, marketing, finance, accounting and entrepreneurship.

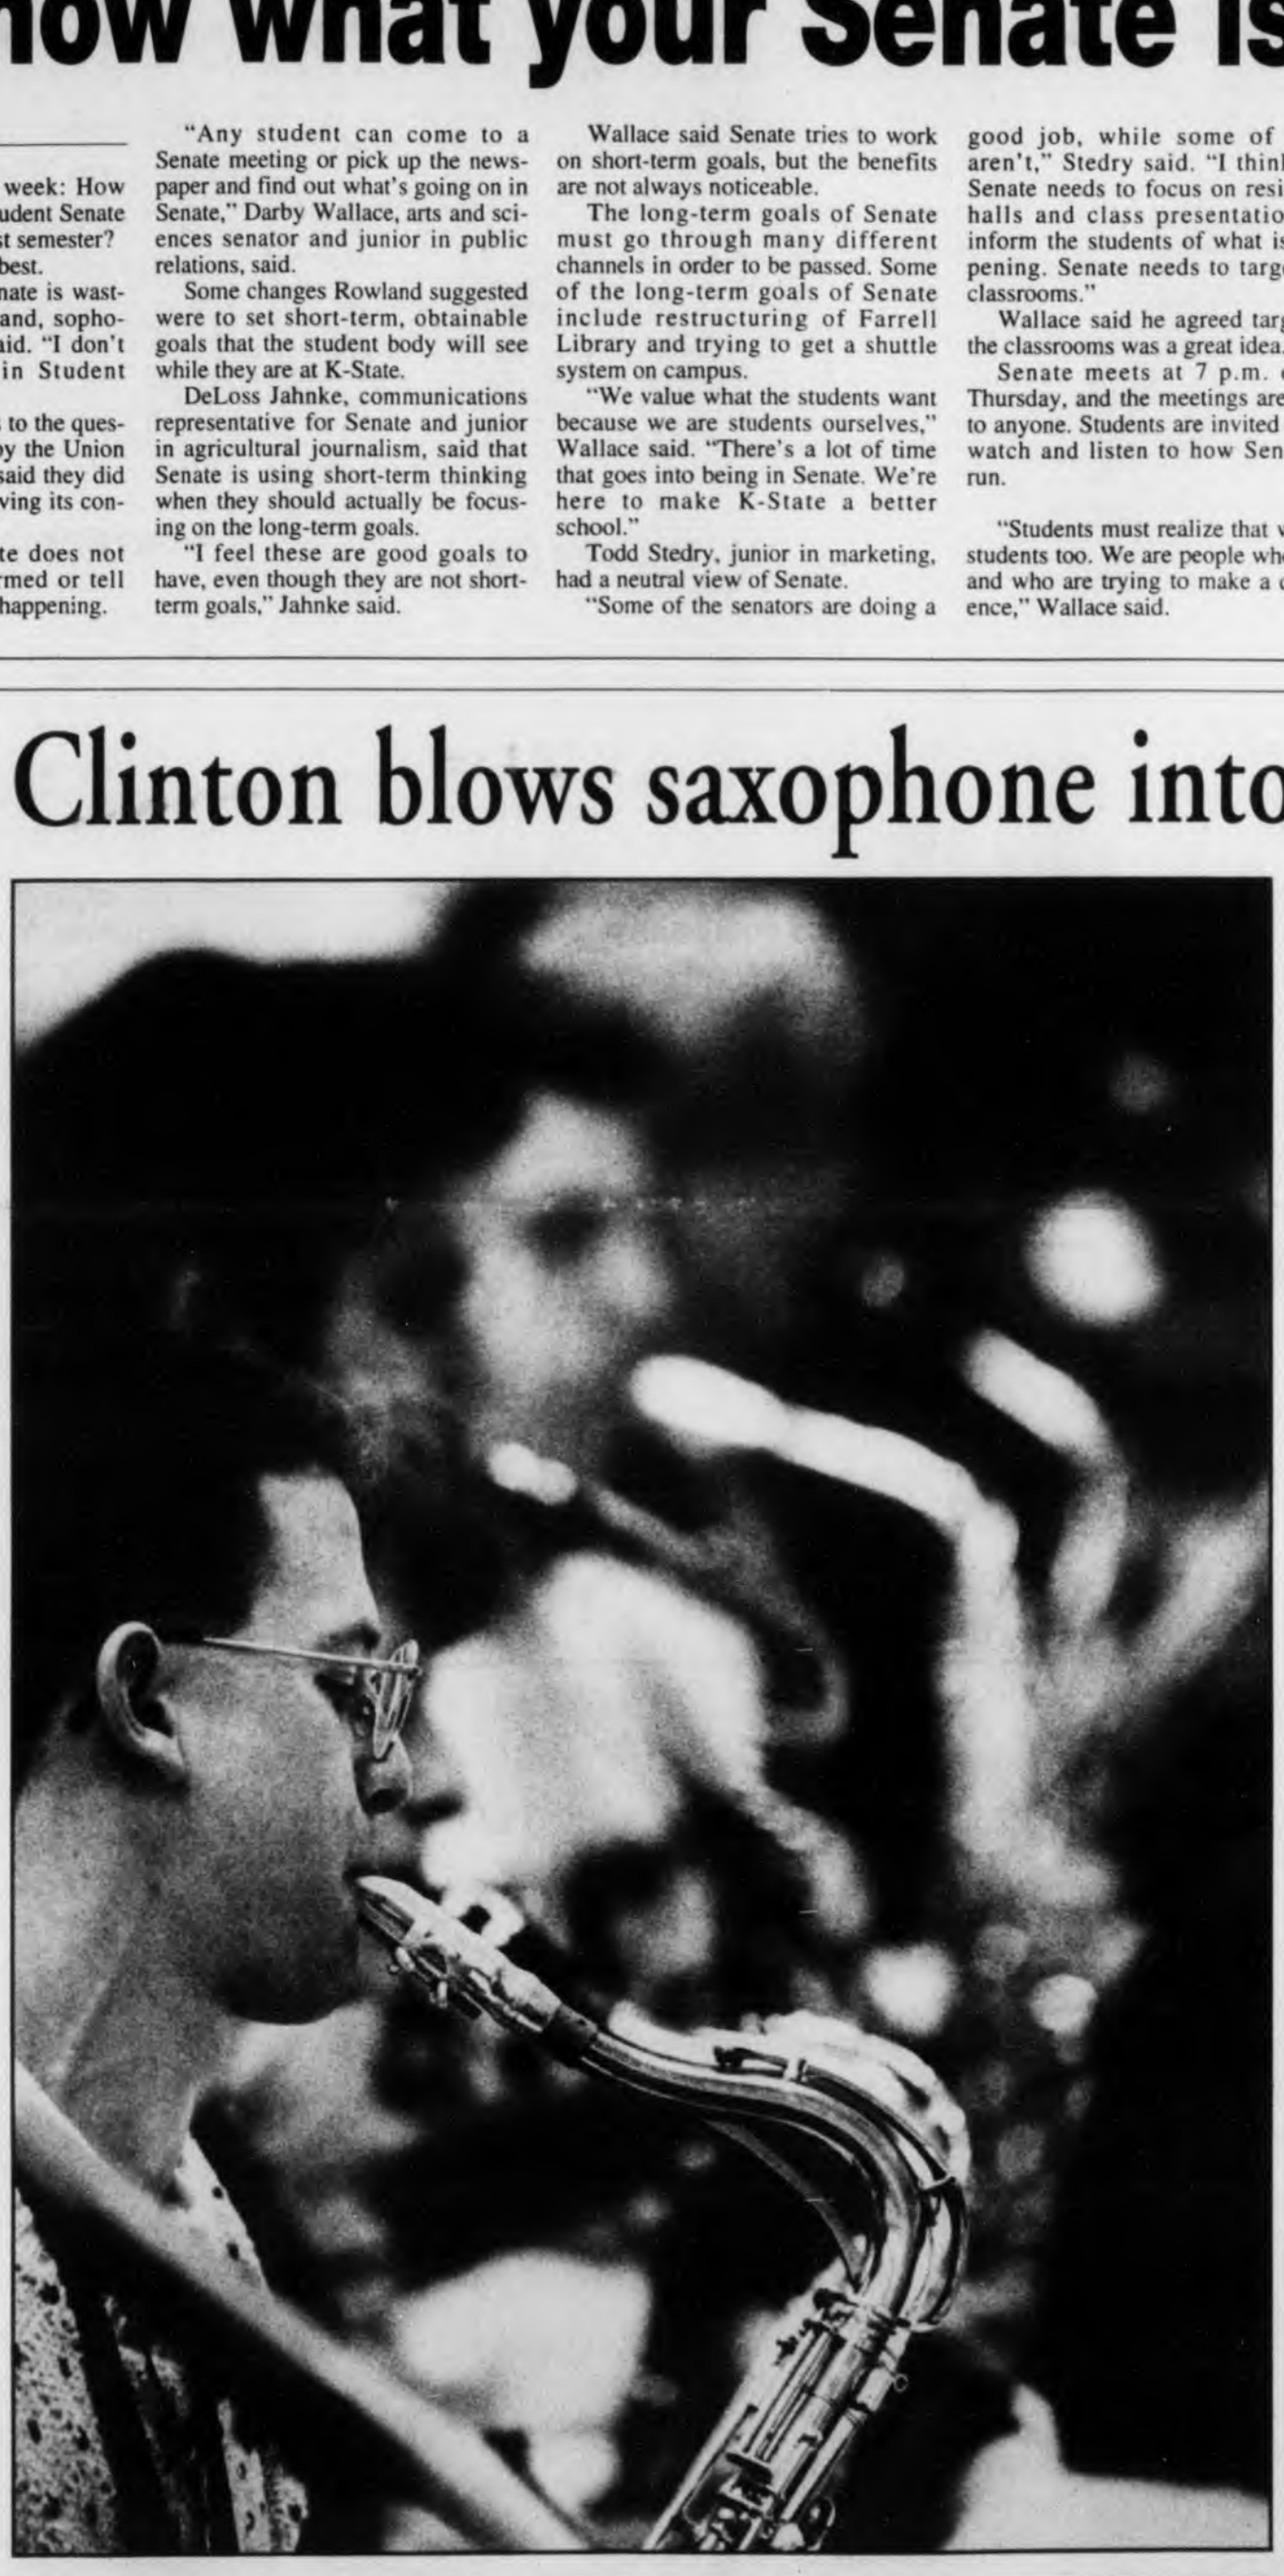
The governor of the state, the president of Altai State and other dignitaries provided a lot of written documentation for the linkage, he said.

"This is great for K-State because it internationalizes our faculty and gives us research connections overseas," Ahern said.

"We at the college of business want to increase cooperation throughout the world," he said. "If at this point in time we are not helping the Russians with their transition period, then the burden will become much greater for the world if they don't make this change."

The idea of teaching business is really foreign to them, Ahern said.

"With communism, you do not teach free marketing, and to survive in a world economy, they have to understand the free-market system," he said.



Ahern said one of the biggest problems with the Russian economy is the inflation rate. It is difficult for Americans to understand hyper-inflation, which is over 2,000 percent, he said.

He said advertising is in the embryonic stages, and that the Russians do not understand it. An advertisement would have no connection with what happened on television and with the company. It is so new they do not have strong goals or objectives, he said.

"After this experience, you get the feeling you could make a difference," Ahern said. "Having a business school over in Russia could really be a positive change for the country. That is important to me."

He said K-State has discussed some future programs with the institute involving Columbia, Paraguay, Mexico and the Netherlands.

Clinton blows saxophone into spotlight

Local retailers hope musical president will boost instrument's sales

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

"Ladies and gentlemen, the Chief of State Club is proud to present the Presidential Seven, featuring Tom Jefferson and Johnny Tyler on violin, Harry Truman and Dick Nixon on piano, 'Silent' Cal Coolidge on harmonica and Warren Harding on cornet.

"And now our feature performer, just finishing up a tour of the continental United States, drumroll please, 'Slick Willie' Clinton on tenor saxophone."

Seven presidents.

That's it, and that's all, folks. Out of the 43 men who have been president of the United States, only seven have played musical instruments. Three of them are not presidents who are talked about a lot.

So some music retailers are trying to capitalize on the fact that President Clinton not only plays an instrument, but plays it publicly.

"I was just at a national trade show, and all the manufacturers were promoting saxophones. They all had Bill Clinton models, from when he was on Arsenio Hall," Blake Blackim, owner of Edgington-Midwest Music in Salina, said.

Clinton played his tenor saxophone on the Arsenio Hall show last July, and also played at some of the inaugural balls in January.

Companies that manufacture saxophones have reported an increase in sales in recent months and cite Clinton's influence, but saxophone fever has yet to hit Kansas.

"We're trying to play on the president, but it hasn't worked so far," Mark Goodnow, Manhattan Pawn Shop employee, said. "You know, we get them, and we sell them. Nothing's really taken off yet."

The owner of another music shop in Manhattan said Clinton hasn't been president long enough to have an influence.

"It's too early to tell," Glenn Axelton, owner of Glenn's Music in Manhattan, said. "I don't think that it will make a difference. But that's just my personal opinion."

Blackim said people in Salina are talking about Clinton and his sax.

"Some people have come in and made comments, but they're not buying yet," Blackim said.

He explained why he thought that was true.

"Saxophone sales are seasonal. In our area of Kansas there's not much pro playing done. The bulk of sales are fifth graders who are just getting into music lessons, and that started in September. Next September, there may be more interest."

An employee at a Topeka pawn shop said he agreed the bulk of the shop's sales is right before school starts, but he said it has had a recent increase in interest in saxes.

"We pretty much sell three months out of the year — June, July and August, right before school starts. But we have had many saxophone lookers from December to now," said Frank Ellis, employee at Capitol City Pawn Shop in Topeka.

The FOX television show, "The Simpsons," also had an influence on sax sales, Blackim said.

"Saxophones have always been popular. There was a surge a few years ago, since Lisa Simpson on the Simpsons plays saxophone."

Folk dance club reborn at K-State

"Folk dancing is simply a wonderful way to come together and meet other people. It is always nice sharing something in common with others."
ENID COCKE
INTERNATIONAL FOLK DANCE CLUB FACULTY SPONSOR

DAVID GROSKO
Collegian

An old club will become new tonight.

Enid Cocke, director of the English language program and faculty sponsor of the International Folk Dance Club, said it actually started out as a class through UFM in the late 1970s.

Since then, the club moved off campus and has stayed together through the years.

"We want to recharge the club by bringing it back to campus," Cocke said.

Paul Weidhaas, club dance instructor, said people should come ready to dance and not be afraid if they are beginners.

"We will be dancing for recreation and hopefully broadening people's horizons on different cultures," Weidhaas said. "I encourage everyone to give folk dancing a try."

He said most of the dancing will be line dances, which does not require a partner. Several different countries will be represented through the dancing.

The club will be teaching American, English, Scotch, Irish, Israeli, Russian, Hungarian and Greek dances, club member Sue Cohen said.

"This style of dancing is a lot of fun, interesting and good exercise," Cohen said.

"Folk dancing is simply a wonderful way to come together and meet other people," Cocke said. "It is always nice sharing something in common with others."

The club is free and open to anyone at K-State. It will meet at 7:30 tonight at Union Station in the K-State Union. If finding a babysitter for children is a problem, she said, people can bring them.

Weidhaas said the club will decide when it will meet on a regular basis. The goal is to meet when best fits into as many schedules as possible.

"We hope to start meeting regularly at least a couple times a month," he said.

¿Habla Español? Satellite sends K-State language lessons to small schools

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

High-school students in 150 high schools spanning 13 states are learning French and Spanish from K-State.

Twice a week, live broadcasts of Spanish I and II and French I are transmitted via satellite to the high schools from the Kansas Regents Educational Communications Center, housed in Bob Dole Hall.

Barbara Newhouse, associate director of academic programs at the ECC, said the schools participating in the program are usually small schools that cannot afford to hire a teacher for foreign language courses.

Newhouse said in states like Kansas, there is a foreign language mandate stating that schools must offer at least two years of foreign language. For small schools, the satellite language program is the most economical way of meeting that mandate.

Nancy Worthington, instructor at the ECC, said once the schools have the transmitter and satellite uplink, which cost about $4,500, the only fee they pay is an annual per-student fee. She said K-State provides the class as a service and does not make a profit from the broadcast.

"We keep the costs as low as possible so it is available to all schools," Newhouse said.

This is the fourth year the Spanish class has been offered and the first year for the French class. Chuck Thorpe teaches the Spanish classes, and Jane Riles teaches French. Both are instructors at the ECC.

The production crews for the shows are made up from mostly former or current K-State students.

"This gives them hands-on experience with state-of-the-art technology, and it gives us people we can depend on every day," Worthington said.

Thorpe and Riles teach the class, but teaching partners are the ones giving the grades. The partners are certified high-school teachers at the school and, in many cases, are learning the language right along with the students, Newhouse said.

"This is not designed to replace the in-class teacher," Newhouse said. "But, there are so many smaller schools, and this allows them to have a foreign language before they go to college and maybe puts them on more of an equal level with students from larger schools."

On the three days the students do not participate in the satellite broadcast, they do other activities planned by Thorpe and Riles, Worthington said.

The class offers everything a traditional class can. A toll-free number the students can call during the broadcast provides interaction between students and teacher. Prepared, computer-generated graphics replace the chalkboard. Visitors from foreign countries are brought in as guests, and cooking demonstrations are even used.

"My whole objective is to have a lot of fun with it," Riles said.

She said when she taught in a classroom, she would use copyrighted material as visual aides, but those cannot be used on the air.

"Everything has to be original. So, it opens up a whole new area of creativity," Riles said. "I like to stretch the technology as much as possible."

The perfect chance to learn

THE ISSUE

The topic of multiculturalism has been stressed by many as the future of America.

WE SUGGEST

All students should take advantage of the events designed to educate about different cultures.

Apathy has been a constant factor on the K-State campus for some time.

Some current events that shouldn't be overlooked, ignored or unattended are the scheduled speakers, movies, and presentations for Black History Month. The theme this year is, "African American Scholars, Leaders, Activists, and Writers."

Most K-State students tend to stay uninvolved in campus affairs. Other tributes and awareness weeks to ethnic heritages attempt to get student involvement, with mixed results.

The time for change has arrived. African-Americans may make up only 3 percent of the K-State student body, but their culture and heritage is as important as any other. It deserves to be experienced.

All types of songs, movies and speeches can be presented, but none of these things can be effective or appreciated unless people are there to see and hear them.

Attending an event doesn't take that much effort — all the events for Black History Month are on campus or close to campus.

A challenge can be made right here and right now. Every K-State student — Caucasian, Native American, African-American, etc. — should make an attempt to attend at least one event on the Black History Month program during February.

Everyone should jump at the opportunity to educate themselves about their own and everyone else's history.

HER STORY OF HIS-STORY

KELLY KLAWONN

"Yet there are moments when the words open into some not yet open space. Then I feel I am stepping into power."
—Minnie Bruce Pratt

For the most part, it has all been their stories. Their world. Through their eyes. I have never been passionate about history before. Maybe because it has all been just that – his-story. I read all the stories about all the men. Their battles. Their victories. Their lives.

I read and learned about their history because it helped to shape my life and my world. All the while, though, I searched for my reflection in the stories, tales and drama of this country's past. But I wasn't there.

American history, as taught in the classrooms of this country, doesn't want to tell my story or my life. Am I so different that my history is a waste of time to those not like me? Where is my reflection? Where is my connection?

I want stories of women working in the factories and of the men who raped them. I want stories of how women were kept from voting until 1920. Not stories of how lucky women were to be granted the right to vote. I want stories of how lesbians and gay men were being subjected to electroshock treatment by the medical establishment in the 1960s, to "cure" their homosexuality.

I never thought much about history growing up. It was just another class. I suppose it was because I didn't know any better. What was taught must be the truth. I mean, she is the teacher. It wasn't until I learned about myself — about who I am — that I realized the need for my history, and I embarked on my search for my past.

When I finally came out as a lesbian I discovered the importance of knowing about the past. It hasn't been just a matter of wanting to know, but needing to know. I and others like me need to learn from past challenges, battles and the growth of our community to show us where we need to go and how to get there.

The first time I went to a women's bookstore (read: lesbian) my life suddenly came alive. Instead of having to slink around a library trying to find a dusty, outdated and biased account of homosexuality, I was surrounded by volumes of books, all with a story to tell. I was amazed to see books displayed in the front window with lesbian or dyke right on the cover. Words that parts of society are too fearful to even say were being showcased for all of the city to see.

From that day on I haven't been able to go to a new city without hitting as many of the women's bookstores as possible. I will discover my past. I will learn the stories of my community.

If it wasn't for books on women's history and the history of gay and lesbian America, all we would have is what the higher powers choose to give us. Until recently that would be almost nothing. A mere smattering of distorted images used to reflect the heterosexuals' interpretation of who we are.

Some people criticize the politically correct dictates of inclusion. Why bother including everything? What does it matter? Why should we — after all these years — change what we previously taught as right, only now to say it is wrong?

Truth.

To describe America is to tell the stories of those who inhabit the country — Americans. An American cannot be described by race, religion, gender or sexual orientation. The story of America should not be based on exclusion either.

The tapestry of the United States is an intricate weave of people, places and events. The majority of my formal education has been based on the people, places and events of heterosexual, white, male America. While it may control the educational system, it doesn't control the past or the future.

I learned your history. Now you learn mine.

▶ GAYS IN MILITARY

Stereotypes won't go away overnight

Editor,

This is in response to your editorial on "Gays have place in military."

Now that we have heard your opinion, why don't you go out on campus and talk to people who have served in the military and who are on active duty at this time and get their opinion?

I spent five years in the Navy as a photographer stationed on board an aircraft carrier, where living conditions were very trying. The main problem people in the military have with gays is being forced to live with them. In the Navy, as in the other services, living conditions are very cramped and privacy is non-existent.

To give you an example of a living space on a ship — take your basic two-person dorm room and put 10 or 12 people in it. There you have a basic living space on a ship.

I saw first hand how people who were thought to be gay were treated. When that person walked into the head to take a shower, people would quickly leave the space.

If gays are admitted into the military, they're going to have to put up with being stereotyped.

After serving my time in the military, I came to the conclusion that the service lifestyle wasn't for me, and how someone could spend 20 to 30 years in it was beyond me.

The question I have for someone who is gay — why would you want to put yourself through the stereotyping and the difficult lifestyle of the military? The patriotic feeling burns off fast and reality does prevail.

I'm a straight guy and don't have a real problem with gays in the military, but believe me, it won't be easy for them.

▶ ALLOWANCES

Academics should be the focus of school

Editor,

Allowances for athletes? What is this all about? In reference to the Jan. 27 front page article, here are just a few of my thoughts.

Correct me if I'm wrong, but these people are student-athletes. You will notice the word "student" appears first because it is supposed to be more important than "athlete." These individuals are attending a university, not working for a professional sports organization, and therefore allowances are wrong.

Athletics are extra-curricular activities, just like chess, debate, competitive speech or computer clubs. I don't hear them yelling for allowances.

The fact that athletes get a free ride to begin with is a crime. Who do you think pays for these individuals to go to school? Half of the tuition that you and I pay each semester goes to fund the sports programs that give out these "athletic" scholarships. This means that you and I are paying for these individuals' education. Which brings me to the question: who pays for ours?

Now they want an allowance. After doing some research, I discovered a full four-year ride for athletics now goes for $55,000. Wow, I wish I had that kind of support. I feel sorry they don't have an allowance. Maybe they will actually have to tap some of their own funds. Boo hoo.

When you graduate, you do so, not with a degree in basketball or football, but with one in an academic area. If we are handing out money, let's hand it out to those who truly deserve it. Those who are here, not with the goal of getting into the NBA or NFL, but to those who will actually make something of their degrees.

▶ RESPONSE

Pedestrian safety is a priority at K-State

Editor,

This letter is in response to the editorial in the Jan. 29 Collegian regarding the safety of pedestrians at the intersection of North Manhattan Avenue and Vattier Street, and traffic congestion at 17th Street and Anderson Avenue.

Approximately two years ago, the Campus Safety Task Force, including students and staff, recognized the need to address pedestrian safety issues. Since that time, the University has worked with the city of Manhattan to improve pedestrian safety on the streets bordering the campus.

The marked pedestrian crosswalks on North Manhattan Avenue, at Thurston Street and at Old Claflin Road, as well as the marked crosswalk on Denison Avenue in the vicinity of Goodnow Hall have been added as a result of those discussions.

We are continuing our efforts to improve pedestrian safety and traffic flow on the city streets adjoining the campus. Representatives of our Department of Public Safety and Facilities Planning Office will review with city officials your suggestion that a marked crosswalk be installed at the intersection of Vattier Street and North Manhattan Avenue, and your concern for traffic congestion at 17th Street and Anderson Avenue.

ED SKOOG

NOTES COMPILED OVER THE TWO-WEEK PERIOD IN WHICH I LOST MY WALLET AND FOUND IT AGAIN.

I'm one of those neurotics whose hand drifts unconsciously to my back pocket every 25.4 seconds to check on my wallet. When I go into a crowd I reinsert my wallet into my front pocket, where I can check on it every 6.5 seconds.

Speaking of which. I lost my wallet two Saturdays ago. And found it yesterday. In the pants I was wearing.

Without a wallet, a billfold; without a parcel of leather folded in my pocket containing identification, money, phone calls, notes — without this thing I was decentered.

THE HISTORY OF LOSING MY WALLET

I lost it two weekends ago, the night I went to a tavern called the Stump in Alta Vista. It was a cold night, the wind picking up throughout. Even in my coat I was cold.

Some time that night I returned to Manhattan. Had a few vodka gimlets with Ms. Cassandra Duveaux at her apartment. At some point I drove my van to my house.

When I woke up my wallet was gone.

I'd like to drop out of school and learn to enjoy television, watch it with the eyes of a child. Learn to drink bloody marys while watching "The Price is Right."

No one quits school until they're close to graduation.

"Maybe Dan Gish has my wallet. Hell, maybe I'm Dan Gish. Without a wallet I can't prove I'm anybody else," I said. Then I found my wallet. The Dan Gish mystery deepens.

Somewhere there's a great big wallet, a Platonic conception of the ideal wallet.

A wallet three thousand feet tall.

It takes 14 minutes for Ragu to boil out of a jar.

I have sat up late into the night watching the screen of my microwave oven. On all settings. Medium low. Thaw. Pre-cook. Very high. Each looks different. Each is amazing in its own way.

"Atom Bomb" Cardwell lived in my house in 1951, according to the city directory. Before that he lived in New Mexico and worked in Los Alamos, learning how to blow up enemy cities.

I do not know if he ever lost his wallet. I imagine he did.

Atom Bomb Cardwell died last year in Tennessee.

I picture Atom Bomb walking down my/his front steps, turning north at the sidewalk and heading toward the corner grocer's. His wallet, surely, was secure in his back pocket.

He was a smart man. There's a building named after him. He carried his groceries under one arm.

Supermarkets are atom bombs. Interstate, multi-global trucking conglomerates are atomic power.

In 1951 there were 35 grocery stores in Manhattan. Last Sunday the Dutch Maid supermarket on 16th Street and Poyntz Avevnue closed.

The aura of the individual has a heart. It's the wallet.

Wallet, from Middle English "walet" a bag for carrying provisions, clothing, etc. on a journey on foot; knapsack.

I didn't know what video clubs I belonged to. What business cards I had accumulated.

I was disenfranchised, a consumer without a consumer group.

Graduation is approaching. Roughly 90 days. I feel like a clearance sale, or the same as cash.

The loss of a wallet in this era of magnetic strips is a kind of sickness. You recover gradually. People express condolences. But you get to feeling better.

REVIEW

1970s band re-released on CD

THOMAS E. PTACEK
Collegian

If you've been browsing through any of the music stores in town recently, you may have noticed several re-releases by an unfamiliar band.

This band is Angel, and thanks to the popularity of compact discs, they're back. In case you're pondering the purchase of one of these re-releases, or simply wondering who Angel is, allow me tell you a little about the band and its newest release, "Angel: An Anthology."

In the liner notes of this compilation, Dave Reynolds of Kerrang!, states that had there been MTV in the 1970s, Angel would have been massive.

If thoughts of an earlier version of Poison are filling your head, don't pass judgment just yet. Poison, it is definitely not. Angel is, however, a band that has been said to be ahead of its time. This description, unfortunately, is much like being told your prospective blind date has "a good personality." It's the kiss of death.

Angel was discovered in 1975 by KISS' Gene Simmons in a Washington, D.C., club.

I first became aware of the band in 1978 when they were opening for Styx on the "Grand Illusion" tour. I had mixed emotions about the band then and still do now.

Angel was voted best new band by Circus magazine in 1976, but just four years later, the dream was over and the group disbanded.

Angel consisted of Frank Dimino, vocals, Punky Meadows, guitar, Barry Brandt, percussions, and the ever-trying-to-score-big, Gregg Giuffria, on keyboards. Mickey Jones provided bass until 1977 until he left the band and was replaced by Felix Robinson.

The anthology opens up with the band's theme song, "Angel." This instrumental evokes visions of early Styx and could also serve as an intro to something on Floyd's, "Dark Side Of The Moon."

The compilation quickly picks up the pace with the next track "Tower." With its Edgar Winteresque keyboard intro and its Rush-like tempo and mood changes, this song establishes itself quickly. It is definitely one of the best tracks here.

Other highlights include "Rock & Rollers," which is a good, straightforward party song complete with unstructured overplay in the guitar solo.

"White Lightning" is perhaps my favorite song on the release. With its funky guitar intro and a vocal delivery that is much like Rod Stewart's, "You're Insane," it comes off as a little different than the rest of the songs.

"Don't Leave Me Lonely" may sound hauntingly familiar to some, as it was somewhat of a hit, but it may just be one of those songs that sounds familiar.

If you've ever wondered what Judas Priest might have sounded like, had Rob Halford recovered from laryngitis and had they added a keyboard player, check out, "Got Love If You Want It."

This compilation also has portions that do not work as well. Although I applaud the inclusion of both "The Winter Song" and "The Christmas Song," both featuring The California Boys Choir, the songs just don't work in this context. And as you listen to "Wild and Hot," you're immediately reminded of Cheap Trick's "Surrender." You then begin to realize how often the band sounds like someone else.

Slow ballads are not this band's forte. Songs like "Flying With Broken Wings" and "Ain't Gonna Eat My Heart Out Anymore" sound forced and overly self-indulgent.

The low point of the release has to be the inclusion of "20th Century Foxes," from the 1980 movie, Foxes, starring Jody Foster. This is a direct attempt at dance music, and it fails miserably unless you like disco.

All in all, "Angel: An Anthology" is a fair representation of Angel's abilities and drawbacks. But if you put this on at a party, most people will probably ask who it is — half of them requesting that you play something else.

I personally find it to be a "must-have" for my collection, but then if I collected cars, I'd be sure to have an Edsel.

Park College handed the K-State men's volleyball team its first home loss of the season Tuesday night.

The Pirates beat K-State three games to one in the match at Ahearn Field House. Park took the first two games 15-9 and 15-9.

The momentum began to swing for K-State in the third game, and K-State won 15-6.

"They did great," K-State co-coach Lori Simpson said of the Wildcats. "They showed a lot of improvement on the floor tonight. They are having a good time and doing what we ask them to do.

"They're having fun, and I'm having fun coaching them."

The final loss came when the Pirates won a close fourth game, 15-12.

"To K-State's credit, they played hard and should of beat us," Park College coach Ronda Miles said. "We were lucky to get out of here with our shorts on. Our passing was mediocre, our blocking was nonexistent, and our communication was almost zero."

The Cats were impressed with the Pirates.

"They were a good solid team, but we were with them in every aspect of the game," club president and middle hitter Kenny Martin said. "You could tell that they have a lot more experience than we do.

"This is only our second year, and these guys are ranked fifth in the NAIA. We were intimidated at first, but we came out, played and hit hard.

"This was the first game of the semester and it was a good season opener. I think we're just warming up for the season," Martin said.

"We did really well," setter Eric Martin said. "Each time we get better and better. We have a lot of talent, and if we keep improving we'll just keep moving up the ladder."

The Cats will see action Feb. 13 at Graceland College in Iowa, but Kenny Martin said he wasn't sure when the next home game will be.

"We are trying to get KU and Nebraska to come play," he said.

▶SUPER BOWL WAS MOST-WATCHED SHOW EVER

NEW YORK (AP) — The Dallas Cowboys, Michael Jackson and NBC teamed up to make the 1993 Super Bowl the most-watched show in television history, giving NBC its first weekly ratings victory in more than six months.

NBC said Tuesday that an estimated 133.4 million people watched the game Sunday. This is about 6.4 million more than watched the 1986 Super Bowl, the previous record-holder, which also was on NBC.

The estimate was based on figures supplied by the A.C. Nielsen Co.

The Super Bowl drew an A.C. Nielsen national rating of 45.1 and a 66 share, the highest marks since CBS did a 45.8 and 66 for the New York Giants-Denver Broncos Super Bowl in 1987.

▶ROYALS AGREE TO TERMS WITH MACFARLANE

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Catcher Mike Macfarlane has agreed to a one-year contract with the Kansas City Royals for the 1993 season, the team announced Tuesday.

Macfarlane, 28, signed for a reported $1.175 million. He had asked for $1.4 million, while the Royals had offered $950,000. He was paid $740,000 last year.

By agreeing to terms, Macfarlane and the Royals avoided salary arbitration.

Macfarlane led the Royals with a career-high 17 home runs and a .445 batting average in 1992. He also was hit by a pitch 15 times, which tied for the league lead and set a club record.

He is a lifetime .251 hitter with 42 home runs.

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Becoming the conference Scrooge of defense has powered the Wildcats to their best start since 1986.

K-State's defensive stinginess is yielding just 65.6 points a game — best in the Big Eight — and has put the Cats in position for their first national ranking in four years.

But now the season's biggest test of that defense will come when the Wildcats play their "Ghost of Blowouts Past" — the No. 16 Oklahoma Sooners.

When the Cats take the court against Oklahoma tonight at 7:35 in Bramlage Coliseum, they will be facing a team that pasted them last year by an average margin of 35 points.

The Sooners' 117-76 win in Bramlage was the first time an opposing team had ever scored 100 points on the Wildcats' home floor. Oklahoma also made 50 field goals, another Bramlage record.

"What do I remember about last year's game?" center Deryl Cunningham said. "I remember a team that gave up — a team that didn't fight."

Cunningham pulled down seven rebounds and scored eight points in last season's game in Manhattan.

"I was really disappointed," he said. "I never played anywhere where we didn't have any pride. After we got down, we accepted it."

K-State hit just two of the team's first 16 shots and never threatened the Sooners, who built a 26-point halftime lead.

The Sooners' pressure defense forced K-State into 23 turnovers, the key statistic that Coach Dana Altman said led to last year's blowout.

"We just didn't handle the ball against them, and the game got going way too fast really quick," he said. "It's just a matter of being strong with the basketball, looking down the floor, and judging when you have a good shot.

"Last year, we didn't make those decisions. We rushed shots, and that only plays into their hands."

While some of the names have changed, Oklahoma's game is the same — the Sooner defense is forcing opponents into 25 turnovers a game.

"Oklahoma's going to be tough," guard Anthony Beane said. "I think they're the most athletic team in the Big Eight.

"I'm real excited, but our team isn't worrying about them right now. If we play our game, we've got a good chance to win. Our defense is going to have to carry us."

All five Sooner starters are averaging more than 14 points a game this season. Oklahoma leads the Big Eight in scoring average with 97.8 points a game, including a 146-65 win over Florida A&M last week.

Jeff Webster and Bryan Sallier, both 6'8", create particular matchup problems for the Cats. Webster is third in the Big Eight in scoring with an 18.2 average, while Sallier leads the conference in rebounding with 10.2 a game.

"Even more than their size, they score so easily," Altman said. "We're going to have to keep their offensive production down, and it's going to put a lot of pressure on us.

"We're going to have to outrebound them, and that's going to be critical. We cannot give them two or three shots at the basket."

With K-State on the threshold of the national rankings, does that give the game added meaning?

"The most important thing is that it's a home conference game, period," Altman said. "That's nice, but I'd rather see our team play well and play hard than be ranked.

"We're in a position now where we can do a lot of good things, but we've got a lot of season left."

Confidence peaked in Temple win

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

K-State's Saturday night victory against Temple did more for the Wildcats than put them in the hunt for an NCAA tournament berth. It showed them that they can play basketball in the second half.

"That's something we had gotten away from," guard Anthony Beane said. "And it let us know that if we put those two halves together, we can really be great."

But complementing a strong first half with an equally strong second half hasn't been easy.

■ Against the Jayhawks, K-State blew an eight-point halftime lead and was outscored by 11 tallies in the final period.

■ The Wildcats led Nevada-Reno 39-35 in the first half, but eventually lost 83-82.

■ And K-State held both LaSalle and Central Connecticut State to 16 first-half points, only to be outscored by both teams in the final half, 43-38 and 40-37.

"It's definitely going to be necessary to turn it up in the second half," Askia Jones said. "We can't let down."

But before the Temple game, letting down in the second half is what the Cats had been doing best.

K-State's first-half shooting percentage was a balmy 50 percent prior to Saturday's 86-63 win. But in the second half, that percentage fell to 44 percent.

The same pattern was true for 3-point shooting — 45 percent in the first half, just 32 percent in the second. Even though the Wildcats had taken just three fewer second-half treys, they had 15 fewer 3-pointers.

"We really have to put two halves together," Jones said.

The victory over Temple just may have been the first step in that direction.

After shooting 42 percent in the first half — and trailing by five points — the Cats turned it up, making 62 percent of their second-half shots. That propelled K-State to a 53-point outburst, and what several Wildcats called the best half of the season.

"That was really important because it showed we had heart," Deryl Cunningham said. "It showed a lot of character on our part.

"And it showed that we can get it done in the second half."

HUNTIN' AND FISHIN'

Pack the rod and hit the road — fishing in Kansas is heating up

The fishing grapevine is a vast and never-ending source of information.

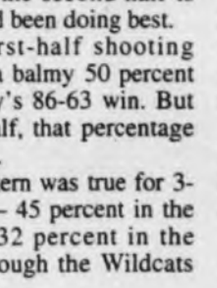
Either you get someone who won't say a word about the fishing, fearful that a bus load of scouts and four troop masters might show up there, or you'll find out where the fish are biting and end up talking about Fred Corn's long-lost aunt from Harvey county.

The fishing seems to be heating up around the state lately.

But you may have to drive an hour or two because the local lakes either haven't begun to pay off, or the ice is rotten.

Two hours west of Manhattan at Waconda Lake — more commonly known as Glen Elder — the fishing seems to be picking up quickly.

Jeff Rader owns and operates Rader Lodge just West of Glen Elder dam.



"The fishing looks good right now," he said. "Some people have been catching large numbers of white bass through the ice."

The weapon of choice for hard-water anglers at Glen Elder has been a silver slab spoon, fished about 20 feet down.

Closer to home, some crappie have been caught through the ice, but they have been small and few.

If you really get anxious, try bouncing one-half to three-quarter ounce jigs off the bottom of the outlet channel. The larger weight jigs keep the jigs down on the bottom, where chances of hooking a walleye will be better on bright days. Tipping the jig with a live minnow will sometimes catch fish, while a plain jig will be ignored.

Twelve to 14 inch crappies have recently been taken at Milford, in Military Cove and Curtis Creek areas. But due to the ice storms and snow the area experienced during the freezing of area lakes, Milford is not a real good place for ice fishing.

RON LACKEY

Chris Clouse, fish hatchery assistant for the Department of Wildlife and Parks, is hesitant about the ice fishing.

"I'd call the bait shops and check before driving over," he said. "We didn't have very good ice to begin with and I think it would be real questionable."

Council Grove is probably your best bet, as they have been producing good numbers of crappie, but they have been small.

Also, don't ignore Council Grove city lake. It's small, but has a great walleye population, and healthy ice has been reported.

Don't tell the folks down in Herington where you heard this, but the city lake there has great walleye fishing. They're protective about their lake, and you will have to buy a special city permit to fish the impoundment.

But it's usually worth the trip and the permit.

You don't need the 90-horse power ice auger, and a battery operated tip up with a siren to get started ice fishing. You can buy a hand-operated Auger for $40, and you'll be in business. I wouldn't recommend the old hatchet method — especially if you're on questionable ice.

Your ultra-light outfit filled with two-pound test can work all right, but buying the shorter ice fishing poles is recommended.

I recommend them not because they catch more fish, but because you will have an uncanny urge to stare into your little hole in the ice.

This is sometimes difficult to do standing at the end of a six foot flippin' stick.

Use small, very small, jigs and spoons. You may want to buy some ice fishing lures made to accommodate small minnows or mealworms. They're inexpensive and catch many different species of fish.

If you haven't tried it, give it a shot before the ice melts.

Nobody thinks about the cold when catching fish.

Tax help available for local residents

Volunteer Income Tax Assistance program offers aid to those in need

NEIL ANDERSON
Collegian

OK, so death and taxes are inevitable.

But while there's not a whole lot that can be done about death, help is available for those who need it with their taxes.

A service in Manhattan that helps those in need of tax advice is the Volunteer Income Tax Assistance program, or VITA.

According to Alma Azuara, junior in finance, VITA serves those who can't afford or don't want to have an accountant do their taxes. The volunteers in the program are, for the most part, students.

Azuara said she joined the program because she enjoys working with numbers and thought it would be interesting.

"I think it will be good experience because you get to work with the general public," Azuara said.

Azuara and about 80 other volunteers had 12 hours of training during two days. Another day was used for volunteers who wanted more advanced training.

The volunteers are taught to handle both state and federal forms. Most people ask for help with the 1040EZ, 1040 and 1040A.

Volunteers are given a current income tax guide, several folders of guidelines and sample problems to assist them.

"We're not experts. We were just trained," Azuara said. "But we have all the information we need and also experienced people to help us."

Scott Walker, senior in accounting, is in his third year coordinating VITA. Walker was one of two students who stepped forward to coordinate VITA two years ago when the previous coordinator left. He has been with VITA since.

Walker said that the IRS helps VITA get set up every year and lets the group run on its own.

"There is a lot of talent in our program," Walker said. "Hopefully, Riley County VITA will be strong this year and in the years to come."

▶LEGISLATORS, CANDIDATES FACE QUERY ABOUT DOLE'S DONATIONS

TOPEKA — Five legislators and four former legislative candidates face questions about the legality of their accepting $7,500 from U.S. Sen. Bob Dole's 1992 re-election campaign.

The state ethics commission's staff said a 1991 law prohibits legislative candidates from accepting money from other candidates' campaign committees. However, an attorney for Dole's 1992 re-election campaign called the interpretation patently absurd.

The legislators who received the money said either they did not know a legal problem existed with accepting the Dole donations, or they received information that they could accept the money. They also said the state's Campaign Finance Act is complex and confusing.

Saxophone retailers hoping Clinton will increase sales

One reason sales might not have taken off is the cost, Blackim said.

"Another deterrent may be that the cheapest saxophone, brand new, costs about $1,000. That's for a student model alto. Tenors can cost more than that," he said.

Music educators are excited at the influence of Clinton, said Phil McFarlin, executive director of the International Association of Jazz Educators.

"It's wonderful, of course," McFarlin said. "It's too early to tell if there's been a direct impact on the number of students playing saxophone or interested in jazz. But due to the high level of jazz in the inauguration and the level it will have in the White House, it will help our cause. Clinton has been very verbal and supportive of the arts.

"President Clinton will have a positive influence on jazz, music education and most probably in the sale of saxophones."

Teen-age gunman enters middle school

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — A teen-age gunman surrendered to police about an hour after entering a middle school near downtown today and forcing the evacuation of several hundred students.

Deputy Police Chief Mike Watson said officers were able to talk the young man into surrendering his weapon without incident.

Police had sealed off several blocks around Allison Middle School after the gunman entered the building during the lunch hour.

A student at the school, 14-year-old Shane Irvin, said he was working in the school office when the young man came in shortly after noon.

The gunman carried what appeared to be a 12-gauge shotgun and wore a black mask, gloves, a headband and some sort of an ammunition belt, Irvin said.

"Surprise," was all the gunman said, according to Irvin.

There were no reports of shots being fired, injuries or hostages.

Shortly after the gunman entered the building, students and teachers were seen running west from the building accompanied by police, witnesses said. They went to an elementary school about a block away, officials said.

"I want my daughter," one woman yelled at a reporter as he tried to tell her she was running right into what police said might be a line of fire.

CAMPUS

Seminar leaders help high school students

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

Upperclassmen at K-State are helping freshmen adjust to college life. These students are student success seminar leaders.

Judy Lynch, associate director of the Academic Assistance Center, said the leaders teach the seminar which combines study and life skills.

People who take the class earn two or three non-degree credit hours. Leaders can also earn three non-degree credit hours.

Lynch said one day a week students learn skills like time management and note-taking. Another day they apply those skills in a general psychology or sociology lab and on another day they attend a math lab. If the students are taking the course for two credits, they attend the study skills lab and either the social science lab or the math lab.

The seminar uses the Becoming a Master Student text, a book marketed by College Survival Inc. and used in 1,500 schools. Lynch said the text was geared toward real life and gave different, interesting and even humorous ideas to help students.

"This course goes beyond just teaching study skills. It shows the students how to take the information and not only apply it to their classes, but to life as well," Lynch said.

Non-traditional students and those who score low on the ACT are recommended for this class, but anyone can take the course.

Originally, lack of money was the reason for using undergraduates as leaders, when the seminar was first offered in 1983.

"At first it was money, but now even if we had money to pay a lot of salaries we would still use the students because it works so well," Lynch said. "They have recently experienced the things these freshmen have experienced, and the students listen more to what they are telling them."

Daryl Peterson, manager of the consulting group at College Survival, said using undergraduates to teach the course was uncommon.

He said he did not know of any other schools using undergraduates as leaders. Usually graduate teaching assistants, academic advisers or full-time faculty teach it, he said.

"Your situation you have there is quite unique. Your group changes every year, and usually it takes several tries to become adept at leading this kind of thing," Peterson said. "But, your program seems to work well. "

Peterson attributed the success of K-State's program to the enthusiasm and interest of the leaders and to the extra credibility the leaders have because they are peers.

There is a tough competition for the leader positions, Lynch said.

She said leaders span all majors and go through an extensive training period.

"Their first day of teaching is really tough, and I try to prepare them, but there is no way they can be totally prepared," Lynch said.

Jocelyn Viterna, sophomore in sociology, was a leader last semester. She said she agrees with Lynch about the first-day jitters.

"On my first day of class I was probably more scared than I have ever been in my life," Viterna said.

Lynch said being a leader is a great learning experience.

"I think the leaders find out a lot about themselves and how they relate to people," she said. "There is no experience quite like being in front of a class."

Viterna said as a leader she improved her own time management and organization skills.

"It is different than your own classes because you can't slack off. You have a lot of people depending on you," Viterna said.

Twenty-two skills seminars are taught in the fall and five in the spring. Once the leaders have taught for a semester, they can continue to teach until they graduate.

ESSENTIALS

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Video nut gets his shell cracked

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have been dating this guy since the beginning of last semester. He is everything I want in a man. He is smart, funny, romantic and extremely good looking.

We had a big fight last weekend. I just found out that he has been showing video tapes of us having sex to his friends. I didn't even know that he was taping us.

I feel betrayed and embarrassed. Even though I am mad at him, I still love him. What should I do?

Anonymous

DEAR ANON,

What should you do? You should dump this loser like a box of rocks.

Any person that would secretly videotape sex with another and then show the tape to friends is not "smart, funny or romantic." You should feel betrayed and embarrassed. He has violated your integrity.

The only thing I'd say to him is "Don't let the front door hit your ass on your way out."

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I am writing to perhaps give some advice to the frustrated Lot Lizard. It's been my experience that the only proper parking etiquette is if there is an open spot somewhere to park in it. If not, circle the lot a couple of times in case someone is just pulling out (which never happens) and then go park over in the lot west of the old stadium (which is affectionately known as "Egypt" to my friends and me).

Don't sit around parking lots in your car with your engine shut off waiting to pounce on a parking spot like some vulture would a rotting piece of flesh. Are you so lazy you can't walk a couple of extra blocks to class? Hell, you probably don't live that far from campus anyway!

And talking about blocked aisles, I suppose your truck, sitting in the middle of the road, doesn't block any! Anyway, how can someone steal something from you that didn't belong to you in the first place? If someone pulls into a spot that has been sitting in front of you for five minutes, but you were too busy reading a book or something to notice, don't get angry with her or him. Instead, slap yourself upside your own head, and try not to feel like a complete moron.

The Intelligent Parker

DEAR INTELLIGENT,

I am inclined to agree with your laissez faire (literally, I'll park where I damn well please) parking ideology. This deregulated approach to parking — reminiscent of parking laws embracing the Reagan administration — certainly favors those with small, fast cars and quick reflexes.

Lot Lizard seems to be supporting a more socialized or Marxist approach to parking, in which available parking spots are shared equally among the commonage.

I doubt that the two of you will ever be able to resolve such deeply rooted ideological differences.

In the meantime, the capitalists who own the parking meters and control the sale of parking permits will have the last laugh — and the best parking spaces.

Until we, the proletariat, rise up and subvert the dominant paradigm (or at least develop a shuttle bus system), there will be no peace in our lots.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Sooners leave Cat-nipped

Several Wildcats earnestly watch Anthony Beane as he attempts his second of two free throws with 3.6 seconds remaining in the game. Beane made both, giving the Cats the victory.

Manhattan celebrates Cats squeaker

WADE SISSON
Collegian

About 100 Wildcat fans gathered at Last Chance Restaurant & Saloon Wednesday night to revel in the moment.

K-State 62, Oklahoma 61.

"I thought it was an awesome game because we beat a nationally ranked team," said Kim Hodge, a former K-State student who now lives in Topeka. "No one thought we were going to do anything this year."

Many of the fans stood around the fire, all talking about one thing — the excitement of the game.

That excitement was evident in the post-victory celebration.

"It was really great," Keri Heller, junior in human development and family studies, said. "The crowd was really in the game, and they really boosted the team's spirit and kept it going."

Joe Beuerlein, a 1985 K-State graduate, also came from Topeka to watch the game.

"This was the most perfect game as far as excitement," he said. "I mean, those last minute free-throws! You couldn't have asked for a better game."

Steve Dickey, a salesman from Lawrence, said he was jubilant, though he was a University of Kansas fan.

"I think it was one hell of a game," he said. "It doesn't matter if it's KU or K-State, as long as they beat Oklahoma."

Marvin Burkett, a Manhattan resident, said he was also impressed by the energy of the fans.

"The crowd was into it," he said. "It was so much better than the KU game. The crowd was on their feet for more than half of the game."

Chaos erupts following win over No. 16 Oklahoma

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Bedlam.

No other word could describe the activity on the Bramlage Coliseum floor just seconds after the Wildcats beat the 16th-ranked Oklahoma Sooners Wednesday night.

The win solidified K-State's second-place standing in the Big Eight and improved its record to 14-3 overall, 4-1 in Big Eight play.

Wildcat guard Anthony Beane hit a pair of free throws with just 3.6 seconds remaining to put K-State up by the 62-61 winning margin.

"Coach tells us it's not how big you are," Beane said. "It's the size of your heart."

And that Wildcat heart — along with many of the nearly 10,000 in attendance — nearly stopped in the waning moments of the game.

The Sooners, now 14-6 overall and 2-3 in the Big Eight, took a one-point lead with just 2:05 to play. Beane's long 3-pointer with 45 seconds left was well off, and Oklahoma got the rebound.

That's when the cardiac overload kicked in.

The scenario: Oklahoma 61, K-State 60. Oklahoma ball with 42 seconds to play. The Wildcats had just three team fouls, meaning that they would have to commit four more before they sent the Sooners to the free-throw line.

Instead, the Cats picked up the four fouls and sent Oklahoma's Terry Evans to the charity stripe.

Evans, a 72-percent free-throw shooter who made all three of his previous free throws, went to the line with 23 left.

"We just had to foul Terry Evans because he was so strong with the basketball," Altman said. "We were just fortunate that he missed that one."

After the Cats' Ron Lucas and Oklahoma's Bryatt Vann fought for the loose ball, Vann knocked it out of bounds.

That set K-State up for its patented late-game heroics.

"When he missed that free throw and we called time-out," Beane said, "right then we felt that we were going to win."

Beane was fouled on the return trip down the court, and his pair of free throws — the only two he shot all night — iced the win.

But the late-game heroism was just one facet of K-State's ninth win in 10 games.

The game pitted the Big Eight's No. 1 defense and No. 8 offense, K-State, against the conference's No. 8 defense and No. 1 offense, Oklahoma.

Something had to give.

The Wildcats held the Sooners — who were averaging 98 points a game — to just 61, their lowest output of the season. Oklahoma's previous low was a 74-point loss against Iowa State.

Only two of Oklahoma's five starters matched their season averages, and the team's leading scorer, Jeff Webster, didn't score. He had been averaging 18 points a game.

And Angelo Hamilton, who tore the Cats apart in the first half with 17 points, scored just two in the final 20 minutes.

"Everything is based on effort," Beane said. "We try to give 110 percent, and good things will happen."

Vincent Jackson's six rebounds led K-State, and the Cats outrebounded the Sooners 32-27.

K-State started the game on fire. The Wildcats jumped out to a 21-8 lead in the first eight minutes of the game and seemed to be riding the momentum generated in the Temple win, in which K-State used a 53-point second half to overcome the Owls.

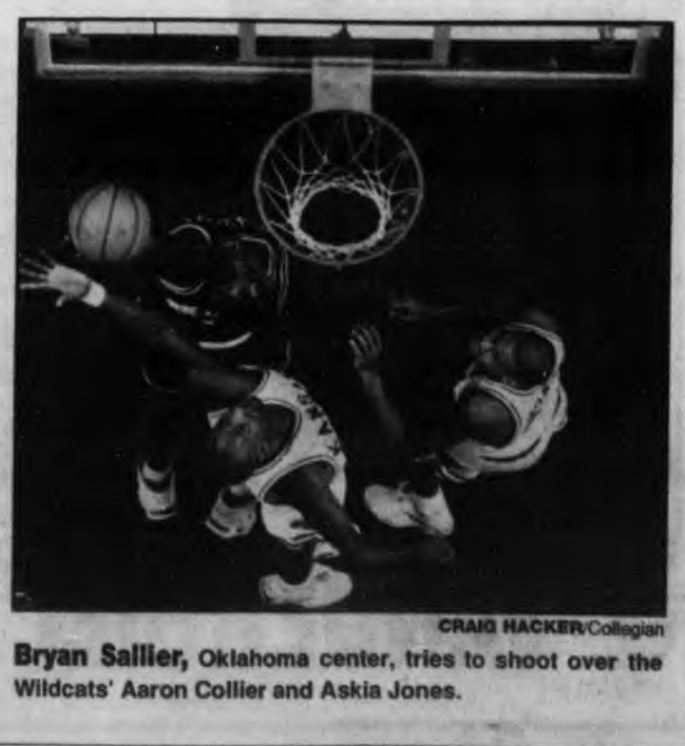
"We made some good decisions out of the blocks," Altman said. "We were making that extra pass and getting the good shot."

Indeed, the Wildcats drilled seven of their first eight attempts, including both of their 3-pointers.

Oklahoma, meanwhile, started the game by missing each of its first seven shots.

But then the Sooners rattled off a 21-8 run of its own, and K-State seemed destined for another second-half letdown.

That second-half, though, took on a much slower pace, and the Wildcats were able to keep the Sooners from putting together a run.



"The pace of the game in the second half was more to our liking," Altman said. "I thought it became more of a defensive struggle.

"The first half was really an exhausting pace."

The game was the sixth for K-State that was decided by two points or less. The Wildcats have won five of those games.

"Coach says the toughest team wins," Lucas said. "I looked up at the clock and saw there were 40 seconds left, and we're down by one. I kept saying to myself, we have to find a way. We have to find a way.

"We found a way."

K-State graduates Randall and Elizabeth Hill have established a trust that will provide a professorship and a student scholarship.

Gordon Dowell, director of publications for the KSU Foundation, said the funds will endow the Randall Hill Professorship in Sociology and the Donald R. Hill Political Science Scholarship.

The gift will be managed by the Foundation, the University's official fund-raising arm.

The trust was created from the proceeds of investment income worth nearly $99,000, Dowell said. The funds will continue to support the Hills for the rest of their lives and then will be transferred to the Foundation.

Randall Hill received his master's degree in sociology from K-State in 1927. In 1929, after earning a doctoral degree in sociology at the University of Missouri, he became an associate professor of sociology at K-State. Elizabeth Hill is a 1927 K-State human ecology graduate. The Hills currently reside in Topeka.

"I have been associated with and benefited from Kansas State University many years, first as a student and then on the staff of sociology for nearly 40 years," Randall Hill said. "I have been very encouraged by the University's growth and the achievement of its students and faculty in the last several years."

Martin Ottenheimer, head of the Department of Sociology, said he appreciates the contribution.

"Dr. Hill, who was the first sociologist hired at K-State when sociology was in the department of economics, has made a wonderful contribution to the department," Ottenheimer said.

The Hill family's association with K-State does not end with Randall and Elizabeth. Two of the Hill's sons, now deceased, were K-State graduates. Also, grandson John Hill represents the third generation to attend K-State.

KSU KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY CONFERENCE
Principal-Counselor-Student

The Office of Admissions cordially invites former students of these high schools to attend the 1993 Principal-Counselor-Student Conference. High school principals and counselors will be on campus to visit with you about your preparation for and experiences in KSU Academic programs. Your participation will help the University build a stronger relationship with your former high school faculty.

You are welcome to drop by between 10:15 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. on Thursday, Feb. 18. This is an excellent opportunity for you to renew old friendships with former classmates. The Provost has asked that your instructors excuse you from these class periods.

Sorority donates stuffed animals to local school

Goal of Alpha Xi Delta to enhance library image

DAVID GROSKO

The Alpha Xi Delta sorority donated stuffed animals for the library at Woodrow Wilson School.

The donation was made by Jennifer Butner, junior in apparel textile marketing and president of Alpha Xi Delta, and Tricia Lackey, freshman in pre-medicine, in an effort to enhance the image of the library to the children.

"We received a letter from Woodrow Wilson School about their library idea and suggestion for teddy bears," Butner said. "We then asked everyone in the house to bring from home or buy a teddy bear."

She said the sorority ended up collecting a variety of stuffed animals.

Oceana Wright, principal of Woodrow Wilson, said the school wants to make the library more user-friendly as they restructure it. This idea has been successful at Ogden Elementary School.

"The image we want to create is the library is a neat place to go and fun place to read," Wright said. "In the future, children will be excited to use the library."

The target of this effort is aimed at the primary children, she said. The older children are already in the library doing research papers and projects.

"We want stuffed animals everywhere in the library. This way, a child can hold an animal while he or she reads," Wright said.

She said the animals are simply an incentive to read and spend time in the library.

"We have discussed an idea where a child can adopt a stuffed animal, name it and then come visit the animal every time he or she visits the library.

"We at Woodrow Wilson are all very appreciative of the sorority donating the stuffed animals,"Wright said.

Molly Burton, sophomore in history and philanthropy chairman of Alpha Xi Delta, said collecting teddy bears was easy because they represent Alpha Xi's symbol.

"Our national philanthropy, Choose Children, is based around children. So, we are always more than willing to help children anyway we can," Burton said.

She said this is just one of the philanthropy projects planned by the sorority for this semester.

BELOW: Anspach's class listens as librarian Leanora Carney reads a story from the book "Penrod's Picture." Although donation of stuffed animals was recently received from the Alpha Xi Delta sorority, Carney said the school has received animals, many homemade, from teachers and parents for a few years.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Senators can't ignore citizens

THE ISSUE

Some state legislators are disregarding their constituents opinions because of the way they were expressed.

WE SUGGEST

All legislators should be open to the voice of each citizen they represent, regardless how they express their opinions.

It should be a safe assumption that when citizens contact their representatives in government, their views will be taken into account.

Yet, Senate president Bud Burke, R-Olathe, and House Speaker Bob Miller, R-Wellington, have recently made statements that suggest that neither they nor their colleagues are paying much attention to a current lobbying blitz that includes preprinted postcards signed by their constituents.

The whole issue revolves around a proposed constitutional amendment that would allow casino gambling in Kansas City, Kan.

The Woodlands, a dog and horse racing track in Kansas City, has organized a massive media campaign in order to pass the amendment. The racing complex makes the postage-paid postcards available to people who attend the races. The cards can then be simply signed and mailed in.

"I've got a couple, 300 of them," said Miller. "I don't even look at them."

Burke said most legislators don't pay much attention to lobbying campaigns such as this.

"It's not particularly effective," he said. "If they want to help the post office, that's fine with me."

While it is obvious that the entire campaign is being orchestrated by the Woodlands for it's own interest, the fact remains that, in essence, constituents are speaking to their representatives and are being ignored.

Regardless of the issue, be it gambling or deciding on the state insect, and regardless of who is behind the push, racetrack or temperance club, legislators have a strict duty to listen to each and every citizen they were elected to serve.

Editor,

I would like to thank the Collegian and friends of Scott Sanders for the articles in the Jan. 26 Collegian.

We will be forever grateful to all the friends and to the community for all the support through this horrible tragedy. Scott was indeed a wonderful, caring person and was loved deeply by everyone who knew him. He will live in our hearts forever.

▶ ALLOWANCES

Strength of mind and body is noble

Editor,

Regarding the Collegian's recent article and subsequent letters on whether or not athletes deserve allowances, I have a few simple remarks to make.

Any student who is willing to develop both intellectual skills and physical prowess while in the collegiate environment deserves special treatment. Yes, the emphasis is placed on academics at the university level, but that is mainly due to modern ignorance regarding the classical tradition of excellence in all pursuits.

The body should be developed and cultivated along with the mind in order to enjoy a disciplined character and establish life-long, healthful habits. Ignoring physical achievements and development in the athlete is an affront to the classical tradition.

Indeed, the athlete who also maintains academic requirements should be doubly admired and rewarded, for he exemplifies "the best" the educational process and the university have to offer.

Allowances for athletes? You bet.

Mary Hull
Graduate student/Speech

▶ ABORTION

Posters depict an unsettling reality

Editor,

Did you see the posters at that Right to Life table Friday? I was appalled by them. I was so appalled by the pictures that I was one who put them up.

So often we mask the horrors of abortion instead of showing the reality and the consequences of that choice. I put the pictures up in the same fashion that high-school teachers would show their students Nazi holocaust footage. They don't show it to emotionally manipulate their students but rather to show that the holocaust was an evil so inexplicable that words alone could not accurately describe it.

The table was set up to be informational. It included pamphlets, pictorial brochures, and political information. Those who were sitting at the table were willing to listen to arguments, answer questions and discuss the reason behind the pictures. There was never any intent to exploit dead babies. The babies seen on the posters, if they result in the birth of other babies, did not die in vain.

Kristi Schwartz
Junior/Pre-forestry

Editor,

While at the Right to Life table Friday, I discussed with several people the reasons why we had pictures of aborted children.

It saddens me to think that people feel we are exploiting these babies — that was not the purpose at all. Thousands of women are daily entering the abortion mills across the country without knowing the facts.

Girls who aren't even able to drive are making decisions about life and death, and they aren't even told the truth. No one takes time to explain the process of abortion that is going to be performed on her body. And too many people deny the effects, both physical and mental, on girls and women who have abortions.

Students for the Right to Life set up their table to make information available to anyone who has a question about abortion. Everyone who worked at the table was not only well informed but also willing to answer any questions or concerns that were brought up.

I am very pleased with the outcome of the SRL table. I think women need to have the right to know the facts before they make their choices.

TOLES

Military ban lacks evidence

BRAD SEABOURN

The president's executive order removal of the Pentagon ban was not a popular decision. Ending discrimination by one group (usually the majority) against another (usually the minority) never is, largely because such practice provides feelings of superiority and righteousness. Not to mention political, social and economic advantages to the group doing the discriminating.

Yet, the military was ordered to treat all Americans as equals.

The top brass, including the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, said it would undermine "morale" and "discipline." To force soldiers to associate in close quarters with these people would not be possible. The great macho, male, American, fighting machine would cease to exist. Pack up the bombs. Throw away the tanks. Everybody go home.

The year was 1948, and the President's name was Harry Truman. The military ban, at that time, was against African Americans.

The process was repeated when women were integrated into the military. The same absurd reason, undermining morale and discipline, was again given.

And now, we are once again faced with the same response to lifting the ban against homosexual Americans serving in the military.

So where is the evidence?

Where is the evidence that armed forces cannot perform effectively with homosexual soldiers fighting alongside heterosexual soldiers? Where are all the wreckages of sunken battleships as a result of homosexual sailors undermining morale and discipline? Where are all the soldiers, dead because homosexual infantrymen were smooching in the trenches when they should have been blasting away at the enemy? Where are all the aircraft, lost because a homosexual pilot and navigator could not control their lust while flying piggy-back together in the same cockpit?

Many U.S. allies allow homosexuals to serve in the military: Great Britain, Israel, the Netherlands, Italy, Australia, Denmark, France, Germany, and most recently, Canada, to name a few. They apparently have little, if any, problems.

So, why is there such an aversion here in the United States to giving equal status to homosexuals? It is obviously not because there is proof it would undermine the effectiveness of our armed forces.

While Washington, the epicenter of wasted energy and political absurdities, debates the issue, I decided to pose this question to the eminent and knowledgeable Dr. Yoohoo Yahoo, professor of Yahoo-ism at Yahoo University, and founder of the Church of Holy Rolling Yahoos.

"It's obvious schtupid ... it's written in the Holy Book of Yahoo."

You mean there is a book that speaks of such things?

"Ya, ya, sure. The Holy Book of Yahoo has all sorts of rules on sex. You think the Supreme Yahoo is going to waste his time explaining schtuff like abortion, environmental pollution, genetic engineering, or mercy killing? Ha!

"Take, for instance, the Sacred Rule Against Gonad Grabbing, Deuteronomy 25:11-12; 'If two men, a man and his countryman, are struggling together, and the wife of one comes near to deliver her husband from the hand of the one who is striking him, and puts out her hand and seizes his genitals, then you shall cut off her hand; you shall not show pity.'

Cut off her hand just for trying to help her husband? You can't be serious.

I guess that explains it. But is there anything written specifically about the practice of homosexuality?

"Ya, ya, sure ... homosexuality, bestiality, adultery, wet dreams, castration, incest, after-birth, hemorrhoids, you name it and the Supreme Yahoo talks about it. One place is in Leviticus 18:22: 'You shall not lie with a male as one lies with a female; it is an abomination.' Of course, you should always tell the truth and not lie at all, but we will save that discussion for another time.

"And then in verse 23: 'Neither shall thou lie with any beast to defile thyself therewith: neither shall any woman stand before a beast to lie down thereto: it is confusion.' Confusion? I'll say. You should see what it does to a herd of buffalo.'"

Dr. Yahoo, I must ask — is there anything in the gospels about homosexuality?

"Are you kidding? Do you think the Son of Yahoo wanted to risk offending all those disciples he hung around with?

You are not suggesting ...

"Long hair, loose clothes, sandals, and no women among the chosen 12 ... what would you conclude from such unnatural behavior?"

That they were an early rock 'n' roll band?

"Maybe. But let me tell you this, there isn't a military recruiter in the country that would even let them in the front door, let alone join."

The story of life

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

The movie of my life opens with the 28-year-old me driving into the sun on K-177 in a green 1968 Ford Mustang on a 50-degree afternoon with the snow melted from the southern side of the Flint Hills. The opening credits roll. Neil Young plays "Thrasher." I drive.

The camera follows me from an unnamed dangerous place. I have not shaved. My hair is not thinning. My 172 has no fat. The Council Grove Reservoir is thawing. The sky, blue, is not clouding up.

The rest of the screenplay is fuzzy in my mind now. Perhaps sometime during the big reunion I meet up with the Homecoming Queen who I used to love, but because of a crime, maybe a murder, fate conspired against us. There is then a car chase based on mistaken guilt, and I save the Homecoming Queen from a gun-toting husband of mediocrity.

We kiss, fade to black. Credits roll. More Neil Young.

I imagine this driving to the town of my high school, headphones playing "Rust Never Sleeps" and me not paying attention to my speed.

"What are you doing now?" asks my old coworker in the dining area of Tom's Drive In.

Going to school, I say.

"K-State?" she asks.

I nod, yeah.

"Did you know that kid they killed?"

No, I tell her, I did not know Scott Sanders. That Scott Sanders was a freshman in mechanical engineering at K-State. I had only heard of him after he was gone, after he had been stabbed several times the Saturday before last on the highway near the frozen Council Grove Reservoir.

Do you know the kid who they think killed him? I ask her.

"Yeah," she says. "He was out here this weekend."

You mean last weekend? I ask, correcting her.

"No," she says. "Saturday. Out there in the parking lot."

I eat my fries.

"You ask me," she says, "you kill someone, you should be in jail."

Another patron agrees and talks while I look out the window to the parking lot where we stopped our cruising once to watch a fistfight that forcibly ended in handshakes.

"... ever know the whole story," I hear.

What's that? I ask

"I said," she says, "there's so many rumors and stories going around that I doubt we'll ever know what really happened."

Driving back to Manhattan, this is when I notice there is no snow on the south side of the Flint Hills. I think that most of my movie life would be true. I was too skinny, though, to have been a tough guy, leading-man-type rebel in high school.

At 24, my weight is flabby, in the gut at least. In four months, I am set to marry the Homecoming Queen, perhaps to become the gun-toting husband of mediocrity.

There is death, but I know neither the college student who was killed a week and a half ago nor the high-school student who was arrested for the murder in the town of my high school.

Down by an old fishing hole, I try to find some connection; how something in the past has caught up with the present. A past and present that is both mine and no one's. There is nothing.

Nothing but a boy nearly a man looking at a future in prison and a man who was just a boy the other day dead.

And there is nothing but me, listening to the soundtrack of my life, traveling the road between two places I know.

Painting is researcher's frustration vent

"Painting helps me forget everything. Whenever I feel frustrated, I get the frustrations out by painting."

NANDIGMA KRISHNAMACHARY

JARED SAVAGE
Collegian

Nandigama Krishnamachary originally did not come to the United States to paint pictures. Far from it.

After completing his doctorate in biochemistry at the Indian Institute of Science in Bangalore, India, focusing on membrane proteins, Krishnamachary came to the United States in 1987 to further his study at American universities.

He spent time researching at the University of Virginia and Temple University before coming to K-State in January of 1991.

But his journey to America did more than further his desire to conquer leukemia. It reignited an interest in painting that hadn't been there for 20 years.

"I used to do watercolor paintings in school, mostly doing portraits and general things," Krishnamachary said. "But when I got to college, I had to stop for financial reasons."

The high cost of painting materials forced him to discontinue his primary hobby in 1971.

Upon arriving in the United States in 1988, Krishnamachary, at the suggestion of his wife, began to take up the brush and begin anew a hobby that he's had no formal schooling in.

"I didn't think of really doing it until my wife suggested it," he said. "She's my best critic, always making suggestions and giving inspiration."

Included among his works are a number of paintings of various parts of Oregon, a depiction of the east side of K-State's Anderson Hall, a number of imaginary landscapes and a rendition of Mark Twain.

"All of Mark Twain's works have been translated into my native tongue, Telugu. As a child I read 'The Adventures of Tom Sawyer,'" he said. "My wife later introduced me to read him, and I painted a picture of him for her."

The oil-on-canvas piece depicts Twain lying in bed while writing about the coincidence of being born and dying with the appearance of Halley's Comet.

"It took 60 hours because it's oil on canvas, and you must wait for the oil to dry before you can add over what's already been painted," Krishnamachary said. "I paid note to the details. The hardest part is to get the exact features correct."

Like many hobbies, painting is the primary way Krishnamachary relaxes.

"Painting helps me forget everything. Whenever I feel frustrated, I get the frustrations out by painting. It's very rewarding, and I never get tired of this work," he said.

The demands of research keep Krishnamachary's painting time confined to the weekends. He can only produce about one major work per year because of his current work with Professor Melvin Center on a protein that will make cells resistant to leukemia.

When the time is available, though, Krishnamachary experiments with different styles of painting.

"I also do wet-on-wet, which only takes a few hours. It's more of a representation," he said.

He gets many of his ideas from watching painting shows on television.

"Alexander on PBS gave me the idea for wet-on-wet," he said.

Krishnamachary said he would like to have his work displayed on campus. He plans to do more works on familiar landscapes around Manhattan to raise interest in what he does.

"I'd like to present the picture of Anderson Hall to the University. Maybe have some works displayed elsewhere. But I'm really not sure how to go about it," he said.

The summertime is when he expects to do the majority of his works so that he can walk around campus and get ideas.

Even if this doesn't happen, Krishnamachary plans to keep on painting.

"Frustration is a part of life," he said. "Through painting I get relief from tension. That's why I do it."

Teen gunman forces schools to think safety

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Security procedures have been increased at schools this year, but more stringent measures can't guarantee the prevention of a violent episode, a school official said Thursday.

School board members have discussed the possibility of locking all outside doors but one.

"You could have a security guard at that front door. What's to say someone isn't going to come in and shoot the guard, and then walk on by and keep shooting?" Paul Longhofer, assistant schools superintendent, said.

"If someone is bent on doing something like that, unfortunately there isn't any level of security that can be provided to stop it."

On Tuesday, Nick Phillips, a 14-year-old Allison Middle School student, walked into the school office carrying a loaded shotgun, a backpack containing a loaded revolver and extra ammunition. He was being held by police Wednesday pending the filing of formal charges.

Although the school was safely evacuated, and Phillips surrendered without ever pointing the weapons at anyone, parents were expected to press the school board for assurances schools are safe.

Ordinance will counteract Colorado's Amendment 2

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TELLURIDE, Colo. — In the first municipal counterattack on Amendment 2, voters in this mountain resort approved an anti-discrimination ordinance that includes protection clauses for homosexuals.

Telluride, with a 484-151 vote Tuesday, outlawed discrimination in housing, employment and public services based on sexual orientation, race, gender, religion and other categories.

The measure directly opposes Amendment 2, which prohibits state or local laws that protect gays from discrimination.

The Amendment, approved by Colorado voters Nov. 3, was suspended by a Denver judge last month pending the outcome of a court challenge .

Telluride's new ordinance would be nullified if Amendment 2 is upheld.

Telluride and surrounding San Miguel County voted heavily against Amendment 2, as did most Colorado counties that rely heavily on income from ski tourism. Gay activists have called a boycott of the state to protest the Amendment.

Voters in Denver and Boulder counties also opposed the amendment.

The Telluride law will not only protect residents from bias, but will send the message that Telluride welcomes all visitors, said Zeb Landsman, an attorney who drafted the ordinance.

'I don't give a shit how good they are'

Tubbs vents frustration after 1-point loss

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

In the aftermath of K-State's victory over No. 16 Oklahoma, Sooner coach Billy Tubbs left the Wildcats plenty of motivation for the rematch.

"We're going to beat the hell out of them in Norman — mark that down," Tubbs said.

"I don't give a shit how good they are, OK?"

Tubbs' post-game comments centered primarily on the officiating. The Sooners saw a 61-58 lead with 2:42 remaining in the game turn into a one-point Wildcat victory.

K-State trailed by one when Wildcat guard Anthony Beane missed a three-point shot with 48 seconds left. Oklahoma rebounded Beane's miss with less than 45 seconds remaining in the game, forcing K-State to foul to regain possession.

But the Wildcats, who had only two team fouls in the second half, had to foul Oklahoma four different times to get the Sooners to the free throw line before time expired.

"It's amazing," Tubbs said. "They pick up four fouls in 40 seconds but only two in 19 minutes. We have a rule called the intentional foul rule."

Sooner guard Terry Evans was fouled by Cat forward Ron Lucas with 23 seconds left. Evans missed the first free throw, and the ball was batted around until it went out of bounds to K-State.

"I'm not supposed to explain it," Tubbs said of the officiating. "You better ask them. I'm not allowed to say anything about it."

Tubbs also had no complimentary remarks about K-State's defensive effort. The Sooners were held to 43 percent shooting in the game, including a 15.4 percent mark from 3-point range.

Oklahoma guard Angelo Hamilton, who scored 17 in the first half, was held to one field goal in the second.

"Well, Askia Jones had a bunch in the first half, and we pretty much shut him down too, didn't we?" Tubbs said.

Jones, who led K-State with 17 points, said that Tubbs' prediction of a beating in Norman didn't bother him.

"We'll see. That game is awhile. So we're not going to worry about it right now."

Other K-State players had their own comments about Tubbs' post-game remarks.

"Billy Tubbs can say what he wants to say," Wildcat forward Aaron Collier said. "But we're going to stay focused as a team.

"That's going to be a motivator. We're going to want to prove a point."

Guard Anthony Beane, who hit the winning free throws with 3.6 seconds left, said that the Wildcats need to remain focused on their goals.

"We're just going to continue to work hard, and we're going to go down to Norman thinking the same thing is going to happen again," he said.

"We're going to find a way to win."

Forward Vincent Jackson said that he is already looking ahead to the nationally televised Monday night match-up with Missouri.

"We won, and we beat Oklahoma here. So when its time to go to Oklahoma, we'll think about it," he said.

"But now it's time to play Mizzou."

"We're going to beat the hell out of them in Norman — mark that down."

Victory over Sooners spurns thoughts of Top 25 ranking

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Wednesday night's win was the ninth in the last 10 games for K-State.

The Wildcats now have a stranglehold on second place in the Big Eight — regardless of what happens Monday night against Missouri.

And K-State is off to its best start in Big Eight play since the 1987-88 team started off 5-0. That team went to the NCAA Final Eight.

"This was a game we needed to stay in the thick of things," head coach Dana Altman said. "It was very gratifying."

But don't expect the win — and the imminent berth in the Associated Press Top 25 — to go to the Wildcats' heads.

"I think it's nice for our fans, maybe nice for some of the people at K-State," Altman said. "But right now, it has no relevance to us."

Indeed, Altman maintains that this team can't look past anybody.

"We've got nine conference games to play. This was an important win for us, and now we just have to continue to play."

And several of the Wildcats reiterated the same point.

"A ranking would be nice," Anthony Beane said. "It would be a confidence builder.

"But as Coach says, we just need to keep working hard. We may not be as quick as other teams, we may not be as tall, but we're tougher."

And Ron Lucas said that K-State can't afford to get too comfortable.

"There's still a lot of time for other teams to try to catch up," he said. "The only thing we have to do is try to get better and better.

But a confident No. 2.

"We won a really big game," senior Aaron Collier said. "This just tells us that we have the capability to beat anybody."

Beane clutches up at stripe

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Cool hand Anthony Beane came through once again last night, at Bramlage Coliseum against the Oklahoma Sooners.

And even though the starting point guard scored just 7 points, 4 of them came within the final two minutes, including two free throws with 3.6 seconds to play.

Beane

Coach Dana Altman called a timeout to run a play for Beane to drive down the floor after Terry Evans' missed free throw went out of bounds with 20 seconds left.

Altman's play had been to drive to the basket and look for the best shot.

"When we called the timeout, we were going to get the ball in any way we could," Altman said. "We would get it to Anthony.

"He was going to penetrate, and if someone stepped to help, he was to kick it. If not, he was to take the shot."

Beane followed through.

"I was just taking it to the hole aggressively, wishing for the best," Beane said.

Beane drove, but his shot was blocked by Angelo Hamilton. The ball went free, creating a ruckus on the court.

"The only thing on my mind was getting the ball back," he said.

Beane did.

On his second shot, he was fouled by Hamilton.

And Altman said that he felt pretty good it was Beane at the line.

"I had been teasing him that my sister could shoot better than him," Altman said of Beane's 66 percentage from the charity stripe.

"But when he got fouled, he looked over and let me know that everything was all right."

Beane drained both.

"He's Mr. Clutch," Deryl Cunningham said. "I knew he could do it."

"When he went to the line, I knew he was going to make it," Vincent Jackson said.

"Heart and soul — just heart and soul," assistant coach Pete Hermann said. "He refuses to give in to adversity."

And Beane himself said that he was all right when he went to the line.

"I knew if I just settled down and relaxed myself, I'd be O.K.," he said. "I wasn't nervous. On the first one, I was a little bit jittery, but I was 100 percent relaxed."

Both of Beane's shots hit nothing but net, putting the Cats ahead by one.

This season, Beane has played a part at the end of five K-State games. In the Ohio game, he stole the ball with 30 seconds left, leading to a Cunningham layup to tie the game.

He made 3-pointers at the end of regulation in both the Cal-Santa Barbara and Oklahoma State wins, and hit three late free throws to secure a win at Nebraska.

"That's when I'm more focused," he said of his last-minute heroics. "Everything is blocked out. The only thing I'm really concentrating on is the court and the team."

But Altman said Beane's attributes extend beyond the court.

"He's a gamer," he said. "He's a fine young man, and I'm not only talking about on the basketball court. I think people that know him know it goes a lot deeper than that.

"And at the clutch, he's delivered for us."

Puma sightings catch locals' attention

RON LACKEY
Collegian

Pottawatomie County residents have recently reported several sightings of pumas, an animal not native to the Midwest.

Pumas were reportedly seen several times last semester, said Lynn Pugh, who lives north of Wamego. Most of the sightings have been in the vicinity of Highway 99 and Broderick Road, about seven miles north of Wamego.

Another Pottawatomie County resident, Leroy Jackson, said he saw a puma as he was driving home from work one night.

"It was right about sunset, and it jumped out of the grass, hit the middle of the road and landed in the other ditch," Jackson said. "One leap was all it took."

Sigrid Howard, another resident who lives north of Wamego, also said she saw a puma.

"We came onto Broderick Road, and saw it come across the pavement. It had a long tail, and when it turned its head, I knew it was a big cat," Howard said.

Howard stopped the car, and her sons jumped out to get a better look. Then it disappeared into the woods, she said.

These large cats, some reaching 200 pounds, have many different names. They're sometimes called cougars, panthers and mountain lions. Each name describes the same species in North America.

Before the 20th century, the puma's range covered all of the lower 48 states. Today, the big cats survive mainly in the desert Southwest, in the Rocky Mountains, and a few in certain parts of Florida.

The puma's origin could be several places, Bob Henderson, Cooperative Extension specialist in animal damage control, said.

"Lions are wanderers. They can travel 100 miles in a week," Henderson said. "Lions have been caught in Colorado within five miles of the Kansas border."

Henderson also said the cat could have wandered into Kansas from the north.

"There have been lions killed in Nebraska in the past. I think mountain lions have been coming across Kansas ever since the turn of the century," Henderson said.

Although there have been documented cases of pumas in surrounding states, Henderson said, it could be a pen-reared cats= that has escaped.

"We caught a puma in Cowley County in 1988 that was pen-reared," Henderson said. "A man had bought it and turned it loose so it would keep deer out of his orchard."

Henderson said most of the reports he gets are relatively accurate.

"I have been receiving reports for a very long time, but we have never found a dead cat or have had a road kill," Henderson said.

Henderson said that some coyotes with mange may appear to be cats.

"We have some photos, but they are very poor, and you can't be sure that it's a big cat," Henderson said.

If a puma were captured, the damage control office would not kill the cat but would document the case, Henderson said.

If one is sighted, people can contact the Cooperative Extension Animal Damage Control office.

Grants, loans for everyone — maybe

New system would guarantee money regardless of family income

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Educators and several members of Congress Wednesday praised a proposal to guarantee $14,000 a year in aid to every U.S. college student. Bankers and others criticized the plan as unworkable.

Implementing such reforms would subject students to a crapshoot because they might not work, said Sam Kipp, executive director of the California Student Aid Commission, which runs the state's grant and scholarship programs.

Education Secretary Richard Riley said he was delighted that the congressionally mandated commission chaired by former Sen. Paula Hawkins, R-Fla., agrees with many of the Clinton administration's proposals, such as partial repayment of student loans through community service.

The $14,000 in assistance would be available regardless of family income, according to the recommendations of the National Commission on Responsibilities for Financing Post-secondary Education.

Less well-off students would get more in outright grants. Students from families with higher incomes would get more in loans. The reforms would entail billions in new federal spending.

"The recommendations reassert the federal role as primary in terms of financial aid; we haven't had that for 12 years," said Richard Rosser, president of the National Association of Independent Colleges and Universities.

Private financial institutions would be cut out of the federal student aid program and a direct loan system would take its place.

"This report steps on a lot of powerful financial toes, and those who favor the proposed reforms are going to have to get in and fight for it," said Sen. Paul Simon, D-Ill., who endorsed the commission's work.

"Relying on federal bureaucracy to deliver loans would be costly and counterproductive," said Lawrence Hough, president and chief executive officer, Student Loan Marketing Association. Known as Sallie Mae, the federally chartered corporation buys student loans from financial institutions.

"It may be unrealistic to call for the elimination of the one reliable source of funds for families over the last twenty years," said Joe Belew, president of the Consumer Bankers Association.

The money for direct loans would come from Treasury borrowing, "which would add probably $15 billion to $20 billion to the national debt. Some savings!" said Kipp of the California Student Aid Commission.

The General Accounting Office and others have said moving away from private sector capitalization would generate at least $1 billion a year in savings.

NATION'S BUDGET

Clinton's cuts could be deepest for military

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton is weighing defense cuts of $8.5 billion beyond former President Bush's budget for the next fiscal year, congressional and defense industry sources said Wednesday.

Such a reduction in military spending could be expected to produce far-reaching effects elsewhere in the $1.5 trillion budget, as Clinton looks for ways to reduce the deficit.

The $8.5 billion cut under consideration by Clinton would reduce the defense budget to $259.3 billion from $267.8 billion envisioned by the Bush administration for fiscal 1994, which starts Oct. 1.

The actual cut could eventually fall within the range of $7 billion to $10 billion, said the sources, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

Defense Secretary Les Aspin has sent a budget memo to each of the armed services, giving a breakdown of the planned cuts. The Army is expected to trim $2.5 billion, the Navy $3 billion and the Air Force $2.8 billion, the sources said.

The Army suffered the deepest cut from fiscal 1992 to fiscal 1993, as its budget was slashed to $63.6 billion from $73.6 billion. The Navy budget was reduced from $90.3 billion to $82.6 billion and the Air Force budget to $78.7 billion from $82.3 billion.

Clinton is expected to lay out an economic stimulus package in his State of the Union address on Feb. 17, and present the plan a day later. The president will submit his budget to Congress on March 23.

During the campaign, Clinton proposed defense cuts of $60 billion beyond the $50 billion Bush had proposed over a five-year period.

Sources said the $8.5 billion in cuts would come from funds the Bush administration wanted Congress to authorize for 1994, but which would have been spent over a number of years.

Since some military construction, such as shipbuilding, takes many years, such a cut would result in an actual spending reduction next year of only about $5 billion, the sources estimated.

Hall residents help group with survey

Answers will help CCC, fuel upcoming debate

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Members of Campus Crusade for Christ are asking Moore Hall residents to complete a questionnaire about marriage and relationships.

Brian Anderson, director of Campus Crusade, said the organization hopes to use the questionnaire responses in a debate they plan to sponsor this semester.

The debate, titled "Why Wait?", between Campus Crusade members and residence hall students, will focus on the issue of premarital sex, Anderson said.

Letters explaining the mission of Campus Crusade were sent to freshmen living in Moore. Calls were then made to determine if the students were interested in completing the questionnaire, Anderson said.

If the student agreed, a Campus Crusade member conducted the interview.

"One of the reasons Campus Crusade exists on campus is to get people interested in a relationship with God," Anderson said.

As Campus Crusade members stood outside Moore distributing the questionnaires last week and early this week, they prayed for the hall residents.

Erica Fredeen, Moore Hall receptionist, said most of the residents were unaware of the Campus Crusade members outside.

"We're not going to make them go away," Fredeen said. "They're not in the way.

"I've heard them say this is sin city. So, it's been kind of a joke. I haven't heard people say they were angry."

Anderson said while a member of Campus Crusade may have called Moore sin city, the organization does not support such a viewpoint.

"We stress compassion as we're talking to people, and that's definitely not part of our approach," he said.

About 20 percent of the students who were contacted by Campus Crusade agreed to be interviewed, Anderson said.

Heather Koelling, freshman undecided, said a member of Campus Crusade came to her room in Moore to ask her questions about marriage, sex and her goals.

"It was no big deal for me," Koelling said. "It actually helped me because I recently broke up with my boyfriend."

Koelling said she agreed to attend a Bible study group, which Campus Crusade sponsors in the basement of Moore.

"We, as an organization, pray for the whole campus," Anderson said. "This particular time we chose to pray for Moore Hall, and we thought it would be fun to actually go to the hall to pray."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Desire tempts reader to graze for greener grass

Dear Cassandra,

I am a male in my early 20s. I've been dating the same girl for a number of years, and we've been living together for a while. The majority of the time we get along great, and I do love her.

Now, the problem. I want to have sex with other women, but no one woman in particular.

My girlfriend is beautiful and deserves to have a faithful boyfriend. I have turned down offers by other women because I respect my girlfriend.

On one side, the desire to sleep with other women is very strong. It could almost be described as a need.

But on the other side, I have found a woman with the same values, outlooks and goals in life. I would like a large family and have found a woman who would make a great partner.

Before our relationship, we each had sex with others. My girlfriend is the best — we have great sex, and we have it very often.

Cassandra, what the hell should I do? My girlfriend is my best friend, but there is no way I could talk to her about this. It would crush her emotionally.

I am afraid that this feeling will not go away and fear that in the future I may be even more tempted to cheat.

I am also afraid that if I give this woman up I may create a void in my life that no other woman could fill.

Do I sow a few more wild oats while I'm young?

Or do I grab what I have and be thankful for it — hoping for the best?

Horny and Indecisive

P.S. Has anybody else been in this situation? How did things turn out?

P.P.S. Full-time job and school. No time for counseling.

Dear Indecisive,

Ah, the grass is always greener on the other side.

If you're looking for someone to give you permission to cheat on your girlfriend, you won't get it from me.

You have a tough decision to make. Do you yield to your sexual desires and ruin what sounds like a solid relationship, or do you deny yourself the pleasures of the flesh and live with regret?

It is common for a person to fantasize about sex with someone other than his or her significant other. Many psychologists agree that such fantasies are not only normal but healthy.

You have obviously thought your dilemma through and seem aware of the consequences of having sex with others.

The question you must ask yourself is: Will what I lose be worth what I will gain? Notice I didn't say "could" lose.

You owe it to your girlfriend — someone for whom you profess love and respect — to be completely honest. If you decide to pursue sexual relationships with other women you should tell your girlfriend.

Don't play games with her heart.

This is as much a moral responsibility as it is a matter of physical safety.

If you feel your sexual desires are out of control, you might consider counseling. If you have time to sleep around, you have time to talk to someone.

Some of the reasons you and your girlfriend have an active and healthy sex-life is that you share the same outlooks, values, goals and love each other. Keep in mind that these elements would likely be missing if you decide to sleep around.

Let us know what you decide.

Readers, have you been in this situation? What happened? I have a pretty good idea that some of you have some good stories to tell. Send them in. I'm tired of discussing parking.

K-State's crime rate shows decline, Manhattan's rises

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Kansas' overall crime rate declined during the first nine months of 1992, but the incidence of violent crime increased, the latest Kansas Bureau of Investigation report shows.

While Manhattan showed an increase of nearly 40 percent, crime on the K-State campus decreased by almost 10 percent.

The number of violent crimes in Kansas reported for the January-through-September period increased 5.1 percent, but the overall rate dropped 2.1 percent.

The KBI's compilation of crime reports from some 350 state law enforcement agencies showed that the number of violent crimes increased during January through September from 9,223 in 1991 to 9,691 in 1992.

At the same time, the number of property crimes declined from 93,276 to 90,657, a 2.8 percent reduction.

The combined violent and property crime figures showed an overall reduction of 2.1 percent — from 102,499 to 100,348.

Among major crimes statewide, the number of murders went down from 120 to 116, while rapes declined from 852 to 792 and robberies dropped from 2,421 to 2,376.

Aggravated assaults increased from 5,830 to 6,407.

Motor vehicle thefts led the decline in property crimes, down from 6,452 to 5,913.

The following cities showed increases in crime:

Salina 15.2 percent, Shawnee 6.9, Manhattan 37.2, Dodge City 9.7, Junction City 7.4, Leawood 17.2, Pittsburg 18.5, Hays 9.6, Liberal 32.0, Great Bend 3.4, McPherson 8.6, Winfield 22.5, Merriam 22.3, El Dorado 4.9, Ottawa 40.8, Mission 10.7, Chanute 2.3, Haysville 6.9, Augusta 6.5, Bonner Springs 2.4, Iola 31.3, Concordia 7.3 and Ulysses 30.4.

Cities that showed declines included:

Wichita 5.7 percent, Kansas City, Kan., 3.3, Topeka 2.5, Overland Park 10.0, Lawrence 15.8, Olathe 3.0, Hutchinson 15.9, Leavenworth 1.3, Lenexa 4.4, Emporia 2.4, Garden City 3.4, Prairie Village 23.3, Newton 17.2, Derby 12.7, Coffeyville 17.9, Arkansas City 7.5, Parsons 3.8, Atchison 19.0, Independence 13.6, Wellington 18.0, Fort Scott 23.0, Roeland Park 11.7, Lansing 23.2, Pratt 2.0, Colby 11.1, Goodland 14.7.

Abilene had no change.

For the seven Board of Regents institutions, the figures showed increases of 3 percent at Wichita State University, 6.6 percent at the KU Medical Center and 7.8 percent at Pittsburg State. They showed declines of 31.6 percent at the University of Kansas, 8.6 percent at K-State, 25.8 percent at Emporia State and 7.9 percent at Fort Hays State.

BLACK HISTORY MONTH

Play to help group emphasize greek unity

COLLEGIAN STAFF

K-State's Black Pan-Hellenic Council on Friday will present a play commemorating Black History Month.

Carlotte Moore, senior in social work and president of the council, said "Blazing the Trail" will be presented to let people know why there is a need for black greeks and their importance to K- State. She said the play will focus on the origin of each chapter and its contributions.

The Black Pan-Hellenic Council at K-State is a chapter of the national council. Moore said the council acts as a governing body for the four predominantly black fraternities and sororities.

Shirlyn Henry Brown, coordinator for the Black Pan-Hellenic Council, said the group's purpose is to not only help with governing, but also to help bring about unity within the greek system.

"Its purpose is to promote unity among the black greeks and to hear all the rules of each national organization," Brown said.

Jayson Strickland, senior in education and president of Alpha Phi Alpha, said the play is important because it helps to bring an awareness to the K-State students of the black greek system.

"This play not only brings the various groups together on one project, but it also brings tremendous exposure to each group," he said.

The play will help develop a better rapport among the organizations, Strickland said.

Stacy Strozier, junior in political science and president of Kappa Alpha Psi, said the chapter has just gotten started, and the play is a good way to boost its morale.

Veryl Switzer, associate director of athletics and adviser for Kappa Alpha Psi, again stressed the importance of harmony among the groups.

"There has been a strong need for some leadership among the black greeks because many of them forget that they're all black and should be shooting for one common goal — unity," Switzer said.

'BLAZING THE TRAIL'

■ This play will show at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Union Station in the K-State Union. Admission is free. A social activity will immediately follow the play at the Multicultural Center, 2201 Denison Ave.

Segregation alleged in Jardine Terrace

"I would say there will absolutely be people with different standards, but that is not limited to anyone nationality."
SUSANNE TUNSTALL
FAMILY HOUSING COORDINATOR

WADE SISSON
Collegian

The Mayor's Council at Jardine Terrace Apartments is postponing an investigation into the possibility of segregation based on nationality until more information is obtained.

The council, which met Tuesday, now plans to have a meeting between international students of Jardine and the Department of Housing and Dining Services, Charles Walters, resident and mayor of Jardine, said.

"We're trying to put them together to see if it's a misunderstanding," he said. "If we find that it's not a misunderstanding, we'll continue the investigation."

Walters has served as mayor of the Jardine complex, K-State's housing for married students and families, for a year and was a member of the mayor's council for two years.

The decision to look into allegations of segregation was made after Walters received phone calls from international students who complained they had been placed in unfair housing.

His first step was to call Susanne Tunstall, family housing coordinator for the housing department, he said. Walters alleges she made discriminatory remarks about international students.

"She said that they (housing) don't segregate, but that those people have different standards. She said they can tell from observing them that they are not as clean," Walters said.

"What bothered me was the sweeping generality of 'those' people," he said. "It lacks sensitivity and clarity of understanding."

Tunstall said she did not recall making such a statement, though Walters alleges she acknowledged making the remarks at the council meeting Tuesday night.

She denied that allegation and said she did not think she could have made such a statement.

"I would say there will absolutely be people with different standards, but that is not limited to any one nationality," Tunstall said.

After speaking with Tunstall, Walters said he decided to form the Fair Housing Research Commission to investigate the possibility of segregation.

The commission, which is composed of seven Jardine residents appointed by Walters, has not yet begun an investigation. They are waiting for the outcome of the meeting between international residents of Jardine and the housing department.

"We decided there wasn't enough information to go ahead with a full investigation," Walters said. "The members felt it really boils down to a normal tenant and landlord conflict, and it can probably be mediated here in Jardine."

However, Walters said if international students complain to his office after the meeting with the Department of Housing, the committee will proceed with its investigation.

H. Gene Wiley, maintenance superintendent for the housing department, said he didn't think there were any problems that could not be handled within the department.

"These people are not assigned housing," he said. "They request it through her (Tunstall's) office. She tries to accommodate them, and if she can't she'll say, 'Look, that's all we have.'

"There is no way on God's green earth there's any segregation here because the people choose where they live."

Tunstall said international students often request to be placed together.

"The way we assign people is mostly by the way they request it," she said. "International students often have friends in a particular building or have a wife who speaks little English."

Walters said Tunstall offered that explanation to him as well.

"One explanation I was given by the coordinator was that often times she perceives that international students want to be together," Walters said.

"I don't think she does it with malice, but that is an interesting question. Is it a matter of accommodation or discrimination? That is what this commission is going to find out," he said.

Tunstall said she tries to meet the students' requests regarding housing assignments.

"I think on the average people talk to us about their wishes, but as far as complaints, we've had very few," she said. "So I was upset to hear that they hadn't come to me."

Walters said if there is an investigation, the commission will not work on the assumption there is segregation but will instead attempt

Committee to review use of fees for Lafene

Bill proposed to investigate incorporating SGA

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

A Lafene Health Center ad-hoc committee will be established as a result of legislation passed by a special order during Student Senate Thursday night.

SENATE

The committee will investigate and review the use of student fee money at Lafene.

After some debate, the ad-hoc committee was approved, but without the suggestion of a Lafene employee on the committee.

Andrew Tomb, arts and sciences senator, will serve as the chairperson of the ad-hoc committee.

In other business, the K-State men's and women's soccer clubs both received allocations from Senate.

In special orders, Senate approved $1,040.56 for the men's soccer club. The money will be used for mileage, lodging and subsistence as they travel to Baton Rouge, La., to participate in a tournament Feb. 20-21.

Also in a special order, the women's soccer club received $109.06 for the purchase of 5 jerseys for substitute players.

A resolution concerning Gov. Joan Finney's budget recommendations will be voted on during next week's meeting.

The intent of the resolution is to show support for the 1993 Student Governing Association legislative priorities on state budgeting, on behalf of the student body at K-State.

The resolution concerns salary increases for student, classified and unclassified employees, and a four-percent increase in other operating expenditures.

Also included in the resolution is a $39,700 increase in funding for the Youth Education Service Program and the establishment of the Kansas Supplemental Grant Program. This is a statewide program with a budget of $2.8 million.

The YES Program was established by Associated Students of Kansas.

These recommendations are the same as those Finney proposed to the Legislature.

A bill proposing a committee to investigate the possibility of incorporating SGA was referred back to Senate Operations Committee for review and possibly further consideration.

The bill, if passed, would allow Senate to keep interest on the money Senate has at its disposal.

Under current law, all interest goes to the State of Kansas.

NEWS DIGEST

▶EGGS AND ISSUES SET FOR SATURDAY

MICHELLE ROGERS
SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

Local legislators will be available in full force to hear constituent concerns this weekend in Manhattan.

At 7 a.m. Saturday, the year's first Eggs and Issues Legislative Forum will be at Manhattan Town Center in the Food Court area.

Randy Martin, Manhattan Chamber of Commerce, said seven invitations have been extended to local legislators, including Democrat Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, Republican Rep. Kent Glasscock and Republican Sen. Lana Oleen. All are expected to attend.

No breakfast will be available, but complimentary coffee will be served.

Other Eggs and Issues Legislative Forums are scheduled for March 6 and April 3.

On Sunday, Hochhauser will be available for questions from the community at the Douglass Community Center at 901 Yuma St.

The open format will be a reception-type affair from 2 to 4 p.m. in the Tubman Douglass room, said Larry Nicholson, director of the center.

CAMPUS

Senior scholar to attend Oxford

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

Jean Sonnenfield, senior in veterinary medicine, has been awarded the Brasenose Foundation Scholarship to attend Oxford University in England.

The Brasenose Scholarship is awarded to one student annually to study at Oxford for two years.

Sonnenfield said she plans to continue her research of bacterial genetics and to receive her master's degree at Oxford.

"My career in veterinary medicine is very diverse," she said.

She will be working with a professor who has been conducting the same type of research on bacterial genetics with animals in which she has been interested, she said. She is also looking forward to the advancedd technology at Oxford, she said.

Sonnenfield was originally an applicant finalist for a Rhodes scholar.

"When I didn't make the Rhodes Scholarship I didn't even think about the Brasenose. But I went through the application process again and waited and tried to put it out of my mind," she said.

Many people compare the Brasenose Foundation Scholarship to the Rhodes Scholarship, she said.

"Many people refer to it as the 33rd Rhodes Scholarship," she said.

Nancy Twiss, pre-law adviser, said the scholarship is a very respected one.

"The Brasenose is a highly selective scholarship that sends a student to Oxford University for two years with all expenses paid," Twiss said. "The entire University of K-State can be proud of these types of honors because they could not be awarded without superb teaching and outside academic support."

President Jon Wefald said no state university in the past five or six years has had more scholarship recipients than K-State.

At 7:59 a.m., Richard Felsburg, 350 N. 16th St. No. 4, reported a vehicle burglary. Taken was a radar detector, and damage was done to the driver's side window. Loss was $180.

At 8:00 a.m., Vance E. Bulla, 2548 Candle Crest Circle, and Debby Bruce, 2548 Candle Crest Circle, were issued a notice to appear for theft.

At 8:17 a.m., Pernell L. Barnett, 701 Allison Ave. No. 9, was arrested for battery. He was confined in lieu of $300 bond.

At 8:28 a.m., Susanne B. Cusic, 3101 Lundin Drive No. 5, reported a vehicle burglary. Taken was a radar detector, and damage was done to the vehicle's window. Loss was $400.

At 10:30 a.m., John Curtis Noland, 112 Olive St., Belvue, was arrested on warrant of a misdemeanor check and confined in lieu of $350 bond.

At 10:30 a.m., Joshua R. Kimmel, 955 S. Vassar, Wichita, was arrested on warrant for a misdemeanor check and released on $200 bond.

At 1:58 p.m., Gregory L. Warne was arrested on Pottawatomie County warrants for probation violation. Total bond was $723.70. He was released to Pottawatomie County Sheriff's Department.

At 3:30 p.m., Charles Lake IV, 13955 Onega Road, Onega, was arrested on warrants of failure to comply with DUI sentence, failure to complete theft sentence and probation violation. Subject was confined in lieu of a total bond of $2,100.

LEGISLATIVE DIGEST

▶REGENTS REPAIR FUND EXTENDED

TOPEKA — The State Building Construction Committee has voted to recommend extending the $10-million yearly allocation for rehabilitation of Kansas Board of Regents university buildings for an additional two years.

The annual allocation had been funded through 1995. The committee voted Thursday to extend funding through fiscal years 1996 and 1997.

Committee members said extending the funding would help regents institutions plan efficiently for longterm repairs.

▶GREEK HOUSING BILL PROPOSED TO KEEP RESIDENTIAL TAX STATUS

TOPEKA — The House Taxation Committee heard testimony Thursday on a bill that would guarantee that university sorority and fraternity houses are taxed at the residential rate.

Rep. David Adkins, R-Leawood, said greek houses currently are assessed at a residential rate, but he said he wants it locked into law.

He and Rep. Gary Haulmark, R-Lenexa, co-sponsored the bill.

"We have proposed this legislation as a result of constituent concerns," Adkins said. "Our constituents request specific statutory protection of the 'residential' status of fraternities and sororities to prevent future assessors from assessing the properties as 'commercial' uses."

Adkins said most university residential housing is tax exempt, but fraternities and sororities pay property taxes.

"This is not a fraternity and sorority tax-break bill," he said.

He said the bill would simply provide assurance to parents and students.

Release of KU memo raises issue of law school funding

"This is a power grab on KU's part to protect a school in trouble."

REP. JOAN WAGNON
D-TOPEKA

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Dean Robert Jerry of the University of Kansas Law School ignited a firestorm at the Statehouse Thursday with comments disparaging the quality of the Washburn University Law School.

The controversy was over an internal memorandum Jerry sent to his KU supervisor last fall complaining about the financial support the state gives to the Washburn Law School.

He called Washburn "a low-quality law school, with a faculty whose credentials cannot even compare to ours ... with a student body of significantly lower quality."

Rep. Don Smith, D-Dodge City, a former district court judge and Washburn law graduate, took to the House floor to denounce the statements of Jerry.

"I think the statement made by the dean was highly inappropriate, comes at a bad time, and he should spend his time, really, taking care of the administrative problems at the University of Kansas Law School," Smith said.

Smith and others also brought up the sexual harassment allegations against a KU law professor that are the subject of ongoing tenure committee hearings over whether he should be fired.

Some lawmakers said they thought Jerry's remarks could cause KU budget problems.

Rep. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, whose husband teaches history at Washburn, said the incident should affect KU's budget.

She said Jerry might have been responding to fears that if Washburn becomes a part of the regents system, the state will close the KU law school because it only needs one.

"This is a power grab on KU's part to protect a school in trouble," Wagnon said.

Sen. Gus Bogina, R-Shawnee, chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, noted KU has a proposal before the Legislature to impose a special fee of $40 per credit hour on KU law students to raise extra money for the law school.

"The thing where it might have an impact is a special request, which might be viewed with a more deliberate eye," Bogina said. "Ironically, the law school does have a request of that nature. I'm certain there will be more questions asked than might normally be asked."

But Sen. Richard Rock, D-Arkansas City, a Washburn law school graduate, sought to quiet the storm. He called the story "a reporter's dream, but it's everybody else's nightmare.

"I think this is an unfortunate tempest that bears no relevance to anything other than it is a great media event," Rock said.

Rep. Barbara Ballard, D-Lawrence, said, "It's already caused hard feelings, but I hope it doesn't affect our appropriations. I think we have to keep in mind this wasn't an official statement from the University of Kansas."

Jerry issued a statement Thursday in which he apologized, but said he didn't regret raising the issue of inadequate state funding for the KU Law School.

He apologized for "the misunderstandings that have developed because of my poor choice of words in a private communication."

For its part, Washburn expressed shock, and school officials produced a list of distinguished law school graduates, including Sen. Bob Dole, U.S. Rep. Jim Slattery and Supreme Court Chief Justice Richard Holmes.

A copy of the memo from Jerry to Del Brinkman, former KU vice chancellor for academic affairs, dated last Nov. 30, was sent anonymously to three news organizations in Topeka late Wednesday.

Television station KSNT reported the incident Wednesday night, and the Topeka Capital-Journal reported it in a story in Thursday's edition.

In the memo, Jerry said in part:

"The state has assisted in the advance of a low-quality law school,

Reservations getting rooked

THE ISSUE

The state has dragged its feet over allowing casino gambling on Indian reservations.

WE SUGGEST

The reservation casino issue should receive the same treatment that the state has offered private casino companies.

Even after Gov. Joan Finney's approval of Indian reservation gambling, there have been further complications.

Finney negotiated compacts with four Native American tribes — Sac and Fox, Iowa, Kickapoo and Prairie Band Potawatomi — and they've been waiting for more than a year for state action.

They are still waiting.

Because the Indian reservations are federal property, casinos are already legal on reservations because of a 1988 federal law that requires states to negotiate such agreements with tribes.

Meanwhile, Mirage Resorts Inc. of Las Vegas has teamed up with the Woodlands racing operations in Kansas City, Kan., on plans for a $300-million casino and entertainment complex.

For individually owned casino gambling to be allowed, the Kansas Constitution must be amended.

Curiously, this big-money project has been flying through the Legislature with unusual speed.

Even the secretary of state has become involved. He has postponed the deadline for gambling supporters to convince legislators of its benefits. Originally the deadline was Feb. 9. The secretary of state's office, however, reported last week a "more realistic" deadline of Feb. 15.

The Native American's never received special deadline extensions. They never even got to the point of a deadline.

It has become glaringly obvious that this playing field isn't level.

The state has wrongly passed over the Native American's proposals because of money, instead giving preferential treatment to the Las Vegas company and to the Woodlands.

OTHER VIEWS

"A scandal is taking place at education schools in universities all over Kansas. Each student in these schools must complete a semester of virtual slave labor made voluntary only in the sense that if you don't want your education degree, you don't have to do it. But if you want to be certified to teach you do.

Student teachers are people who, in almost every way, live the life of a teacher ... the only difference is that they don't get paid for the work they do.

... I know of no other internship program that requires this much work and time investment and yet provides no compensation at all for the work that is done. Marx spoke of capitalists oppressing the masses, but even the oppressed masses get at least some pay for their work."

— Columnist Mark Coatney, University Daily Kansan (University of Kansas), on student teaching requirements.

Knowledge warehouse is hurting

"Books, we are told, propose to instruct or amuse. Indeed! A true antithesis to knowledge, in this case, is not pleasure, but power. All that is literature seeks to communicate power; all that is not literature, to communicate knowledge."

—Thomas De Quincey

SHAWN WOODFORD

I'm sure many of you have heard the joke that winds it's way through campus every so often, the one with the punchline that refers to Farrell Library as the ninth-best in the Big Eight. In a way, the joke is quite funny, but in another way it is sad because it captures the reality of the situation.

The Library has been the recipient of a great deal of attention recently, and this attention has resulted in a needed influx of financial support. At the same time, however, Farrell faces a myriad of future difficulties that can only be addressed by the continuing attention and support of those in charge of the purse strings.

There has been a gratifying response to Farrell's pressing needs. In 1992, the Kansas Legislature voted $18 million for a plan to renovate and add to the existing library structure. An additional $3 million was raised through Kansas State's Essential Edge Campaign, and the student body voted to contribute $5 million. But Assistent to the Dean of Libraries Karen McCulloh said this still leaves Farrell $2 million short of the anticipated $28-million total price tag.

Although they do not have all of the money in hand, McCulloh said Farrell hopes to be able to open contractor bids in 1994, with a completion date for the new structure estimated at late 1996 or early 1997.

However, libraries consist of more than just buildings. The bad news is that despite the financial largesse, Dean of Libraries Brice Hobrock must still oversee cutting $350,000 worth of periodicals from Farrell's circulation by 1994. This follows a $283,000 cut in 1989.

Farrell, like other research libraries in America, faces costs that are rising by 12 percent a year, while it's acquisition budget remains unchanged. It can afford to buy only a fraction of the total volumes published each year.

In response, Farrell has turned to outside sources for assistance. Last December, Farrell was awarded a $1-million Challenge Grant by the National Endowment for the Humanities. This money will be put in an interest-bearing account, yielding about $50,000 a year to be used to buy books in the humanities. Unfortunately, the grant will only pay out $250,000, forcing the Library to raise the other $750,000 by 1994. The Kansas Board of Regents also recently requested that Farrell submit a request to the state Legislature for an $864,000 appropriation to help replace the lost journals with computer databases and other electronic aids.

The ongoing problem, Hobrock said, is that Farrell has no inherent constituency to call upon for help. It has no alumni who contribute money or exert political pressure to increase funding. Both Hobrock and McCulloh are quick to point out the attention and assistance provided by President Wefald and other administrators. It is curious, though, that Farrell never seems to be the recipient when the University solicits contributions from major donors.

Although it is obvious Farrell is but one of many needy parts of the University, and that little help can be expected from a state Legislature, increasingly unresponsive to the needs of higher education, more can — and must — be done. At Notre Dame, each pledge to the football program must be matched by a donation to the library. Penn State football coach Joe Paterno is the fund-raising spokesman for its library. I don't suppose Dana Altman or Bill Snyder would be interested in doing such a thing.

Above all, the users of Farrell (and I don't know of a student or faculty member who isn't) must be sure that it continues as a priority in the minds of the legislators and administrators. Apathy on our part will ensure that Farrell will be even less able, as time goes on, to meet the demands we place on it.

READERS WRITE

▶ INVOLVEMENT

Indications are that apathy is rampant

Editor,

Several articles, and their interrelationship, caught my attention in the Feb. 3 Collegian. The first article was on the front page, "Do you know what your Senate is doing?" The second was on the editorial page: "The perfect chance to learn." The interrelationship between these two is the topic of apathy.

Every week I am amazed at the small number of students who take the time to respond to the "Question of the week." The Senate Communications Committee places this question in one of the most frequented spots on campus — the hallway in the K-State Union. Only 44 students took the time to respond to last week's question, "Do you think SGA served its constituents well last semester?" Not a bad rate — 44 out of more than 15,000.

We students must realize that we can have an influence and an impact on what happens in the Senate. As voters and the constituents of the Senate, we also have a responsibility to keep informed. If your senator is not keeping you informed in some manner, request that she/he come to see you or your organization.

Take part in the process. If we don't take part, then we have nothing to lament when the Senate does something we don't sanction.

▶ ENVIRONMENT

Nature deserves more than toilet paper

Editor,

Since I began my studies at this institution in fall 1992 I have noticed that the sorority Gamma Phi Beta has been the repeated recipient of the good old toilet paper prank. I assume that since it is a sorority that's being TP'd, it is a fraternity that is playing the role of the joker (read environmentally ignorant).

Whoever is the prankster in these instances, could you please stop defecating on our environment. Maybe next time, instead of using toilet paper, you could fulfill one of your volunteer community services by using grass seed or flowers. Thus, you might display some forethought for our environment and our future. Gee, you may even show some intelligence.

After all, doesn't the University seal state, "Rule by obeying nature's laws"?

Joining together to save Mother Earth

Editor,

As evidenced by the recent warm weather we have been having, spring is soon on its way. With the coming of spring also comes the increased involvement in enjoying the outdoors. But soon there may be a time when the great outdoors may not be there for us to enjoy because of environmental deterioration.

We can prevent environmental deterioration from occurring by doing all we can as individuals to help protect our environment for generations to come. We can all recycle items such as aluminum cans and newspapers, on campus and at home.

It hardly takes any effort on our part to carry our aluminum can to the nearest campus recycling depository. We can also, because of the warm weather, walk and bike more to campus, saving precious fossil fuels. And we can always encourage others to do the same.

Across this campus I have heard many people say that they are interested in environmental issues. Well, now is your chance to develop those interests.

S.A.V.E. is a student organization whose focus is on helping preserve our environment. S.A.V.E. works with campus and local environmental issues as well as national and world issues. This semester we are again planning the Earth Day celebration.

I encourage all of you interested in preserving our planet to do your part and to attend a S.A.V.E. meeting. By joining together, we can better accomplish our common goal of preserving the earth.

Ice-T can't say that, can he?

TOM LISTER

"Die, die, die pig, die.
Fuck the police!
I know your family's grievin'
Fuck 'em!
— Ice-T, "Cop Killer"

Poor Ice-T, he's been getting a raw deal. It turns out that police have been refusing to provide security at concerts where he plays the song "Cop Killer."

Go figure.

I'm sure that if Sammy Davis Jr. were still alive, he'd like to be working the ticket booth at a Ku Klux Klan rally.

You see, "Cop Killer" is an intense song. There's a prelude to it on the "Body Count" album, in which Ice-T describes how he'd like to take a cop out in the parking lot and shoot him in the face. Then, throughout the song, Ice-T continues to glorify killing cops.

At points he tells his audience not to "be a pussy" and to "have some muthafuckin' courage." All this is punctuated by gunshots.

Jon Cummings of the American Civil Liberties Union said by refusing to work Ice-T's concerts, police have "realized the power they have and decided that they can wield some kind of influence in what can and can't be said."

That's true, but perhaps Cummings and Ice-T still haven't realized that promoting murder isn't a part of the free speech guaranteed by the Constitution. Perhaps neither have realized that his music does in fact have an influence on listeners.

I've listened to a few of Ice-T's albums, and I'm also a big fan of Guns 'n' Roses. What both bands represent to me is pride in delinquent youth lifestyles.

At that age, a lot of kids take a strong pride in their friends and the ways they spend their time. And Ice-T, just as Axl Rose, ends up being a role model for some of those kids.

But should taxpayers protect a man who encourages their kids to fire a gun at a cop?

Should we provide security for and, therefore, support someone who creates more intimidation for both sides? Who wants to see kids anxious to live up to the violent standards Ice-T wants to set up for them? Who wants to see gun-toting cops any more intimidated when they see these kids?

It's been said that Ice-T often tries to intimidate reporters with a gun he carries. In fact, quite a few of his publicity photos show him wielding a gun. At the end of his "Original Gangster" album, he paid tribute to all his "homeys" in penitentiaries across the country.

That's pretty silly behavior for a man in his 30s who came from a middle-class background, but youth tend to take him seriously. And they buy his music.

Although it's a free world with a free market, Ice-T shouldn't be free to incite violence for the sake of marketable controversy.

Ice-T can't get the police to provide security for his concerts. We know he's grieving.

But he can hire his own security force.

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

We are still not amused

Weekend would like to know who we have to talk to, what complex Latin rites must be performed, what animal sacrifice must be made, in order to banish something from the English language.

What we want to boot is the really, really irritating trend of attaching a "NOT" to the end of one's apparently facetious statement.

Talk about mercilessly driving something into the ground.

Here's how it works: The offenders will say something like, "Hey, that Billy Tubbs sure is a good sport." They will then craftily pause for a moment to let the message sink in, and then they will punch it home with a spunky "NOT!" Then they will smile smugly because they don't realize that you've heard this done about 13,000 times, and the charm is gone.

Here's the newsflash — it's not funny anymore. It was once but isn't anymore. You had your fun, now let's move on.

New Yorker magazine seems unusually hell-bent on giving the "Weekly World News" some competition in the "Least Credibility" division of the upcoming Summer Journalism Olympics.

First, new editor Tina Brown immediately flushed half of the magazine's integrity down the toilet last year by publishing a "Talk of the Town" column that tore apart a biography of late media mogul Rupert Murdoch. When it was noticed that the reviewed biography didn't have any good things to say about Brown's husband, some smelled a vendetta.

Now the remaining integrity is fast swirling down into the septic abyss. A recent "Talk" piece that praises former East German leader Erich Honecker (currently on trial) as "a hero" has left many readers perplexed.

Keep in mind this is the guy who built the Berlin Wall.

Well, according to Newsweek, the author is journalist Irene Dische, who just happens to be the wife of Honecker's chief defense lawyer.

Remarkably, Brown sees no conflict of interest. "The issue is the integrity, not the identity, of the author," she said.

Naked Brunch: Happy Birthday, Bill

Author William Seward Burroughs was born on this day in St. Louis, back in 1914. That would make him 78 years old today, the age where most writers are just hitting their stride.

Now, if you've never heard of William S. Burroughs, then you are obviously not hanging out with enough English graduate students.

Burroughs graduated from Harvard University in 1936, soon moving to New York City, where he picked up a rather nice affectation for heroin in 1944. He then moved with his second wife to Mexico where a really interesting thing occurred: He killed her.

The story goes that the two were playing some sort of William Tell game where the author was supposed to shoot (with a gun, mind you) an apple off of his wife's head. Well, he missed.

Fleeing Mexico, Burroughs traveled a bit then published "Junkie: Confessions of an Unredeemed Drug Addict" in 1953. The book began Burroughs' trek on the road of experimental literature that continued in 1959 with "Naked Lunch," completed after his treatment for drug addiction.

Burroughs hung out with such Beat figures as Jack Kerouac and poet Allan Ginsburg and wrote many more novels including "The Ticket That Exploded" (1962) and "The Western Lands" (1987). He now lives in Lawrence, Kan.

AND THEY CALL HIM DR. LOVE

Everyone giggles, and some folks blush when mention is made of "that place out by the airport that sells toys and rents videos."

The few who will admit they made the trip out there will say it was for a gag gift. (Oh, sure.)

What most people don't realize is there is much more to that building, and its owner, than meets the eye.

William T. Love, affectionately known as Dr. Love, owner of Dr. Love's Jazz Club and Gourmet Seafood, said he believes that is part of the problem.

"People hear about the downstairs part and don't want to come out for the club and the music," he said.

Music? What music?

Since 1989, Dr. Love has opened the doors of the upper floor of his building and thrown down with some of the best food and live jazz available in these parts.

"We seat about 70 people up here," he said. "When the bands play, we just have to rearrange the tables a little."

Once a week, a local group plays to capacity crowds who are older than most of the Aggieville clientele.

"The people that come out here are 25 and up," he said. "A lot of them are musicians themselves. We get players from every group."

Love said members of the K-State jazz ensemble and the K-State band have played in groups at the club.

"Everybody wants to play here because they can get closer to the audience," he said.

"Most players like to be close to the audience. They don't care about all that up-on-the-stage stuff."

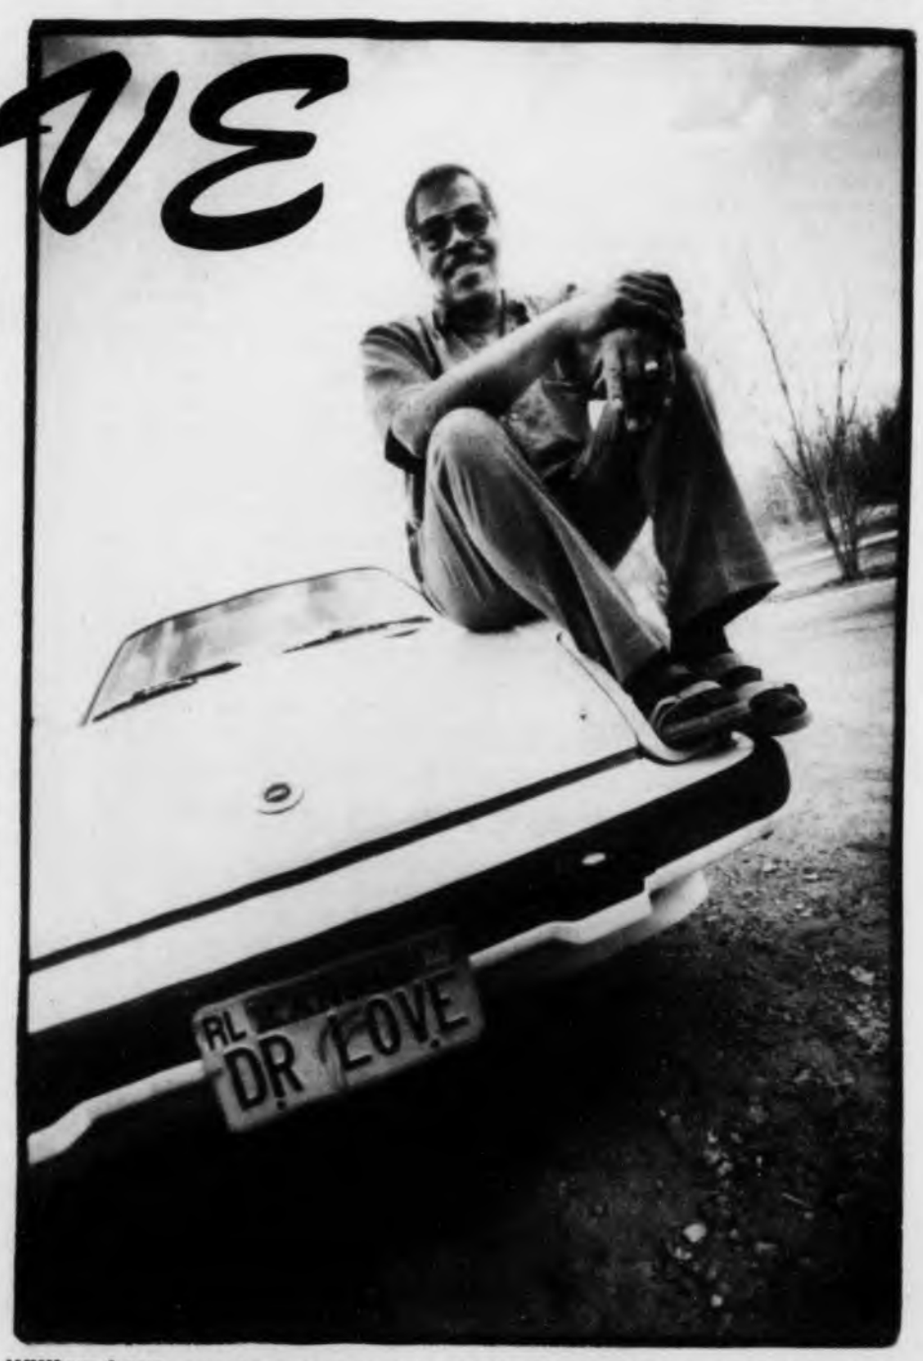
For the past few months, jazz night was Friday, but Dr. Love said he decided to move it back to its original Sunday night because he had gotten some complaints.

"The ladies wanted to have male dancers on Fridays. We have women dancers the rest of the week, except on jazz night. I guess they want to have the men on Fridays so they have all day Saturday to recover," Love said giggling.

Love said he prefers having the bands at the club on Sundays.

"You can do a lot of things on Sundays," he said. "I can have a barbecue buffet, seafood. See, I'm a gourmet cook, and that takes time. On Sundays, I got all day."

Wait a minute, now you're talking about a restaurant. When do people eat out here?



"Oh, we have a good lunch crowd," he said.

The restaurant serves everything from ribs and smoked meats, to shrimp and crab legs.

So what made a Tennessee native open a seafood joint in Manhattan?

"Twenty-one years and six months in the military," he said grinning.

"Fort Riley was my last tour, and I left here in '65 to go to Vietnam. My mother raised us into business, and that's just the way I think."

William Love, a native of Tennessee, sits atop his sports car in front of his club, which he opened in 1989. The license tags display his nickname, which is a combination of the initials of his two children and his last name.

Love has other interests besides his business. He and his wife have a 5-year-old daughter and a 9-year-old son. His wife is in the army. So he plays a big role in the upbringing of his kids.

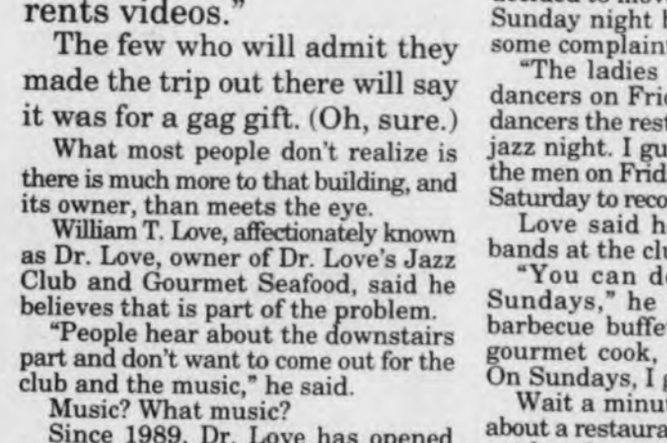
"I get those babies cleaned up and dressed, and by the time I get the house cleaned up and get them out of the house, it's time to come here and do the same thing, clean house," he said.

With this wholesome image, it's hard to imagine where the name 'Dr. Love' comes in.

"They started calling me that about 12 years ago," he said. "I'm not really sure why. I guess it's because everybody thinks I'm 'Dear Abby' or something."

Love said everyone is always telling him problems, including complete strangers. But he says that's OK with him.

"It makes my day," he said. "That way I don't have any."



Dr. Love's is a Class B private club. Private because he doesn't want the responsibility of having to cook to keep up that 30-percent food sales required by the state.

"I cook if I feel like it," Love said.

"If I don't feel like it, well, see, they should have ate before they came. The stuff I cook takes time. We're not Long John Silver's. I got FISH."

Love said his customers come to the club for different reasons, but one reason stands out.

"They mostly come to sit down and prop their feet up and listen to some live jazz," he said.

Dr. Love stands behind the bar of his blues and jazz club, which is located near the Manhattan Airport. The club also serves as a gourmet seafood restaurant.

Good directing, acting make 'River' a winner

Simple message teaches many lessons about life's struggles

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

"A River Runs through It" deserves every compliment it has received, from Robert Redford's solid directing to the actors' convincing performances.

The movie, set between 1910 and 1935, traces the relationship of two brothers, Norman and Paul McLean, as they grow up in Missoula, Mont.

Norman is the responsible and serious brother, while Paul is the brave, stubborn sibling who doesn't hesitate to do anything. Despite their different personalities, they always support each other.

Their father is a straitlaced Presbyterian minister who tries to influence them through his two great passions, his religion and his love of fly-fishing.

The boys' parents provide for them and love them, but the lack of communication within the family is a gaping hole in their relationship. This hole deepens as Norman goes off to Dartmouth College and Paul stays home to work for a nearby newspaper.

The only thread that holds a common denominator for the family is their love of fly-fishing, which the brothers and their father fall back on whenever life gets too complicated. Their salvation is the bubbling river, and fishing is the only way for them to communicate.

Brad Pitt, who plays the younger brother Paul, conveys the perfect image of a boy who will never grow up and doesn't realize that his fast-lane lifestyle will catch up to him sooner or later.

Craig Sheffer, as the older brother Norman, doesn't disappoint either. He is excellent in his portrayal of a concerned brother who tries to deal with his own life decisions, as well as worrying about what will become of his brother.

Tom Skerritt gives an equally potent performance as the stern father, who only knows how to communicate to his sons through their fishing expeditions.

Redford manages to mix all these performances, giving a clear idea of the boys' struggle to understand each other and the ever-lasting effect of the river in their lives.

"All things merge into one, and a river runs through it" seems to be the film's message. It is a message that is simple on the surface, but underneath serves as a metaphor for this family's struggles.

If you see one UPC film this year, make this one it.

COLUMN

Top 20 ranking should have been here Sooner

OK, Wildcat fans, let's begin this morning's column with a quick pop quiz.

Question: The K-State Wildcats are 13-3 because of ...

A. A tough and tenacious defense.
B. More leadership.
C. Smoke and mirrors.
D. All of the above.

If you answered C or D, either you haven't been to the games or you are a voter for the Associated Press basketball poll.

Welcome to the saga of the Rodney Dangerfields of college basketball — K-State.

TROY COVERDALE

Yes, the voters are starting to take notice, but it should have happened sooner.

After defeating Temple on Saturday, the Cats did pick up more than 80 votes in this week's poll to place them 30th in the nation.

But, where were those votes when we played KU to within six?

Where were those votes when we beat O-State — a preseason top 25 team — by 13 in Stillwater?

Where were those votes when we went on the road to defeat the University of Cal-Santa Barbara?

Although they won't readily admit it, the players definitely would like the accolades they deserve.

Anthony Beane (Big Eight Newcomer of the Year?) was asked about it Tuesday and, after some reluctance, said he thinks this team should be ranked.

Dana Altman (Coach of the Year?) hasn't stated it, but everyone knows his style is to downplay it, including thoughts of returning to the NCAA.

But the probable ranking and likely return to the promised land of the NCAA tournament has people around the state thinking highly of the Cats.

Now, if the rest of the nation would just wake up.

Wednesday night's so-called upset win over Oklahoma served as another attention-getter in a season that has seen many of them by a team that was picked for seventh in the conference.

But it still didn't capture everyone's attention.

That's why Monday night means a lot for this ball club. The Cats are at Missouri for an ESPN "Big Monday" match-up with a team that most figured to contend for the Big Eight title.

They will have to fight, claw and scratch for everything, especially rebounds against a Mizzou team that is one of the top in the country in rebounding margin.

They will have to win, and do so convincingly, as continued proof that a national ranking is deserved — not an easy task in the Hearnes Center. But it can be done.

By game time, we'll know if K-State is ranked for the first time in a few years. And if it isn't, look for Billy Tubbs' favorite expletive to hit the fan as K-State fans cry "foul."

And although Tubbs may not care how good this Wildcat team is, it is about time that the rest of the conference realizes that the K-State basketball tradition is still alive.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶ROYALS SIGN APE FOR $2 MILLION

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Kevin Appier, who made $390,000 last year while emerging as one of the most promising young righthanders in the American League, signed a $2 million contract Thursday with the Kansas City Royals.

Appier was 15-8 with a 2.46 ERA despite being slowed by shoulder problems in the final months. He earned the No. 1 spot in the rotation in spring and went on to record 150 strikeouts in 208 innings while finishing among the top 10 in ERA.

▶FIRST LOSS FOR IOWA SINCE DEATH

CHAMPAIGN, Ill. (AP) — Andy Kaufmann hit a desperation 3-pointer at the buzzer Thursday night to give Illinois a 78-77 Big Ten victory over No. 9 Iowa.

It was the first loss for the Hawkeyes (14-4, 3-3 league) since the death of forward Chris Street in a car accident. They had beaten Michigan and Michigan State.

Illinois (13-6, 6-2) trailed 77-75 with 1.5 seconds left when T.J. Wheeler inbounded from beneath his own basket.

Cardiac Cats keep on winning

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

They are slowly earning the title Cardiac Cats.

Six of K-State's games have been decided by two points or less. The Wildcats have gone to overtime three times.

In those eight games — one was a one-point, overtime win — the Wildcats are 7-1.

"That's a compliment to those kids," Coach Dana Altman said. "It says that they don't panic. They stay with what they want to do.

"And they execute down the stretch."

In all, the Wildcats have won nine of their last 10 games. Five of those victories have been decided by six points or less.

K-State's penchant for late-game success started early in the season against the Ohio Bobcats. The Wildcats needed a steal from Anthony Beane and a lay-up by Deryl Cunningham to force the game into overtime.

K-State came away with a 73-72 win.

The Wildcats then went on the road to post two-point and a one-point wins over Missouri-Kansas City and the University of Cal-Santa Barbara.

Big Eight overtime wins over both Oklahoma State and Colorado continued the trend for the Wildcats.

"It just says that we never quit," Anthony Beane said. "That's something that we started building off of since the first game."

The construction continued with a two-point road win against Nebraska and Wednesday night's 62-61 victory over Oklahoma.

"We really play hard, and good things happen when it comes down to the end," Beane said.

The lone blemish for K-State came in a Jan. 5 loss to Nevada-Reno. A Vincent Jackson foul at the end of regulation sent the Wolfpack to the free-throw line with a chance to seal the 83-82 win.

"When we get into those close situations, we know we have to be strong with the ball," Ron Lucas said. "Coach says that the toughest team wins."

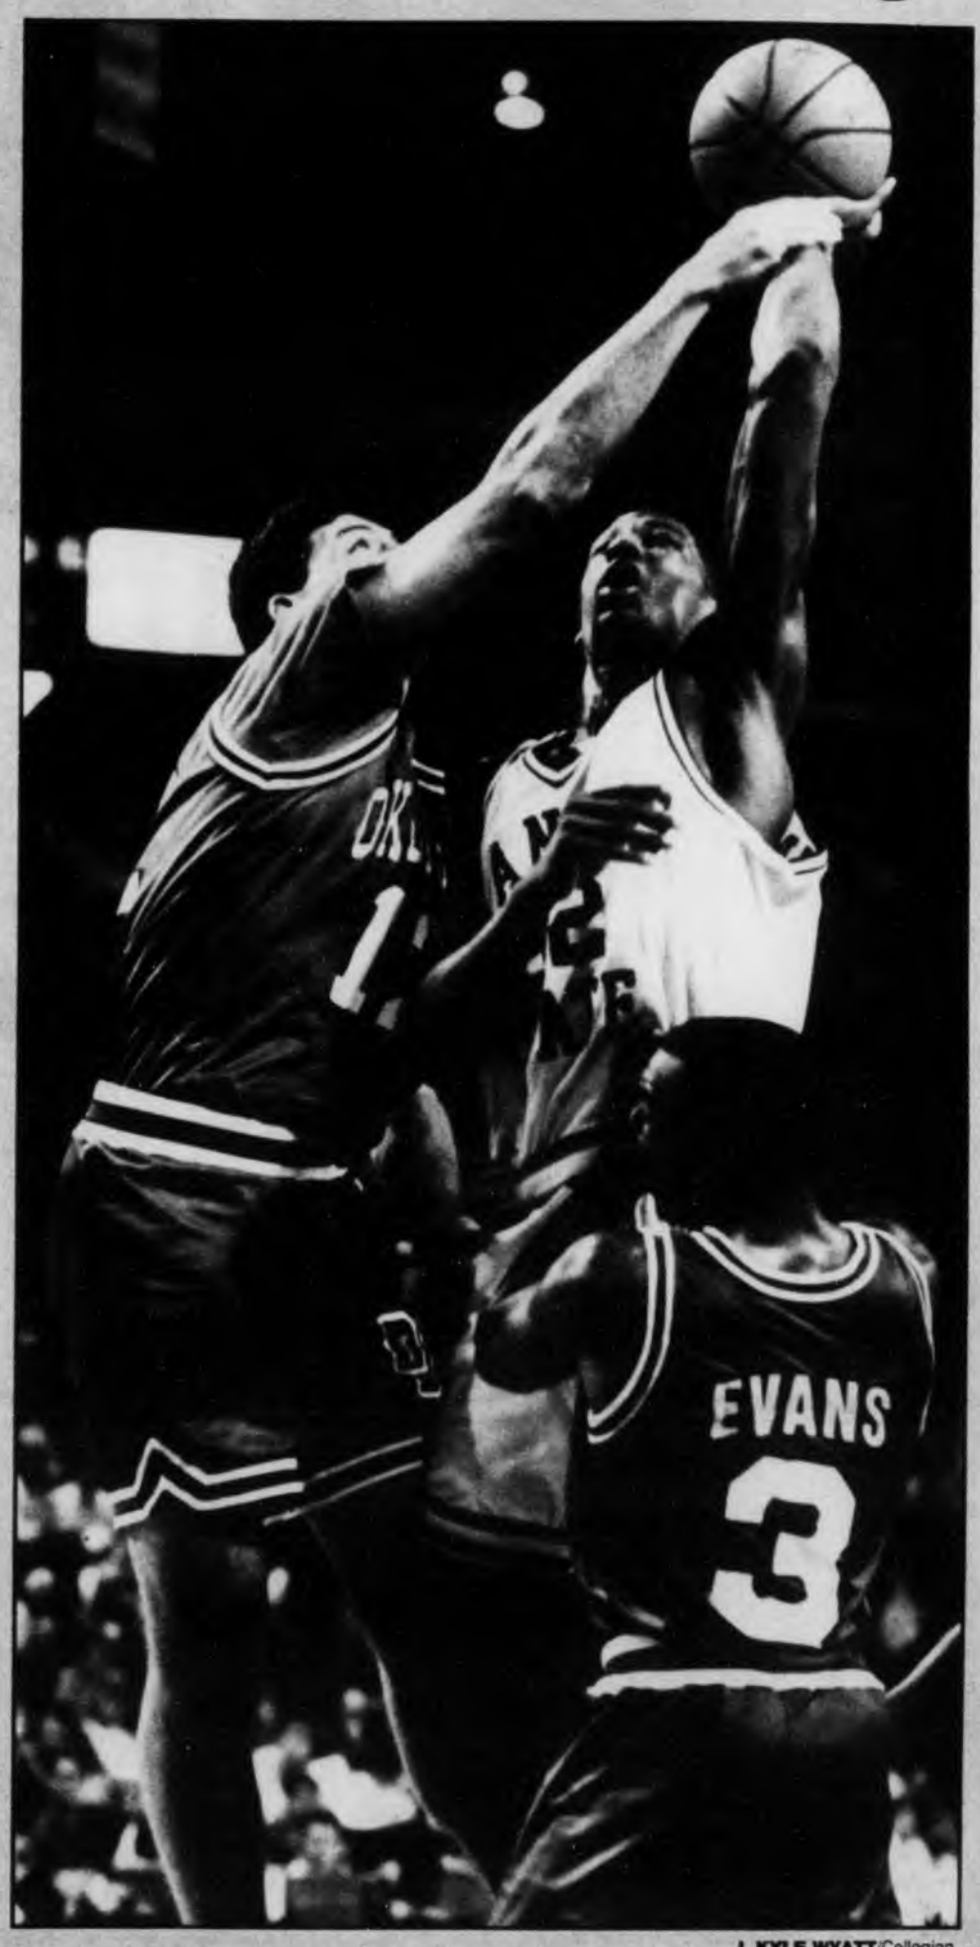
But Altman is quick to dispel talk that the Wildcats are in a position where they can feel comfortable playing any team in the nation.

"We're not there yet," he said. "I'd like to think we are, but we're not. We had some defensive lapses where OU was getting lay-ups.

"Good defensive teams don't do that."

Was the win over the No. 16 Sooners the type of game that could put K-State over the hump and thrust them into national recognition?

"Oh heck, I don't know," Altman said. "We have nine conference games to go. It's way too early to call it a hump game or anything like that."



But Altman did say that this is one of the finest Wildcat teams he has worked with in his tenure at K-State.

"I like this group of guys," he said. "They're fun to go to work with. They go to class, and they do what they're supposed to do.

"The fact that we're winning makes it nicer. They deserve to win, and I like to see it happen for them."

Lucas, much like many of the Cats, hasn't been able to pinpoint the reason for K-State's success in close games.

"Whatever it is," he said, "we hope it stays with us."

Lady Cats still looking for 1st Big 8 win

K-State hasn't won in conference since Jan. 25 of last year

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The Lady Cats, still looking for their first conference win, will play a pair of re-matches this weekend.

K-State plays Missouri at 7 tonight and Colorado at 1:30 p.m. Sunday. Both games are at Bramlage Coliseum.

The Lady Cats have lost to both teams once this season, 62-44 to Missouri and 61-33 to Colorado.

"When we took the first road trip, we had a solid game against Missouri," K-State coach Susan Yow said. "And we have a good chance against Colorado.

"I think any given day and night can be a big upset."

In Missouri's first win against the Lady Cats, Missouri shot just 41 percent from the floor.

"We didn't have a great ball game against K-State at home," Missouri's coach Joann Rutherford said. "We struggled a bit."

Missouri leads the Big Eight in team defense. The Tigers have three of their starting players in the top 10 in scoring in the conference. Missouri is led by junior Stacy Williams and seniors Vantrece Williams and Lynette Lineman. Top scorer Stacy Williams, a 5' 8" guard, averages 14.3 points per game and is fourth in the conference.

But K-State guard Gretchen Bertrand said the team will concentrate on its own game, rather than one person on the opposing team.

"I think we can definitely beat Missouri if we execute and play hard," she said.

Stacy Williams is fifth in the conference in scoring with an average of 13.9 points per game. Lineman, a 6-1 center, is ninth in the conference with 13.1 per game.

The Lady Cats haven't won a Big Eight game in their last 18 attempts. But Yow said K-State is not finished yet.

"We can cause some real problems for people in the Big Eight," she said.

And Rutherford said he feels the same way.

"We have to look past K-State's record," he said. "They're a respectable ballclub and are getting better each game."

The Lady Buffs are ranked fourth in the nation.

"Colorado's team is so poised and so good," Bertrand said.

And Yow said: "I think if there is one legitimate team in the conference that I consider a huge upset, it's Colorado."

The Lady Buffs are led by sophomore guard Shelley Sheetz, who averages 15.7 points per game, and forward Mindy Henry, who averages 12.4.

Yow said the Lady Cats' mental game is the most important aspect of the contest.

"Inconsistency in mental game and concentration can result in turnovers," she said. "I believe the inconceivable is conceivable."

The weekend doubleheader gives the Lady Cats a chance to post their first Big Eight victory since Jan. 25, 1992.

K-State has lost 18 straight conference games.

The Lady Cats were 2-12 in the Big Eight last season.

Wildcats to host weekend meets

DEREK NELSON
Collegian

The K-State men's and women's track teams hope to continue their dominance at home, as they play host to the KSU Pentathlon/Septathlon and the KSU/Coors Invitational this weekend.

K-State interim coach Cliff Rovelto said he does not plan to use the same lineup that has brought early season success to the Wildcats.

"We're holding a lot of people out of the meet and running a lot of people in off-events," he said.

"Next weekend, we're at the Husker Invitational in Lincoln, which is really one of the premier meets. We want to be fresh for that meet.

"We've also had a lot of people sick lately. There's something going around."

But Rovelto said he still expects the Wildcats to be competitive in most events.

He also said he will focus on individual performances, rather than on the team, because the meet will not be scored.

"Chris Pryor will run the 400 and will run well," he said. "Thomas Randolph opened up well last weekend. He's only been training for a couple of weeks and ran well."

K-State's long-distance runners will all run at a shorter distance than usual. Anthony Williams is expected to run in the 1000-meter for the first time this season, and Francis O'Neill will run only one race — the mile relay.

"I'm kind of excited," O'Neill said. "I've always wanted a chance to get my time down in the quarter.

"The change is to focus on just 400 meters."

In the field events, K-State will enter only Itai Margalit in the high jump. Margalit was one of three Wildcats to jump over 7 feet last weekend.

In the women's competition, Rovelto said he expects the Wildcats to be challenged by Arkansas and Barton County Community College.

"Arkansas has real strong distance and middle-distance runners, and so does Barton County," Rovelto said.

"All the races will be good races with quality runners."

One Wildcat who could be missing is Gwen Wentland. Wentland, who has fared well in two previous outings, may not compete in the invitational.

"Gwen has the flu and may not compete at all this weekend," Rovelto said. "If she does, it will be in her weaker events — the 55-meter hurdles and the shotput."

The meet will begin with the men's septathlon today, starting at 9 a.m. The women's pentathlon, set to start Saturday morning at 8:30, may be canceled due to a small number of entries.

K-State did not plan to enter anyone in the event.

The invitational, which will be Saturday, begins with the field events at noon, followed by running events at 2 p.m. All events are at Ahearn Field House.

Joining K-State in the field are Oklahoma State, Southwestern College, Emporia State, Wichita State, Southwest Missouri State and Barton County. Arkansas will compete in the women's events only.

Last week, the Wildcats won the KSU/KU/MU Triangular for the fourth time in four years.

Recruiting stresses offense; Cats land top quarterback

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Wildcat football offense finished last in the Big Eight Conference in total yardage last season. The Cats averaged just 244 yards a game.

During the 1991 campaign, in which K-State went 7-4, the Wildcats were second in the conference with a 385 yards-per-game average.

Coach Bill Snyder seemed to emphasize offensive improvement during off-season recruiting, hoping to return the Cat offense to the days of yesteryear.

Thursday afternoon, Snyder announced the names of 19 student-athletes signed to national letters of intent to play football for the Wildcats.

Twelve of those players are on the offensive side of the line of scrimmage.

"This class, on paper, looks to be a very respectable class and one that we're proud of," Snyder said. "We're pleased with the overall speed of this class at virtually every position."

Fifteen of the signees are straight out of high school, highlighted by quarterback Pete Jelovic from Lake Catholic High School in Mentor, Ohio.

Jelovic was his high school's starting quarterback during his junior and senior seasons, compiling a career record of 27-1. He led his team to the state championship his senior year.

"He's a great kid," Lake Catholic coach John Gibbons said. "I couldn't say any more about him.

"And he's a very intelligent quarterback."

Jelovic called his team's plays for the no-huddle offense in the championship game, throwing for 260 yards and four touchdowns.

For his career, the 6-foot 4-inch, 200-pounder completed 58 percent of his passes, racked up 4,831 yards and tossed 55 touchdowns.

"K-State's program is on the rise," Jelovic said. "But I'd really like to take it to the top."

Jelovic, who has visited the K-State campus, said the state of Kansas isn't what he thought it would be.

"I was a little surprised," he said. "I thought it was going to be flat. That's what everybody was telling me."

Jelovic, who is expected to redshirt next season, will be joined by some talented running backs with impressive credentials.

Running back Andre Anderson, out of West Palm Beach, Fla., rushed for 1,384 yards and averaged 11 yards a carry last fall at Suncoast High School. He was ranked one of the top 25 prospects in the state of Florida.

Mike Lawrence, also a running back out of south Florida, averaged 10 yards a carry and ran for 989 yards in just seven games.

A third running back to sign with the Cats is Eric Hickson, another speedster. He, too, averaged nearly 10 yards a carry en route to all-county honors.

But K-State didn't just focus on the skill positions. The Wildcats signed five offensive linemen, including two transfers that are expected to provide immediate help.

Bryan Campbell, who was the starting right guard on Colorado's 1990 national championship team, transferred to Cal-State Fullerton in 1991. When Cal-State dropped its football program, the Cats sought him.

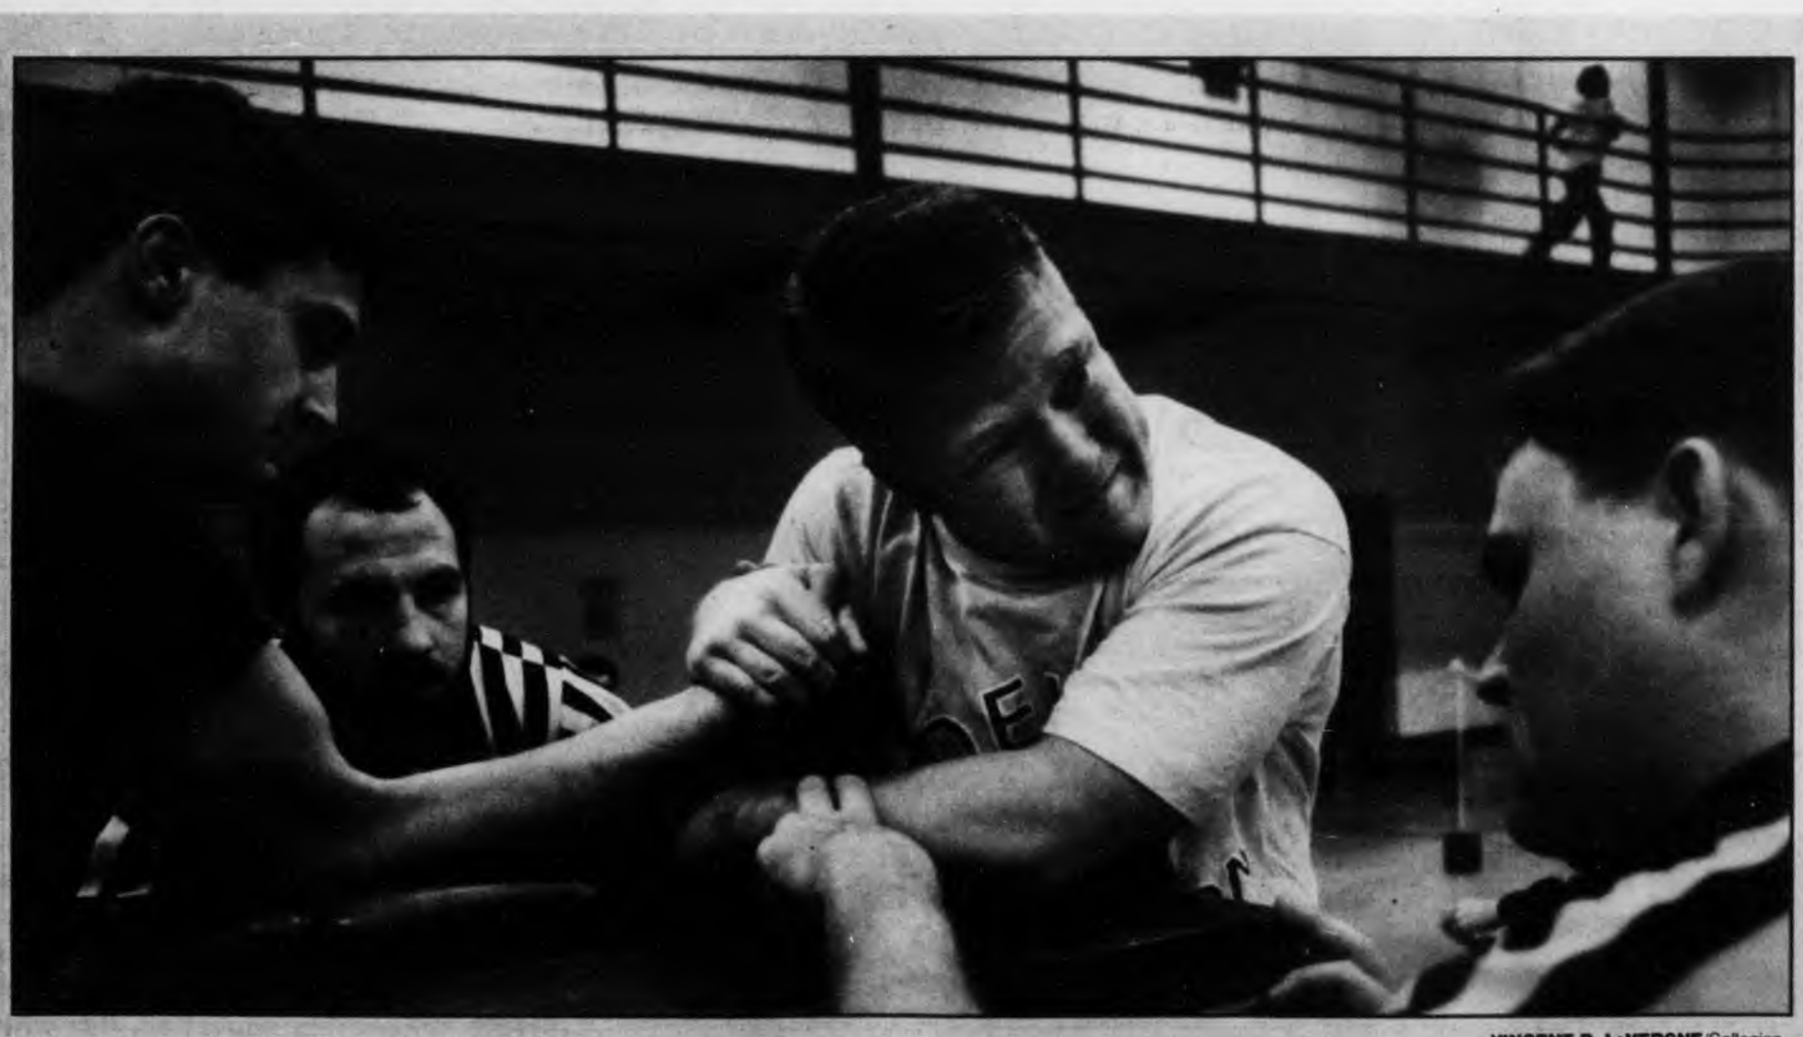
Campbell, 6-4 and 265, will be a senior.

Scott Heun, a junior-college transfer from Hutchinson, is a 300-pound junior who was voted the co-offensive player of the year for the Blue Dragons.

Snyder said he wasn't as pleased with his defensive signings as he was with his offensive signings, specifically the defensive line.

But the story of the recruiting was offense, as K-State also added talented wide receivers to complement the onslaught of running backs.

The Wildcats have three more scholarships available, but those are likely to be withheld until a later date.



Spring football begins in early April for K-State.

Snyder said he is worried about the academic eligibility of only one of the recruits.

May the strongest man — or woman — win.

That is the object of wristwrestling. The All-University Wristwrestling; Spring 1993 Tournament took place last night at Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

More than 200 students competed in the annual event.

Director of Recreational Services Steve Martini said the event was fun for the spectators as well as the participants.

"It's great. You can tell we're all having a good time with a good event," Martini said. "Most people who showed up to weigh-ins showed up."

The winners for the fraternity division were flyweight Steve Kimball, lightweight Mike Skahan, middleweight Steve Mosher and heavyweight Lane Massey.

Massey, senior in pre-law, said the competition was well organized. He has been involved for three years and won the heavyweight fraternity division for the past two years, he said.

"I've armwrestled in various state competitions, but this competition is fun," Massey said. "Steve does a good job running the competition, and it should be something everyone should try once."

The individual winners of the residence hall division were flyweight David Dye, lightweight Lyle Wedel, middleweight Steve Snyder and heavyweight Chris Hunven.

Independent division winners included flyweight champion Srinivas Krishnan, lightweight Tom Edwards and middleweight Tondo Waldron.

Waldron, a senior in public relations, said he was determined to win.

"I've lost in the final the last two years, and I was determined that this was going to be my year," Waldron said.

"It's just too bad that I won't be back here next year to defend the title."

The winners for the All-University were Krishnan in the flyweight division, Skahan in the lightweight division, Waldron in the middleweight division and Massey in the heavyweight division.

In the women's divisions, Kathi Moore won the 135 and below and Darci Liston took the 136 and above.

Liston, sophomore in education, said she got involved through her sorority to get points.

"It's a great way to get involved on campus," she said. "It's a lot of fun."

"I was determined that this was going to be my year."

LIVING ABOVE IT ALL

Until recently, apartments were available above Kite's. They have since been foreclosed and are now owned by Commerce Bank.

Aggieville residents cope with and get used to living above and among all the hubbub

Faint murmurs from a persistent young drunk attempting to get that last phone number for the evening emerge from the back alleys of Aggieville.

This situation is just one of many that annoy and entertain students who live in Aggieville.

"There are a lot of advantages to living in Aggieville, but sometimes more disadvantages," Traci Alt, senior in marketing, said.

Alt and five others live in an apartment above Dean Liquor.

An advantage to living in Aggieville is that she and her roommates are close to where they often party, Alt said.

"It's the social place for most students. We don't have to worry about designated drivers, and with our view overlooking Aggieville, we can see if a lot of people are out," she said.

Much can be seen and heard from their apartment, especially from one of their two living rooms facing Laramie Street.

"It's really noisy in the front living room, and you either have to get away from it, or you have to go in a bedroom or to the back living room," said Sara James, senior in secondary education.

Sometimes what the residents see and hear can be a little unpleasant.

"You can hear people throwing up in the parking lot, watch fights, listen to car stereos thumping," Debbie Miller, sophomore in sociology, said.

All roommates laughed in agreement about their favorite scenario to watch and listen:

"Guys trying to pick girls up before they go home. It's the funniest thing — to hear their lines and listen to the girls' reactions," Miller said .

For some people, the commotion in Aggieville might be too distracting.

"Sometimes it's hard to study, but it's not too different from other apartments — just on the weekends," James said.

As a result, a bookworm might find it hard to live in Aggieville.

"You don't necessarily party all of the time, but if you study all of the time, Aggieville is not the place to live," Alt said.

"I think a person has to like to party a little to live in Aggieville," she said. "I've lived here for two years, and it's been a lot of fun and a good place to live.

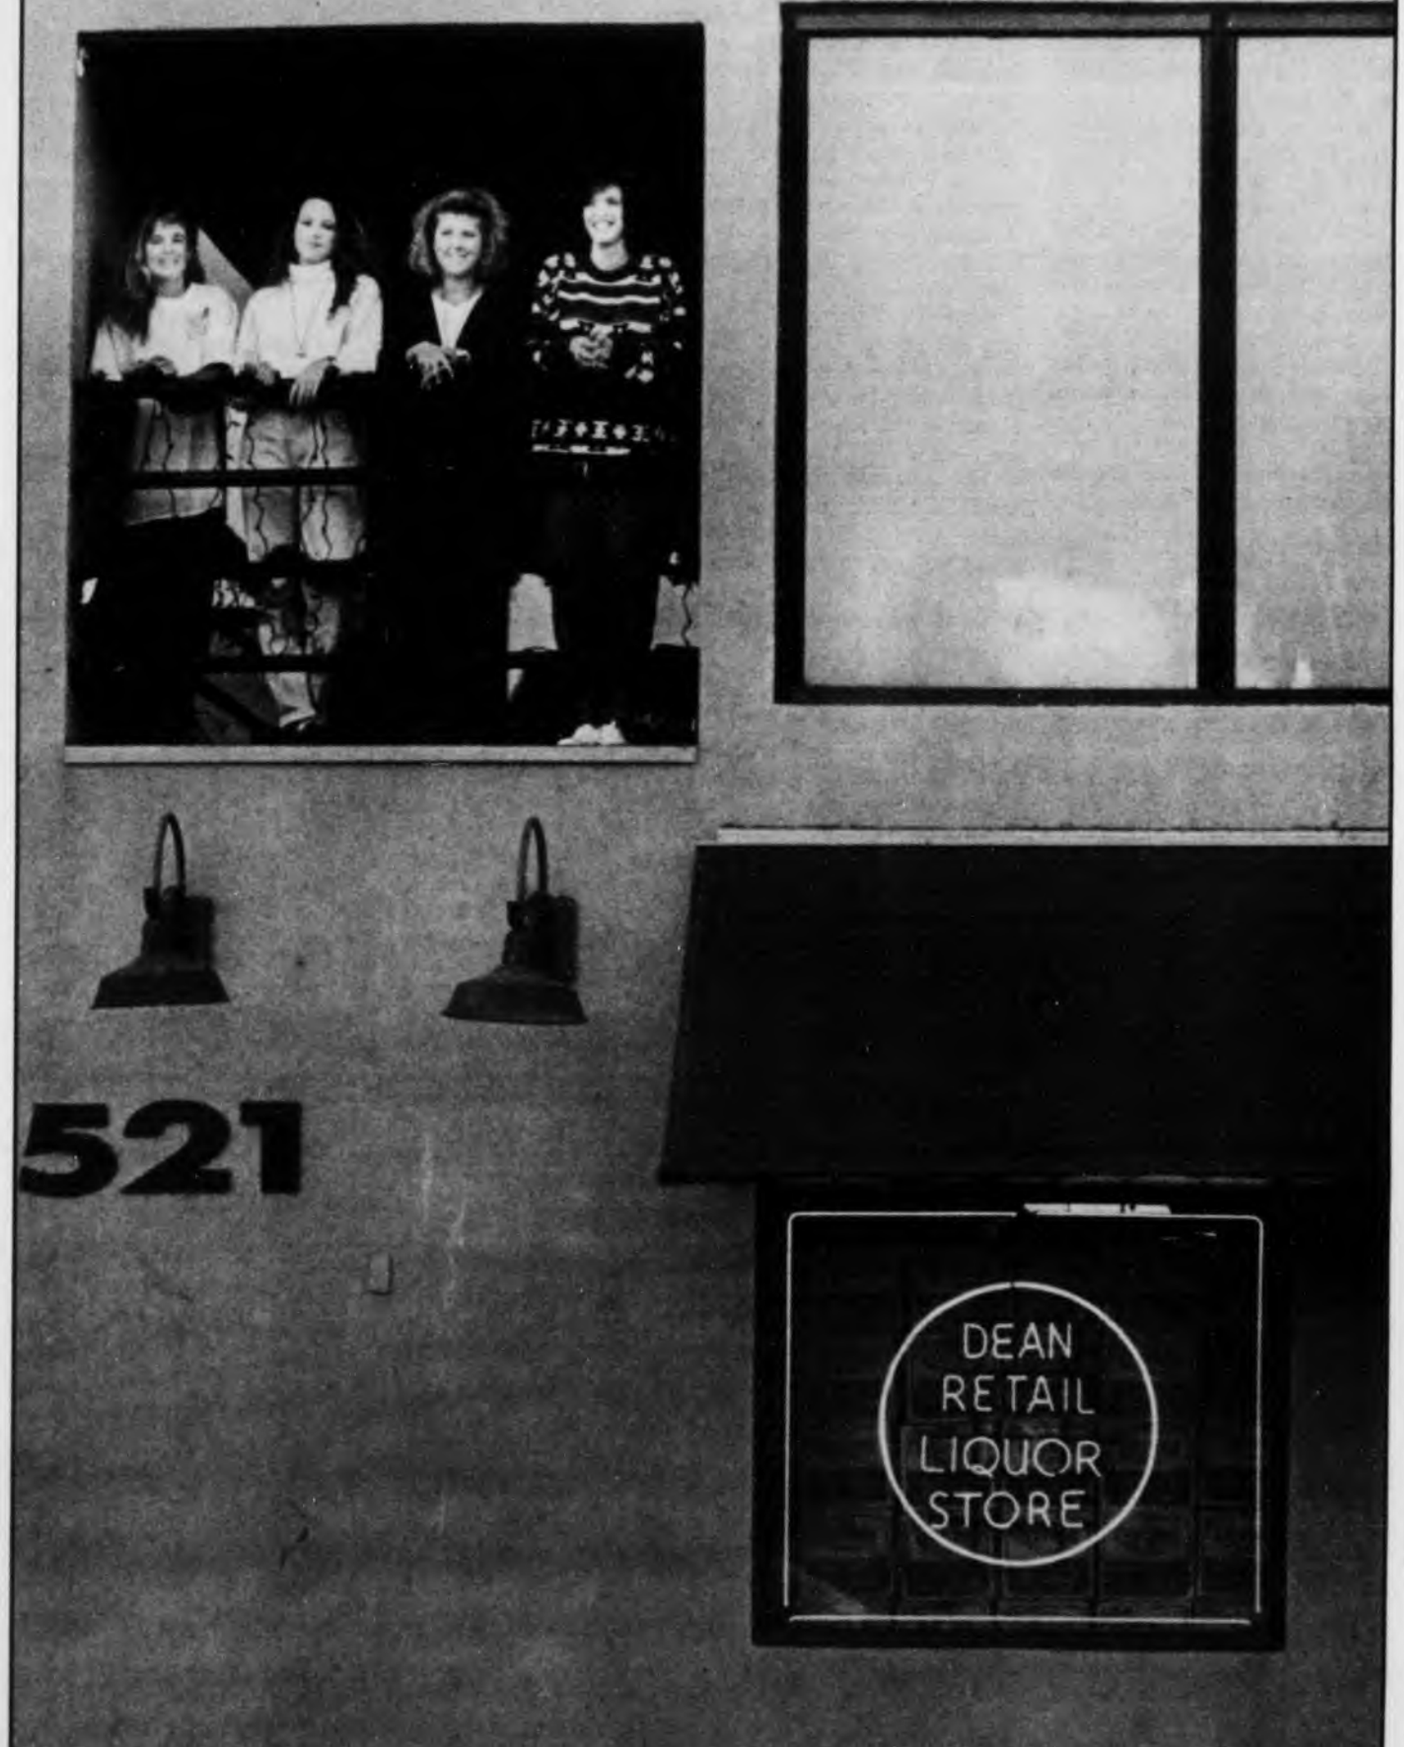
For Valerie Layman, senior in marketing who lives in an apartment behind Dean Liquor, it's convenient to live close to where she goes out with friends.

"It's not too noisy living this close — it's part of the reason I live here," she said.

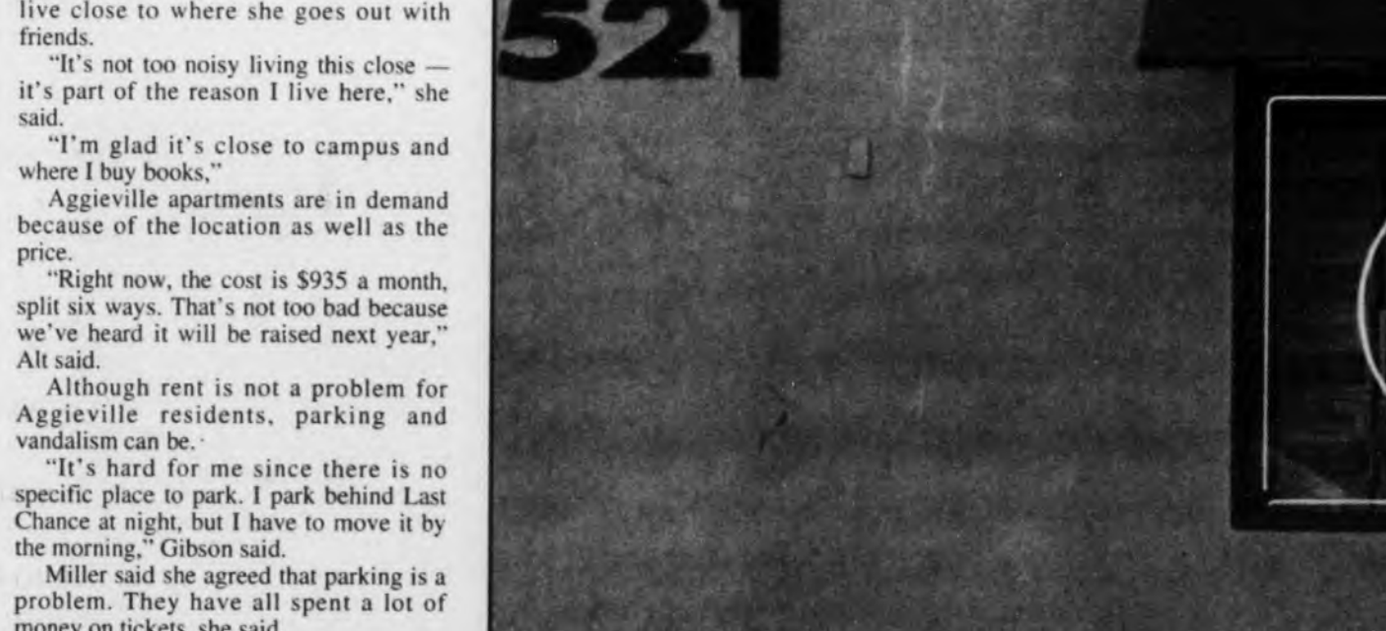
"I'm glad it's close to campus and where I buy books,"

Aggieville apartments are in demand because of the location as well as the price.

"Right now, the cost is $935 a month, split six ways. That's not too bad because we've heard it will be raised next year," Alt said.



Although rent is not a problem for Aggieville residents, parking and vandalism can be.



"It's hard for me since there is no specific place to park. I park behind Last Chance at night, but I have to move it by the morning," Gibson said.

Miller said she agreed that parking is a problem. They have all spent a lot of money on tickets, she said.

Alt said she has had problems with vandals.

"All of our cars were vandalized recently, and it was about $1,200 in damages," she said. "It gets to be very aggravating because no one besides residents are supposed to park in the lot behind our apartments."

Kents come alive on stage

Mini tour through 12 states will mean more exposure; recording companies might be watching

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

Hard work has paid off for the Kents, as they travel to Manhattan tonight during their 12-city mini tour. The band will play at Charlie's about 11:30 p.m.

The tour is only the beginning for the Kansas City-based band. College radio stations are eagerly playing the Kents' 1992 debut album, "Gauche," Paul Boschi, publicist for the band, said.

Their music is enjoying medium to heavy rotation on college radio stations, and their album has debuted as high as No. 15 on college radio charts.

The Kents have also received other accolades, such as best male vocalist, from "The Pitch" magazine. They were finalists at K-State's Opus Band Competition and took fourth place at the St. Louis Music Contest.

Boschi described the Kents as an alternative band, with a slightly mellower edge than bands like Sonic Youth. But, he said the band comes to life and has a more aggressive edge during it concerts.

Band members were nervous as they were preparing for the tour Wednesday. The reality of the opportunity was finally hitting them, Boschi said.

The tour will increase their exposure beyond the Midwest, to the West Coast where they will play in such cities as Denver, Salt Lake City and Portland, Ore.

They will finish the tour in San Francisco at the Gavin Conference. Sponsoring the conference as well as the tour is the Gavin Report, a music trade journal. The sponsorship honors bands from across the country that have the potential to make a mark in the music business.

This breakthrough is rare for a Midwestern band because opportunities here are not as plentiful as they would be if the band had come from the coast, Boschi said.

"It's not that the coast has better bands. They just have more of a means to get bands exposure," he said.

Increasing their audience exposure is not the only advantage of the tour. Two major record labels could be checking out their performances, Boschi said.

There also could be other record companies present any time during the tour.

Brothers in jazz highlight month

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

The Holmes Brothers will bring their brand of blues, jazz and gospel to McCain Auditorium Saturday.

Though they left their Virginia home 30 years ago, the band was only recently discovered.

Sherman Holmes and his younger brother, Wendell, left their home of Christchurch to play the bars in New York. There, they performed in various bands with singers such as Wilbert Harrison, who was popular for his hit "Kansas City."

Also playing with the brothers is drummer Willie "Popsy" Dixon. Both the brothers and Dixon have a strong gospel influence, having sung in church choirs when they were younger.

Gib Wharton is their steel guitarist. He met the band one night at a blues jam and was ordered on stage by Wendell. Wharton has been with the band ever since.

McCain Director Richard Martin said his first encounter with the band was in New York.

"I heard them in New York, in a bar called the Texas Roundhouse," Martin said. "Their management put them on a showcase and sent letters to various booking agents. So I went and saw them, and I loved them.

"It is also Black History Month, and I think people should have a chance to see a group that maybe they have never heard of before," Martin said.

The band is currently recording a score for the movie "Lotto Land."

"If we finish this before next week, it will be the second album we've put out since before Christmas," Sherman Holmes said.

He said he hopes the other album will be out by early spring.

"We have some overdubbing and mixing to do still," he said. "It will be called 'Virginia.' "

The Holmes Brothers will play at 8 p.m. Saturday in McCain. Tickets are $15 for the general public and faculty, $13 for senior citizens and children, and $7.50 for students.

Cleanup to round up pesticides

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MANHATTAN — A spring cleanup is planned to help rid hundreds of farms in four counties of unwanted pesticides.

Pesticides will be picked up in Riley, Pottawatomie, Morris and Marshall counties in April after questionnaires are sent to farmers, said Dennis Peterson, director of the Riley County noxious weed department.

Peterson's office, equipment and storage facilities, will be used in the program, which is mostly financed by an $80,000 federal grant applied for jointly by the Kansas State Board of Agriculture and the Kansas Department of Health and Environment.

The cleanup is a pilot program, Peterson said Thursday.

"The success will determine the scope in future years," he said.

The four counties participated earlier in a household hazardous waste roundup. Much of the training and equipment from that program will be used in this one.

Three people in each county have been trained to handle the chemicals, which will be brought to designated sites by farmers.

There is no charge to the farmers and no disposal costs to the treasuries of the counties. The only local taxpayer cost will be the labor.

Riley County has a permanent household waste storage facility to which the collected materials will go.

An Illinois contractor, Chemical Waste Management, eventually will take the materials and burn them in an incinerator approved by the Environmental Protection Agency.

Peterson said enough money is budgeted to fill 100 55-gallon barrels with material. He said about 200 pounds can be packed into each barrel.

The four counties have about 3,000 farmers, who later this month will receive a questionnaire to determine who has materials, Peterson said. In March, the appointments will be made, and the chemicals will be collected in April.

KU memorandum sparks controversy with a faculty whose credentials cannot even compare to ours ... with a student body of significantly lower quality; at the same time, the state has failed to provide adequate resources to fund the state's one public law school. In a sentence, the state law school is in the process of getting leveled while a low-quality law school gets improved."

Jerry suggested that the $600,000 to $700,000 the Washburn Law School receives annually from the state should be given to the KU Law School.

Whether to maintain two law schools or make Washburn's school a branch of the KU school is an issue in the continuing debate over whether to take Washburn into the regents university system. Washburn is the last municipal university in the U.S., supported in large part by local property taxes but also receiving some state funding.

Jerry was in Boston attending a meeting of the American Bar Association and issued his statement through the KU University Relations office Thursday.

"I am dismayed that a private memo written to my immediate supervisor has been leaked to the press," he said.

"Also, I regret the public release of some extremely casual language in that memo, because I believe that the Washburn School of Law has made tremendous strides under the excellent leadership of Jim Concannon and has many outstanding alumni in the state and nation and is a quality institution.

"I have always thought that Kansas needs two quality law schools, as it has today. I do, however, stand behind the concerns I expressed in that memo about the funding for my own institution."

Concannon, dean of the Washburn Law School, also was attending the ABA meeting. Jerry said he met with Concannon in Boston "to express my regret that someone would attempt to damage the positive relationship between us and our schools."

Jardine residents allege segregation

to find out if segregation does or does not exist at Jardine.

"I think if any reasonable person were given the same situation, at least their curiosity would be piqued," he said. "As an elected representative of Jardine, I have a responsibility to investigate such things."

As mayor, Walters said he is familiar with the living conditions at Jardine.

"In Jardine, there are still apartments that don't have showers, and there are some apartments that haven't been renovated in 25 years," he said. "One apartment I know of had not been painted in 10 years. It was so bad the guy checked right back out.

"I know for a fact that international students have been checked into apartments that have bathroom tiles falling off into the bathtub, that have floor tiles lifting and breaking, that have refrigerators full of cockroaches," Walters said.

Applications for housing in Jardine give students the option of choosing between furnished and unfurnished apartments, Tunstall said.

Because most of the unrenovated buildings have furnished apartments, international students tend to be placed there because they have no furniture, Tunstall said.

Currently, 150 of the 576 apartments at Jardine have bathtubs but lack showers.

Of the 24 buildings at Jardine, 14 have been renovated, Tunstall said. Each building contains 24 apartments.

Wiley said the renovated buildings have bathtubs and showers. He also said more will be added this semester and during the next fiscal year.

Cockroach problems often occur because some students refuse to allow the exterminator to spray their apartments, Tunstall said.

"That's our biggest obstacle," she said. "We can't force everyone to participate."

She said the housing department offers roach bait free of charge to those who request it.

Walters said he thinks it is in the best interest of all parties to hold off on the investigation until more information is available.

"I have no understanding of any segregation at this time or any proof that international students are being segregated, but I've had these complaints," Walters said. He said a decision about whether to proceed with an investigation will probably be made next week.

The commission's first job will be to find out if an investigation is necessary, Walters said.

"It will not be a standing committee," he said. "Its whole purpose is merely to decide if there's enough evidence or reason to continue an investigation.

"If they determine adequate evidence, they'll begin doing a statistical analysis," he said.

Walters said commission members will complete a door-to-door survey to determine the distribution of international students and American students at Jardine.

"We're going to look at where nationalities are placed, and if we do find that there is segregation, we are going to ask the Department of Housing to explain this," Walters said.

Wiley said the Housing Department is totally self-supportive and, therefore, sensitive to its residents' needs.

"If students don't live with us, we can't afford to operate," he said. "We're like a hotel or a motel. We must maintain our property, be good PR people and provide good services, or people will not live with us."

Suicide doctor assists in 2 more deaths

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SOUTHFIELD, Mich. — Dr. Jack Kevorkian helped two sick, elderly people kill themselves Thursday, making them the 10th and 11th patients the self-styled suicide doctor has helped to die.

Kevorkian's lawyer said a flurry of people have been seeking the doctor's help in dying before a temporary state ban on assisted suicide takes effect March 30.

Kevorkian, a retired pathologist, has said he intends to ignore the law because he believes it's immoral.

The two latest suicides occurred about noon Thursday in Leland, Mich., said Kevorkian's lawyer, Geoffrey Fieger.

Fieger identified the dead as 82-year-old Stanley Ball, in whose home the deaths occurred, and 73-year-old Mary Biernat of Crown Point, Ind.

Ball, who was blind, suffered from pancreatic cancer and had jaundice as a result. Biernat had breast cancer that had spread into her chest, Fieger said.

"Both of the patients were in extreme pain and needless to say were near death," Fieger told reporters at his Southfield office.

He said Kevorkian had been counseling the two for about a month. Kevorkian had been unwilling to travel to Indiana for Biernat's death, because he was unsure what Indiana authorities would do, the lawyer said. Indiana has no law against assisted suicide.

"There might be some prosecutors down there who would want to appease the right-to-lifers, and I couldn't help him there," Fieger said.

Ball allowed the use of his home for both suicides. Biernat was driven there by her children.

Fieger said Kevorkian called him shortly after noon to tell him of the deaths, both by carbon monoxide poisoning. Biernat's two sons were present, as were Ball's son and the son's fiancee.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Reader finds good vibrations alone

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I'm writing in response to "Horny and Indecisive." It sounds as if he is very much in love with his girlfriend, and losing her would be devastating. It's important for him to realize feelings like this happen to many people. There are going to be many times when temptation comes along, and how one deals with that temptation depends on how strong one is.

Is it worth it to sacrifice your future with such a special person just to have a few flings? I know it's not because of a similar experience.

"Horny and Indecisive" mentions in his letter that he has found the woman he wants to start a family with. If he truly feels that way, risking losing her forever would be a mistake. People that special don't come along everyday.

I suggest listening to your heart and praying to God for the strength to do what you know is right.

Forever Faithful

DEAR FAITHFUL,

I had a feeling "Horny and Indecisive" would get responses like yours.

Thanks for writing.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I am so devastated after recently breaking up with my boyfriend, but I realize what I miss the most is the incredible sex that we experienced.

Because I don't want to become involved with anyone so soon, I have begun using a vibrator to give myself pleasure every night — in order to sleep fitfully.

Cassandra, I need to know if a vibrator will decrease my sex drive by using it regularly or if I should continue to enjoy my pleasure.

Feeling Good Alone

DEAR (NOT) ALONE,

Such devices have never decreased my sex drive — regardless of how frequently I've used them.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

RAPE LAW

Ellis County sees rape conviction

Consent only factor disputed; county attorney seeks life sentence

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HAYS — A recent rape conviction was Ellis County's first in at least 23 years, and County Attorney Glenn Braun hopes the case will help reverse the disturbing trend.

"Women in this town simply did not report sexual assault cases because they knew they couldn't get a conviction in Ellis County," Braun said.

But last Thursday, a 12-member jury convicted Douglas M. Willis of raping a 29-year-old Hays woman in August. District Judge Tom Scott, who went on the bench in 1970, said there had been only two other rape cases tried in the county since then, both ending in acquittals.

"This case validates things for the victim," Braun said. "It's definitely the biggest trial I have ever been involved with in terms of what it could do for the community."

Barb Strobel, director of the Northwest Kansas Family Shelter, said rapes go unreported for several reasons, such as lack of evidence and the emotional scars they can leave on victims.

She said 18 rapes were reported to her office last year, but only three cases got as far as the county attorney's office. Most were never pursued at all.

"It's hard on women, and we always go with them when they talk to the police so they have that support," she said. "The most important thing to remember is that when they go to court, they get raped all over again."

Strobel said she has seen growing numbers of rapes in which the victim is dating or knows the defendant in some way.

Braun said the Willis case struck right at the heart of the issue of consent. There was no question as to whether or not sexual intercourse took place, and even though alcohol was involved, the only issue was consent.

Some Kansas lawmakers now are seeking action on a bill that would remove all mention of voluntary drinking from the rape law. Some prosecutors have said the current statute prevents prosecution if alcohol is involved. Other lawmakers and some prosecutors, like Braun, believe the rape statute is fine as it is.

In Riley County last fall, a prosecutor decided against pursuing a well-publicized case at K-State. Riley County District Attorney William Kennedy said the statute makes it difficult to prosecute if the accuser has been willingly drinking.

Braun said he disagrees with that interpretation, citing the Willis case, in which the rape victim acknowledged she was intoxicated.

The prosecutor said the victim's lifestyle also became an issue at the trial, but the jury was able to see the law as the bottom line.

"The fact is, you don't have to approve of her lifestyle or the choices she made in life," Braun said. "She stood her ground, and I admire her a lot for that."

He said he plans to ask for the maximum sentence of life in prison when Willis returns to court in March.

Alcohol remains a case factor; new law proposed

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

An incident on the K-State campus this September has made some Kansas legislators think the state's rape law should be changed.

The law currently reads that sex is rape when a person is "incapable of giving consent because of the effects of any alcoholic liquor, narcotic, drug or other substance administered to the victim by the offender, or by another person with the offender's knowledge, unless the victim voluntarily consumes or allows the administration of the substance with knowledge of its nature."

Rep. Gwen Welshimer, D-Wichita, has sponsored the bill to change the law in the Kansas House of Representatives, and he said he thinks that phrase is inconsistent with other crimes.

"I want removed the reference to alcohol and drugs when a woman, or any victim, is raped," Welshimer said. "There is no mention of it (drugs and alcohol) in the car theft law. It's not in assault, murder or burglary. A crime is a crime."

Last fall, the campout for basketball tickets was canceled when a female student claimed a male student raped her. The male student was not prosecuted because Riley County District Attorney Bill Kennedy said he believed the clause made the case unprosecutable.

Kennedy said at the time the male, female and several witnesses had voluntarily consumed alcohol, and as a result he decided not to prosecute the case.

Rep. Mike O'Neal, R-Hutchinson, chairman of the judicial committee, has appointed a sub-committee to study the issue.

"My understanding about what they are going to address is the attorney general wants to make the bill a little stronger than what I'd drawn up," Welshimer said.

Members of the Senate are currently drawing up similar legislation.

GM pays damages, joins ranks of other liability cases

"The problem is getting this mammoth corporation to accept responsibility. Do it for a 17-year-old boy who did not deserve to die."
JAMES BUTLER
ATTORNEY FOR THE PLAINTIFF

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ATLANTA — A jury found the nation's biggest automaker negligent Thursday in the fuel-tank design of a General Motors pickup truck and awarded $105.2 million to parents of a teen-ager killed in a fiery 1989 crash.

The Fulton County State Court jury awarded 17-year-old Shannon Moseley's parents $101 million in punitive damages and $4.2 million for the value of his life. The parents' lawyer had asked for $100 million in punitive damages.

"The problem is getting this mammoth corporation to accept responsibility," attorney James Butler said. "Do it for a 17-year-old boy who did not deserve to die."

GM attorney Fred Bartlit told jurors the verdict itself was already a crushing blow to the company.

The judge has the power to lower the award, but Butler said if that happens, it typically wouldn't be soon.

The company said in a statement later Thursday it would appeal the verdict. Georgia law gives the judge the option to increase or lower a jury award, but Judge A.L. Thompson did not say whether he would.

The award was the largest ever in a lawsuit against GM over the sidesaddle fuel tank design of its older pickup truck models, said Clarence Ditlow, executive director of the Center for Auto Safety, a Washington-based consumer advocacy group.

Most other lawsuits over the GM fuel tank were settled out of court, and the results were sealed.

The largest damage award in a product liability case given by a jury was $128.5 million against Ford Motor Co. in 1978 for a gas tank explosion that severely burned a 13-year-old boy in California.

GM has been under criticism for the design, which placed the fuel tank outside the truck frame in about 4.7 million 1973 to 1987 Chevrolet and GMC C-K series full-size pickups. Most of those trucks are believed to be still in use. Critics contend the design made the trucks more likely to catch fire in accidents.

The company argued the design complied with federal safety standards. Government certification depends largely on results of tests done by the automakers themselves. In the case of the older GM pickups, those submissions remain under federal review as consumer groups press for a recall.

In a similar design problem, Ford voluntarily recalled 1971-76 Pinto sedans after the government alleged that gas tank defects made them likely to explode when hit from behind. In 1980, Ford settled one lawsuit stemming from a Pinto crash for less than $2 million.

The Georgia lawsuit was brought by Thomas and Elaine Moseley of suburban Snellville. They smiled and hugged their lawyers after the verdict was read.

Meeting planned to discuss allegations

"They do give you a choice, but when you go in there they say this is all we have if you look shabby or foreign."

ABDELLAH LAYTIMI
JARDINE RESIDENT

WADE SISSON
Collegian

A meeting between residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments and the Department of Housing and Dining Services is expected to open the lines of communication about the possibility of segregation at Jardine.

The outcome of the meeting, which will be at 8 p.m. Feb. 16 at the community center in Jardine, will determine if allegations of segregation need to be investigated further.

Abdellah Laytimi, graduate student in mechanical engineering and Jardine resident, said he plans to attend the meeting to talk about the issue.

"I want to just say that whoever came forward first and reported segregation, I'm going to support them because you can just drive around and see buildings with Indians and buildings with white Americans," he said.

Laytimi said he thinks there is segregation at Jardine. He said he and his wife applied for a renovated apartment at Jardine and were assigned one but were later told it was not available.

"They do give you a choice, but when you go in there they say this is all we have if you look shabby or foreign," he said.

Laytimi said what bothered him was people who moved in after him were given a renovated apartment.

"You come to this country to learn different cultures and meet different people, but if you put all the cultures together, you don't learn anything," Laytimi said.

He said he likes his unrenovated apartment but does have a complaint.

"The only thing I don't like is the problem of cockroaches," he said. "We went and bought roach traps ourselves because the spray they use here doesn't work.

"And if you don't let them spray, you get a letter saying they'll kick you out."

Jeffrey Henning, a Jardine resident from August 1989 to December 1991, said the tendency was to have people of the same nationality housed together.

"For the most part, there were two or three buildings that were mostly African American or Asian American, and a white section, too," Henning said.

He said he thinks the students request to be placed with others of the same nationality.

"There are cultural differences, and I think that's why they felt some urgency to do that," he said. "I think it was the tenants themselves who urged the administration to keep the cultures together."

Henning's wife Kristin, a senior in art therapy, said she experienced an incident that, to her, implied there was segregation at Jardine.

"I know the first semester I was getting my ID, and the lady at enrollment saw my address and said, 'Oh, you're not in the white section.'"

Todd Nafus, a manager of Jardine in charge of five buildings and a senior in education, said he did not know whether there was any segregation based on nationality.

His wife and co-manager, Kathleen, said where a student is placed depends on when they apply for housing.

"A lot of times, foreign students come to town and say they need a room right away, and they usually get placed in an unrenovated apartment," she said.

"The Americans that check in know to get on the list early. So, they get what they want," she said. "We've never had problems living here.

K-Staters express views on gay ban

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE
Collegian

The determination of President Bill Clinton to lift the ban aimed at keeping gays out of the military has evoked mixed responses from members of three organizations at K-State.

Major David Liese, recruiting operations officer for Army ROTC at K-State, said he agreed integrating gays into the military will undermine its morale and cohesiveness. He said revoking the ban on gays in the military asks the majority of people in the military to change their way of thinking and to believe something other than what they have been taught while growing up.

Liese said, however, he was not speaking for the Army, but was only expressing his opinions.

"Homosexuality is not right and natural," Liese said.

Kent Donovan, associate professor of history and adviser to the Bisexual and Gay and Lesbian Society, said homosexuality is likely a genetic behavior as it is difficult to reverse.

He said it is a mistake to view lifting the ban as a success or failure for gays.

"It is a civil rights issue," Donovan said.

Arthur Ashe dies after battle with AIDS

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — Arthur Ashe was alert and full of questions in his final hours, and he reassured his doctor by making the OK hand sign shortly before his death from AIDS-related pneumonia, the physician said Sunday.

Dr. Henry W. Murray and lawyer Donald Dell, a longtime friend of Ashe's, held an emotional news conference at New York Hospital where the tennis legend died Saturday at age 49.

"He used to say, 'Don't feel sorry for me,'" said Dell. "He clearly felt he was not a victim. Whatever happened, he would rise to that particular occasion. It was just another challenge."

Murray said Ashe was fully alert Saturday and asked questions about things such as who the next U.S. attorney general might be.

"His last gesture to me was this," Murray said, making the circular OK sign with his thumb and forefinger.

President Clinton mourned the death of Ashe, the only black man to win Wimbledon and the U.S. Open.

"He was a friend of mine. I'm really sad about it," Clinton said Sunday as he walked to church in Washington.

After winning a tournament in Japan, tennis star Martina Navratilova offered a prayer for Ashe.

"I ask that we stop for a moment of silence here to remember an extraordinary human being who transcended his sport, his race, religion and nationality and in his own way helped to change the world," Navratilova said. "We will always remember you, Arthur."

Ashe, who contracted the AIDS virus from a tainted blood transfusion, was credited with helping break racial barriers in professional tennis.

"It was thanks to him that I could have a career in tennis," said Frenchman Yannick Noah, who is black.

Ashe announced that he had AIDS last April at a news conference prompted by a newspaper's planned story exposing his condition.

He defended his right to keep his illness private but nevertheless became active in the fight against AIDS, forming a fund-raising foundation and joining many AIDS boards.

"The sports world has lost a tremendous spokesperson for AIDS," said Julian Rush, executive director of the Colorado AIDS Project in Denver. "No one didn't like Arthur Ashe."

Murray said Ashe's swift decline was "unusual, but (it) happens." More extraordinary was Ashe's excellent health in the 4 1/2 years after he was diagnosed, despite his typically busy schedule, the doctor said.

"He said it was better than sitting home and thinking about dying," Dell said.

Legislators meet, discuss issues

Senators, representatives meet with constituents in first of forum series

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

No eggs were served, just coffee.

Nevertheless, about 70 people came to the Manhattan Town Center Saturday morning to discuss issues with five Kansas senators and representatives. Questions ranged from retired military pay to making Washburn University part of the Kansas Board of Regents system.

This was the first in a series of Eggs and Issues forums for 1993, sponsored by the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

The first question asked was when taxes taken from retired military pay would be paid back. Kansas has collected taxes on the pay received from retired military personnel for several years, and the U.S. Supreme Court recently ruled states cannot continue to do so.

Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, said she wasn't sure Kansas had the money to pay back the veterans.

"The price tag to pay the retirees is $92 million. I have a grave concern about where the $92 million is going to come from," Hochhauser said.

"I don't think there's anyone who doesn't want to do the fair thing," she said. "But the fair thing means less money for the regents schools, less money for public schools. There is a pattern where the state has funds available, and the courts find it retroactive. Where there are no funds available, the courts have found no retroactive benefits available."

Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, was blunt.

"If the courts say we have to give it back, we'll give it back," Glasscock said. "If they say we don't have to give it back, we're not going to give it back."

This did not sit well with the crowd, which consisted mostly of older people. An attempt was made to change the subject, but another person returned to it, asking why the payback could not be made over a number of years, instead of in one lump sum.

"The hard facts are, there are very few of us that represent large areas of military," Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said. "The Legislature will look at a number of options."

Another question was raised about a bill that came before the House Taxation Committee, of which Glasscock is vice chairman. The bill would impose a 2.5-mill levy on property taxes in all counties with Kansas Board of Regents institutions. The money raised would go to fund capital improvements and maintenance at those schools.

"The bill, from my perspective, was mean-spirited and dopey," Glasscock said. "The notion that you have to buy the state institution in your county over time from the state of Kansas is an intellectually bankrupt notion. The bill was a mistake, and it certainly made me mad. It will not get heard in the taxation committee. It will be over my dead body."

The bill was introduced by the Shawnee County delegation to start debate about entering Washburn University in Topeka into the regents system, Glasscock said.

"I hope to send a message to the Shawnee County delegation that they cannot use the legislative process to shoehorn Washburn into the regents institutions," Glasscock said.

Rep. Don Rezac, D-Emmett, said most of his college-age constituents attend Washburn and he could understand Washburn's plight.

"I look at Washburn as the college from Topeka. Maybe we'll have to shut one (regents university) down before we can

Hochhauser expresses discontent

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

A public forum on Sunday featured Rep. Sheila Hochhauser, D-Manhattan, expressing discontent with the current Kansas legislative session.

"The issues we have to deal with are controversial, and they affect the daily lives of Kansans," Hochhauser said. "There are bills being introduced. I think they are of minimal value."

A group of eight community members raised various questions about problems facing Kansas, including Casino Gambling.

Because of the Federal Indian Game and Revenue Act, Kansas cannot tax casino gambling, but the state can negotiate a compact so the casinos are not detrimental to Kansas, she said.

"I don't think gambling is good economic development," she said.

Hochhauser said she thought it is a tragedy that the only economic option open to Indians is gaming.

Providing viable options besides gaming was one suggestion from a member of the small crowd.

"Casino gambling is the only thing they have," Paul Palenske, candidate for city commission, said.

Several aspects of health care were also debated during the two-hour meeting.

There are several areas of improvement, including health-related data systems and the lack of graduates in primary-care specialities, that need to be looked at, Hochhauser said.

Insurance should be a high priority for the Legislature also, she said.

"It's clear something is clearly happening in this state that is not happening anywhere else," Hochhauser said of rapidly rising insurance rates and lowered coverage.

Rape, personal welfare to be discussed during Campus Safety Week

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

Seventeen campus organizations have joined together to promote Campus Safety Awareness Week Feb. 8-12.

Students, faculty and staff will have an opportunity to learn about safety issues concerning this campus and other campuses across the nation.

Throughout the week, a table will be set up in the K-State Union, where participating sponsors of the event will be available to answer questions and distribute brochures.

Whistles will also be distributed to individuals at the Union.

Kelley Fink, health educator at Lafene Health Center, said students have questioned the availability of whistles in past semesters and sponsors of Campus Safety Week thought it was a good idea to provide them for safety purposes.

The whistles are metal and are designed for key chains. They will be distributed with an explanation of their importance, and it will be stressed that they be used at appropriate times.

At 7 p.m. on Monday, a Rape & Campus Safety Awareness Panel will discuss a variety of safety issues in Union 212. Representatives from University Counseling Services, the Women's Resource Center, the K-State Police Department and Lafene Health Center will be in attendance to answer questions.

At noon on Wednesday, the campus police will present "Personal Safety — Are You at Risk?" in the Union Courtyard.

Charles Beckom, chief of the campus police department, said the event will be include some of the basic things people frequently overlook that place them at risk.

"There are a number of small things people can do and signs they can look for that can remove them from being at risk," Beckom said.

At 7 p.m. on Thursday, a self-defense introduction course will be taught by Lisa Emigh, junior in psychology, and Rhonda Bathurst, senior in philosophy, in Union 212. Emigh and Bathurst teach in coordination with the Women's Resource Center.

Fink said she hopes more organizations recognize that safety is a campus-wide issue, and she has encouraged other departments to sponsor safety presentations.

Sponsors of the week hope the event will be successful and that it can be continued next fall.

"We want to address the issue as students arrive, because safety is an on-going issue," Fink said. "Students need to become more aware because they are still putting themselves at risk."

MESSAGES OF LIFE

MEGANNE MOORE
Collegian

The Kents brought their messages of life to Charlie's Neighborhood Bar Friday night.

The Kansas City band played to a large crowd, half of which were enthusiastic, while the other half seemed to be out merely for a drink.

Hitting Manhattan as part of their 12-city tour, The Kents will be rocking westward, where they will finish their tour in San Francisco.

Zen Farmers, an Emporia-based band, opened for The Kents' two-hour set.

An alternative band that has been described by their publicist as having, "a slightly mellower edge than bands like Sonic Youth," The Kents have earned a stable reputation. They have placed in various state competitions, which proves their sound is one that many people like.

This reviewer thought The Kents weren't anything more than the usual local alternative band.

They didn't shine through as a new band with a different sound, but as a new band resurrecting the old alternative sound with different chords and lyrics.

A strong guitar sound, mixed with a somewhat danceable beat that slowed at times, dominated the band's performance.

They focused much of their set toward what appeared to be their "faithful followers," who consisted of about 15 people standing inches from the tiny, jammed stage.

Only an indication of what was to come.

Once The Kents were well into their set, the audience had dwindled to the "followers" and about 30 others.

Obviously, The Kents were not astounding much of their audience, whether faithful or drunk.

Many songs from their debut album, "Gauche," blended as one, except for one Beatles tune.

At one point in the set, vocalist Mike Devine grabbed the audience's attention with the song "Student."

"This is for those out there still in school. It's not like the Army, and it's not like the Marines," he said.

The song is about the world at the grasp of many — not believing everything you're told and making your situation better: "This weight of the world is not upon your shoulders/I hope you won't regret this when you find you're older."

The Kents appear to be a band with a little money to spend. Their "mini" tour is being sponsored by the Gavin Report, a music trade journal, which gives them an advantage over other local bands.

They're clearly out for the exposure they will be receiving in the next few weeks.

The Kents are lucky to be one of the few Midwestern bands to have such an opportunity to tour larger cities, vying for a larger label.

Those who missed The Kents didn't miss an outstanding performance — just another local alternative band passing through town.

"This is for those out there still in school. It's not like the Army, and it's not like the Marines."

Music lives in Manhattan

WE SUGGEST

Keep your fingers crossed, Manhattan may have a live music scene after all.

The live music scene in Manhattan seems to be rising from the ashes. Knock on wood.

In the past, whenever the town's usually comatose music scene was on the brink of a possible revival, it would invariably come crashing down.

Well, let us be among the first to challenge fate.

With the arrival of a new establishment devoted to local and out-of-town music acts, Manhattan seems to be, once and for all, living up to the vision of entertainment that a college town should have.

Mitch Ulrich, owner of Vital Vinyl, is the man behind the turnaround. He started last fall with a few scattered shows featuring talented blues artists from around the country.

This semester, teaming up with local entrepreneur Ken Snook, Ulrich has set up a schedule that would make anyone familiar with the old Manhattan music vacuum (besides the usually underrated local talent) rub their eyes in disbelief.

So far, the crowds have been heavy and enthusiastic, just the thing needed to start the cycle that may bring more prominent artists someday soon.

In the past, telling someone that the Samples were going to play in Manhattan was a hilarious party joke.

But now music in Manhattan seems to be no longer a joke and you can thank Mitch Ulrich and the strong support of fans for the metamorphosis.

We just hope we didn't curse it.

America means no one true religion

Editor,

I find John Hart's statistics on the large number of Americans who favor voluntary prayer in schools and displays of religious symbols interesting. I would like to know, however, how Mr. Hart would feel if the voluntary prayer were not of a Christian fashion, perhaps prayer in schools could mean prayer to Allah or Buddha. Would you support that? How would you feel walking into a government office and seeing a pentagram behind the desk, or a small Santeria shrine in the corner? All are forms of religion, all protected under the First Amendment.

You've spoken before of how Christians are persecuted on this campus and by the media as a whole, which may be true. Yet, Christians seem very intolerant of other peoples' religious beliefs and are ready and willing to lead an attack against these people. If you heard of a sixth-grade teacher organizing a voluntary study of Wicca, I doubt you'd approve. Am I wrong in seeing a little bit of inconsistency in what you say you'd support and what you'd really support?

The U.S. is not a Christian state, it is a state with a very diverse religious heritage. Our government cannot pick one over the other, so I feel it is best for the government to stay out of the religious issue entirely.

Religion in school can't work, if for no other reason than to protect the minority, those not affiliated with Christianity, from the majority.

Fans have got to show support for team

Editor,

First of all, I just want to say, "In your face!" to all of those non-believers, past and present, of Dana Altman and the basketball team. They all have truly come through for K-State and its athletic program. I find it so sad that it takes solely winning games to gain support from K-State fans and alumni.

True school spirit consists of people sticking by their team through the good times as well as the bad. I guess people just don't understand that concept. It is so unfortunate that winning is always associated with intelligence, and losing is associated with stupidity.

Dana Altman is a classic example of this. When the athletic department hired Altman in 1991, so many people wrote him off. Now, since we're winning games, he is being praised by those same people.

C'mon, K-State fans, don't be so fair-weathered — just be a fan.

Myth prevails in 'Rafferty's World'

Editor,

I gotta respond to David-Michael's comic strip, "Rafferty's World."

Okay, David-Michael, I know you. I like you. I consider you my friend. But darn it, good buddy, I am disappointed. I am disappointed that you would jump on the bandwagon with the rest of the pseudo-intellectual, out-of-state swine who seem to derive great pleasure in dogging the folks from the Midwest.

I grew up in the Midwest. It's not the best place in the world. The Midwest is okay. I've seen minimal violence and crime here, and because of that, most criminal activity gets followed up on more promptly than in one of the urban paradises folks like you come from. So maybe we're a little backward. That does not imply that all of us possess a "lack of social complexity."

So lay off the Midwest. What you've heard is a myth. I think anyone who accuses an entire area of lacking social complexity is someone who lacks social complexity himself. I mean, the people of the Midwest are part of the whole social realm of humanity, so stereotyping them is as narrow-minded and prejudiced as most white-supremist, racially-exclusive behavior.

Playing with the enemy

Issue can be traced to NCAA, says columnist

I think that student athletes should be paid for what they do.

That being said, I don't think they should have to do all that they do.

It seems to me that the immense amount of practice time they put into their sports merits some sort of compensation. They do, after all, bring large amounts of money back to K-State, along with the prestige and profit that follows having a winning team.

Most student athletes are not on full scholarship or, for that matter, on any scholarship at all. Their responsibilities as members of a team can easily detract from their ability to provide for themselves. There is little or no time for them to work. For many athletes, scholarship availability is the key to making a university education possible, but scholarships can't pay for everything.

JOHN HAWKS

Athletics has other costs for its participants. The time spent in practice is time not spent studying. It is the rare athlete whose scholarly abilities allow him or her to achieve the academic performance that she or he could without being involved in sports activities.

Finally, athletes must put up with their fans. These fanatics give adulation to their teams in times of victory. In times of defeat, however, they offer only derision. Furthermore, these fans often do not subscribe to the same code of honor as the athletes, bringing them disgrace in the eyes of their opponents.

After looking at all these things, and thinking about all that athletes do to help support their communities and the University, I should think that we could agree that athletics is as much a job as it is a pastime. And yet, athletes are not now, nor are likely to be soon, paid for what they do.

The reason is not that there is not money available. Athletics brings tons of money back to the University. A small part of this could be easily diverted to those who really earn it.

The blocking character in this story is the NCAA. This mammoth athletic powermill strictly prohibits any payment of any substance to athletes. Furthermore, it regulates the number of scholarships that a university may offer and has impressive penalties for those who would disobey its commands.

K-State is caught in a terrible position. To compete in athletics at a high level, to obtain all the benefits, including money and national prestige, of having a major collegiate team, the University must be an NCAA Division 1A school, and must follow all the rules of the organization to the letter.

These rules, however, require us to treat our athletes as slave labor. Collegiate athletes are today's indentured servants. Two hundred years ago, people were slaves for seven years to receive passage to America. Today, they are slaves for four years to receive an education.

While some may argue that the education is worth it, that the "student" in "student athletes" is their primary role, those people forget that the adjective in English precedes the noun, and these students are known by the public only for their athletic identity. Our student athletes are thought of as athletes and are treated by sports fans as pre-professionals.

If we continue to do business this way, to put the interest of money and prestige above these athletes' rights as students, then we commit a gross injustice. If our athletes are not paid for their efforts, sports fanatics must begin to expect less of them. Victory cannot come at any cost. Their sports responsibilities must decrease, and their time to study and, if necessary, work, should fill the gap.

Or, if we are to keep on valuing victory above all else, then we must take action. The student athletes should be paid for what they do. If the rules of the NCAA cannot be changed to allow more of the money athletes earn to be channeled to them, then K-State should make a stand against the organization. The University should pull out of the NCAA.

The hype that this organization generates drives people to pressure athletes. This pressure can deprive athletes of time and money, or even worse, drive them to drug abuse and other personal problems. As a land grant university, it is K-State's job to stand up for the rights of the individual. We must support the idea of a fair day's pay for a fair day's work. If that goal cannot be achieved, then we must not contribute to the demise of the student athlete.

The code of sportsmanship tells the student athlete not to cheat. It is up to us to keep them from being cheated.

THE MAGNIFICENT SOUND OF Nature succumbing

ED SKOOG

Alarm clocks chirp throughout my house.

In my house, the roommates sleep through all alarms. The beeps come in short bursts, two at a time, in the key of F.

After two hours, after whatever the roommates were trying to wake up for, the alarms begin to sound like small birds.

I can almost see them. Behind a roommate's door, a goldfinch perches on his nose, his tail feathers resting on closed eyelids. By the stereo, a blue junco pecks at its reflection in a CD.

I'm going to unplug my alarm clock.

My room has nine windows. An angry flock of bluejays roosts in a redbud in the backyard. The sun and birds wake me up just after dawn, whether I need to get up or not. They don't care.

The roommates keep their shades drawn, their alarms going. My notion of birds chirruping around their rooms is exposed as hopeful anthropomorphism.

Roger Tory Peterson's Field Guide to North American Birds does not yet acknowledge the Sony Sleeper or the Panasonic Dream Machine as a member of Aves. But it ought to.

In the back of the Field Guide there would be a map, red denoting the alarm clock's winter range, blue meaning the nesting area.

A four-color diagram would illustrate the difference in molting patterns between various brands of alarm clocks. It would explain the extent of alarm clock sexual dimorphism. The number of young. Similar species.

Most useful, there would be a printed description of the alarm calls.

"A shrill but persistent 'eep-eep' repeated until the cows come home," R.T. Peterson would say.

My roommates' sleep is technological. Alarm clocks with 12 functions regulate their sleeping patterns. Their blankets are polymers. Their electric blankets are plugged into the wall. A light switch is on the wall. Plastic Venetian blinds cover their windows.

Despite the heavy industry of their slumber, they rarely wake up before noon. The alarm clocks attend them, watch over them, whisper to them.

This computer has a sleep function.

Alarm clocks replaced birds as the primary songsters of morning slowly during the last 50 years. Nature is replaced by technology everywhere you look.

I read coupons. Browsing through the Sunday Kansas City Star's coupon selection, I found a coupon for a free sample of pure NutraSweet. Sugar, the basic drug, is being replaced. NutraSweet is better than sugar. It causes cancer and makes a guy forget things.

Mediate on the NutraSweet symbol. It's a mandala. The great wheel. A hypnotist's disc. There are two white swirls against a red background. The tao. A pair of commas locked in eternal battle. The future of beauty. A flower. A sugar alternative.

Some people find it depressing, the replacement of things. And I agree that few things are worse than homes turned into insurance offices. Think of where you grew up. Imagine someone in your living room saying "coverage."

See the office supplies in your mother's kitchen cupboards.

At the Daytona International Speedway next Sunday, in warm Florida, state of senseless murders, there will be a form of replacement.

Kyle Petty and Dale Jarret will be in the front-row positions at the Daytona 500. Kyle's father, American hero Richard Petty, won Daytona seven times. Ned Jarret, father of Dale, is a two-time Winston Cup winner. Good luck to them both.

Other race car drivers' children are race car drivers. I have never heard of a race car driver's child not becoming a race car driver.

We all are doomed to do something someone else has already done, until the alarm clocks learn to sleep and our last job is to wake them.

Telephone fund-raising drive attracts national attention

"We're doing more than raising fund. We're getting students to talk to alumni."

RUSS MCMAHON
TELEFUND DIRECTOR

Alumni receive 'warm fuzzy feeling' after telefund appears on 'Today' show

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

Even Willard Scott on the "Today" show Wednesday morning became involved with the KSU Foundation Telefund. He displayed a T-shirt on the air promoting it.

"And you know that there are going to happen to be some K-State alumni who saw that and got a warm fuzzy feeling," Russ McMahon, the telefund director, said.

The national attention matches the national recognition the telephone campaign gets. It is the largest all-volunteer telephone fund-raising program in the nation. Last year, the program raised more than $765,000.

"It was the work of people in this position over about 12 years," McMahon said. "They kept the philosophy that the volunteer process is the best."

He said there are telephone fund-raising programs at other schools, but many use professional callers.

"We're doing more than raising funds," McMahon said. "We're getting students to talk to alumni. We are also teaching them about philanthropy."

The telefund program started Feb. 1. It is located at the Hollis Telefund Center on the third floor of the KSU Foundation building. It will run until Feb. 28, and volunteers call from 6 to 10 p.m.

Colleges provide their own volunteers. Each college comes up with a telefund administrator who is then in charge of recruiting individual phone volunteers.

"There's sign up and show up," said Scott Scrogin, special assistant to the dean of engineering. "We are fortunate in that we have one of the highest rates of participation."

Scrogin is the telefund administrator for the College of Engineering this year. Students from the different departments were asked to be team captains to help raise volunteers. Each team captain has been asked to try and sign at least 15 volunteer callers.

"Some will ask for volunteers in class," McMahon said. "Others will work through the officers of the various clubs."

That was how Jacquelyn Pinney, junior in interior design, got involved with telefund her freshman year.

"I'm in human ecology, and I had a friend who was a team captain for telefund and in a club I was in," Pinney said. "She roped me into it."

This is Pinney's third year of involvement with telefund, and this year she was a telefund prize solicitor.

"We got together over $5,000 worth of prizes," Pinney said. "Approximately 20 percent of the callers will receive a prize at random at the end of every calling session."

Some grand prizes will also be given away to those volunteers who raise the most money.

The Telefund Center can have 80 callers a night. The volunteers call from a list of alumni from their colleges.

"We have 30 minutes of training at the beginning," McMahon said. "Everyone needs communications skills. We're just giving them a chance to polish up on it."

The money raised is used by K-State's colleges for scholarships and educational materials.

"The students can certainly see the uses for the money, especially when they use the materials and services that are provided with those funds," Scrogin said. "The fund has thrived on student volunteers, and I think the alumni like to hear from the students."

Wildcats to play for 1st-place tie

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Who could have predicted this?

Fresh off a seventh-place conference finish in 1992, the K-State Wildcats will play for a chunk of the Big Eight lead tonight as they take on the Missouri Tigers.

Nebraska's 68-64 upset of Kansas Sunday has left the door open for the Cats, 4-1 in the Big Eight, to pull into a first-place tie with KU, now 5-1.

K-State should also sport a shiny Top 25 ranking as they play in front of a national ESPN audience at 8:35 p.m. in Columbia.

The Cats have now won nine of their last 10 games and should crack the polls for the first time since 1989 when the rankings are released later today.

But to keep up their momentum, the Cats first have to defeat the schizophrenic Tigers. Although their record is 14-6, Missouri has been struggling for leadership all season.

The Tigers lost their main go-to player Anthony Peeler to graduation. Peeler, now with the Los Angeles Lakers, was the Big Eight Player of the Year last season and led the Tigers in scoring and assists.

Without Peeler in the lineup, Missouri has lost home games to Arkansas and Memphis State, went to double-overtime against Southern Illinois-Carbondale and played sluggishly against Cal. State-Northridge until pulling away late.

K-State's Vincent Jackson, for one, said he was glad Peeler has left for the NBA.

"We played them pretty tight last year," he said. "Until Peeler took over.

K-State lost last season's Columbia match-up 67-59.

Tiger guard Melvin Booker enters the game as Missouri's leading scorer, averaging 16.2 points a game. Jevon Crudup is third in the Big Eight in rebounding with a 9.0 average.

"Mizzou is struggling right now," Jackson said. "But we're going to have to play them on the top of our game. It's hard to play in Columbia, and they're going to be ready for us."

For three of the Wildcats, tonight's game also may be big for other reasons. Jackson, and guards Anthony Beane and Brian Gavin, all call Missouri home.

Jackson graduated from Lincoln High School in East St. Louis and attended Moberly (Mo.) Junior College for two years.

"It's about two hours from my home. So, I'm looking forward to having my family there," he said.

Beane was born in Dexter, Mo., and played at Three Rivers (Mo.) Junior College. He also was contacted by Missouri recruiters while in high school, but said the Tiger's lack of interest in him out of junior college is not a big motivator for tonight's game.

"They're in the Big Eight conference — that's all the incentive I need," he said. "But I will be pumped up. It's going to be a big game for me because it is back at home."

The Tigers have not lost three games at home since the 1986 season and have not lost to K-State in Columbia since 1985.

K-State is 2-0 this season in conference road games.

"We've played a lot of tough games this year," forward Ron Lucas said. "And we're going to be prepared for Missouri. We're not going to roll over."

Beane said that for the Cats to continue their success, the team will have to keep the tough work ethic.

"If we continue to work hard and work hard in practice, we're as good as anybody in the conference," he said.

"But if we start to lay off and relax, that's when everything is going to shift."

Lady Cats' upset bid of Colorado falls short

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

All the facts pointed to an upset.

When fifth-ranked Colorado lost its only game this year, it trailed at halftime. The Lady Buffs were behind after the first 20 minutes against K-State Sunday.

The last time the Lady Cats led the Buffs at halftime was the last time the Lady Cats beat Colorado — two years ago.

All of that happened in Bramlage Coliseum. Yet, the Lady Buffaloes came back at the end of the game to beat K-State, 61-51.

Add this game to the 67-51 loss to Missouri Friday night, and K-State is 8-12 for the season and 0-9 in the Big Eight.

Colorado, 20-1 and 8-1 in the conference, crawled back from an eight-point down early in the second half to tie to the game with six minutes left.

Both teams traded baskets for the next five minutes until Sherrice King got a basket and was fouled by Kelly Moylan at the 1:24 mark, giving the Lady Buffaloes a lead they wouldn't lose.

"It was a situation that could have gone either way," Lady Cat coach Susan Yow said. "It was the key to the game," she said of Moylan's foul.

"We watched the tape, and it was hard to tell what the call was. It was a judgment call."

Colorado capitalized on K-State's mistakes and went on a 10-0 run to widen the margin.

Colorado head coach Ceal Barry praised the Lady Cat effort.

"You've got to give so much credit to the K-State coaching staff," she said. "Give credit to the kids for their execution. All of them did an outstanding job. That's a tough loss for them.

"I felt K-State was out-hustling us," she said. "They played through any kind of adversity."

And Yow said she was happy, despite the loss.

"I was really proud of the team," she said. "I thought they played together. It was one of our best games this year."

Andrea O'Neal came off the bench to score a season-high 19 points for the Lady Cats.

"I was pleased with her play," Yow said. "She took some good shots, and she had good rhythm. She felt comfortable today."

O'Neal made eight of her 12 shots.

"It seemed like when they were up on me, I could penetrate because it could work the floor, and I had more room to the basket," she said.

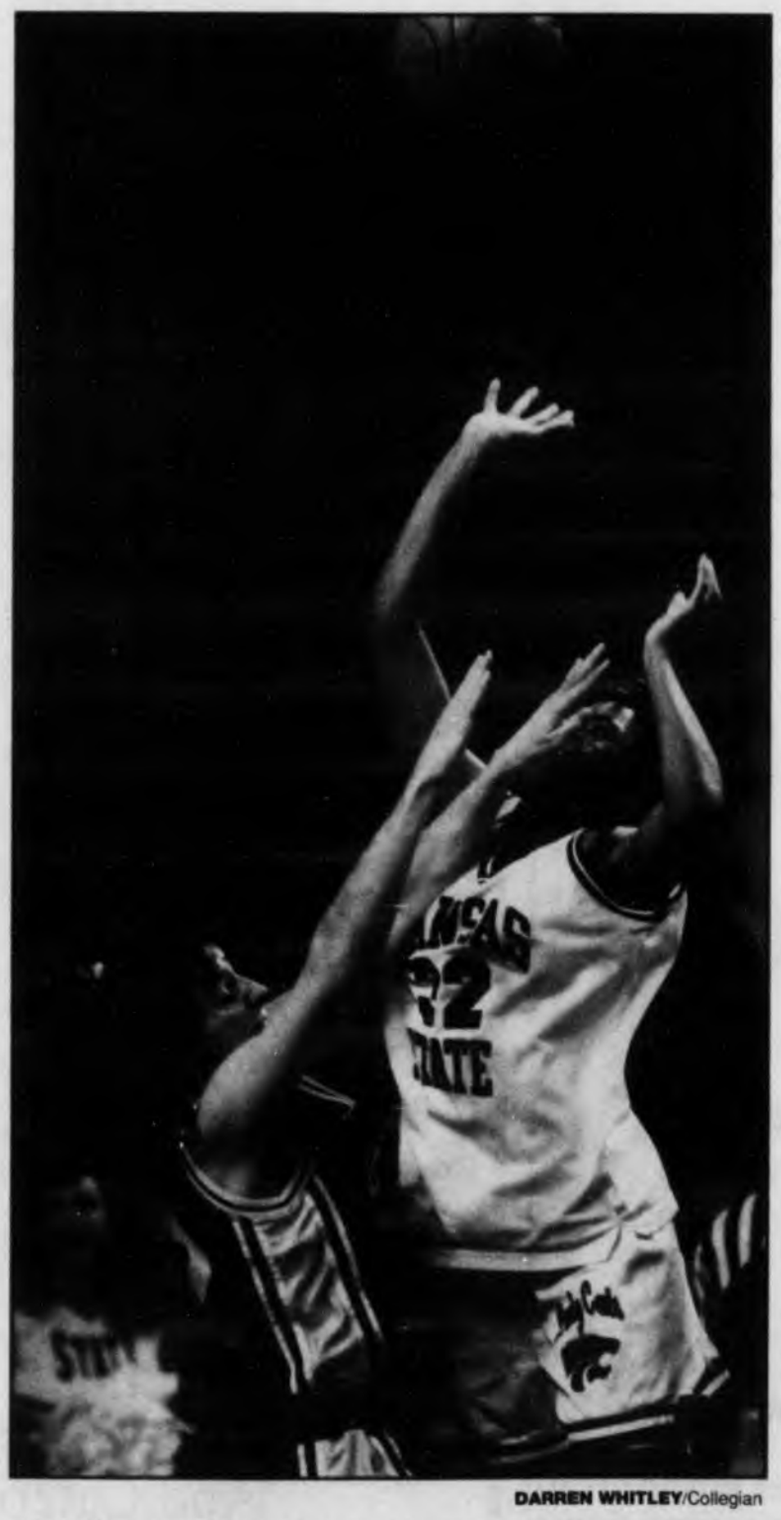
Another player who had success off the bench was Dana Pollock. Pollock scored eight points and grabbed five rebounds — both season-highs.

"I'm glad she had that type of game today," Yow said. "I put her in there and let her have it. She proved to me she could play against a well-coached team."

The coaches said this game is a step in the right direction for K-State.

"I think there are some games for us to win," Yow said. "I'd like to see us get three wins and get out of the cellar."

Barry said the Lady Cats have improved a lot since last season's 5-24 team.



"I think they have gained some confidence from this game. They are going to win a couple games — here and on the road," she said.

K-State will try for its first conference win since Jan. 25 of last year when it takes on Nebraska and Iowa State next weekend.

▶SHAQ RUINS COLLAPSIBLE BACKBOARD

PHOENIX (AP) — The first half of the Orlando Magic's game against the Phoenix Suns Sunday afternoon was delayed 35 minutes, after rookie Shaquille O'Neal ruined a collapsible backboard.

O'Neal's thunderous dunk in the first quarter of the Suns' 121-105 win brought the game to a standstill while it was replaced.

O'Neal finished the game with 20 points and 5 rebounds in 29 minutes.

▶AGASSI TOPS GILBERT FOR TITLE NO. 19

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Andre Agassi recovered after blowing three match points in the second set and beat No. 2 seed Brad Gilbert 6-2, 6-7 (4-7), 6-2 Sunday night to win the Volvo Tennis San Francisco tournament.

It was the 19th career singles title for Agassi, who had lost three straight times to Gilbert.

Gilbert, from nearby San Rafael, committed 48 unforced errors compared to just 26 for the No. 1-seeded Agassi.

▶WILDCATS RANKED 29 IN USA TODAY POLL

K-State is ranked 29th.

That is, of course, in the USA Today/CNN poll — not the Associated Press poll.

The Wildcats received 44 points.

Indiana held down the No. 1 spot for the second week in a row. The Hoosiers, with a 20-2 record, received 27 first-place votes out of a possible 34 votes. The other seven first-place votes went to 17-1 Kentucky, which received the No. 2 spot.

Duke, 17-3, climbed three spots to No. 3, while Michigan, 18-3, jumped five notches to No. 4.

Kansas, 18-3, fell two spots from three to five after its loss to Nebraska Sunday. Rounding out the top 10 are North Carolina, Arizona, Cincinnati, Iowa and Nevada-Las Vegas.

Only one other Big Eight school made the Top 25 — Oklahoma fell to No. 22 after falling to K-State Wednesday and Oklahoma State Saturday. Last week, the 14-7 Sooners were No. 13.

Oklahoma State received 17 points, Nebraska had 11 and Iowa State rounded out the Big Eight conference with 7.

The AP poll will be released later this afternoon.

CONFERENCE UPDATE — BIG 8 CONFERENCE

▶KANSAS

Record: 18-3, 5-1
Last week: Beat Missouri 86-69. Lost to Nebraska 68-64.
Coming up: Hosts Oklahoma State Wednesday and plays at Missouri Saturday.
Notes: The Jayhawks are shooting 54 percent from the field to lead the nation. Under Coach Roy Williams, Kansas has never finished lower than sixth nationally in field-goal percentage.

▶MISSOURI

Record: 14-6, 3-2
Last week: Lost to Kansas 86-69 and beat Cal-St. Northridge 65-54.
Coming up: Hosts K-State tonight, plays at Oklahoma Wednesday and hosts Kansas Saturday.
Notes: Missouri has used 12 different starting lineups in 20 games this season, with Melvin Booker being the lone Tiger to start all 20 games.

▶OKLAHOMA ST.

Record: 13-4, 4-3
Last week: Beat Colorado 85-61 and beat Oklahoma 83-76.
Coming up: Plays at Kansas Wednesday and hosts Colorado Saturday.
Notes: "Big Country," a.k.a. Bryant Reeves, currently leads the Big Eight in both scoring (18.7) and rebounding (9.9). Since 1965, only six players have led the conference in both categories.

▶IOWA STATE

Record: 14-6, 4-3
Last week: Beat Nebraska 96-69 and beat Colorado 94-74.
Coming up: Plays at K-State Wednesday and at Oklahoma Saturday.
Notes: Justus Thigpen is averaging 22.8 points in his last four games. He's had just seven turnovers in that time, and he is 60 percent of his shots. The Cyclones are the only Big Eight team undefeated at home (12-0).

▶OKLAHOMA

Record: 14-7, 2-4
Last week: Lost to K-State 62-61 and lost to Oklahoma State 83-76.
Coming up: Hosts Missouri Wednesday and Iowa State Saturday.
Notes: Sooner guard Terry Evans is looking to be just the fifth player in Big Eight history to lead the league in both steals and assists per game. He currently leads both, with 3.48 steals and 5.86 assists per game. Evans is also just five 3-pointers short of breaking former Wildcat Steve Henson's Big Eight record of 240 career treys.

▶NEBRASKA

Record: 15-7, 3-4
Last week: Lost to Iowa State 96-69 and beat Kansas 68-64.
Coming up: Plays at K-State Saturday.
Notes: The Huskers lead the Big Eight with an average of 5.67 3-pointers per game but made just three of 12 in defeating Kansas Sunday.

▶COLORADO

Record: 8-11, 0-7
Last week: Lost to Oklahoma State 85-61 and lost to Iowa State 94-74.
Coming up: Plays at OSU Saturday.
Notes: In Big Eight games, Colorado is ranked dead last in both team offense and team defense, scoring 60.7 points a game but yielding 87.3.

Track team contines to shine

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

A K-State runner leads the pack around the first turn of the 1,000-meter run Saturday afternoon at Ahearn Field House during the weekend track meet.

Margalit qualifies for NCAA meet

DEREK NELSON
Collegian

K-State freshman Itai Margalit was telling his parents about his performance Saturday — through a fax machine.

"I'm sending the results to my parents in Israel," he said.

Margalit's high jump of 7 feet 4 1/2 inches was a new Ahearn Field House record, a new K-State record, and automatically qualified him for the NCAA Indoor Track and Field Meet.

He also broke his own Israeli national record, which he had set last weekend.

Margalit is knocking on the door of the best high jumpers in the nation.

Prior to Saturday, 7-4 1/2 was the top mark in the nation this season.

"I had never competed in the U.S. before this season," he said. "Now, to compete with the big boys is great."

And K-State interim coach Cliff Rovelto is noticing his ability.

"It's kind of an understatement to say he's jumping well," he said. "That's better than he jumps outdoors."

Margalit missed improving on his outdoor performance when he fell short on his three attempts at 7-5 1/4.

Margalit has now set new K-State records in three successive weeks.

"From competition to competition, I just keep feeling better," he said.

But Margalit is one of only three K-State high jumpers doing well this season. Percell Gaskins and Ed Broxterman have also jumped more than 7-0 this season.

Neither, however, competed in the high jump this weekend.

Although Rovelto said Margalit's performance was the highlight of the meet, he said other Wildcat performances impressed him.

Thomas Randolph and Gerald Benton, both football players, finished first and second respectively in the 55-meter dash.

Both are provisional qualifiers for the NCAA meet.

"I thought Thomas Randolph and Gerald Benton ran really well," Rovelto said.

"A month ago, we were looking at no one scoring in the 55. Now we've got two guys that are doing very well.

"Travis Livingston won the 55-meter hurdles in only his third race of the year. He's really coming on," Rovelto said.

Randy Helling and Ryan Clive-Smith also pulled off a one-two finish in the 1,000 meters. Mike Becker won the mile.

In the women's events, K-State's Christy Ward won the shotput with a throw of 47 feet 8 inches on her final attempt. Kristen Schultz placed third in the event.

Barton County Community College and Arkansas dominated the women's meet.

Barton runners won seven of the 14 events, while Arkansas won four.

Many of K-State's runners were competing in events they do not usually enter. Some took the weekend off.

All of this was done to rest the squad for the Husker Invitational this Friday and Saturday in Lincoln, Neb., Rovelto said.

"That is a really competitive meet," he said. "In some events, it will be as good as the national meet.

"It will also serve as a good gauge for the Big Eight.

"Some of the kids are fatigued right now. I'm not really concerned about the performances," he said. "It's just that they're out there competing."

COLUMN

Big Eight road games mean more than wins

With a big game against the Missouri Tigers just hours away, a thought has come to me — the Wildcats really should win a couple more road games.

And not just because of the record — it was a whole lot of fun watching Cornhusker fans writhe in pain amidst the turmoil of losing to K-State just a few short weeks ago.

STEVE ROCK

Now don't get me wrong — I love this Cat team, I love the fact that we're winning, and I love the reality that my chances of heading to the NCAA tourney on a Collegian budget are getting closer every day.

But if you're looking for a deep, analytical article, get off the sports page.

"How could we lose to K-State?"

I can't count how many times I asked this question the night of Feb. 13 on the bar scene in Lincoln. I wanted reactions, and did I ever get them.

Let me explain.

I know that this Wildcat team is for real. I know that K-State is a legitimate contender for the Big Eight crown. I know that the scratch-and-claw, bust-your-butt, run-til-you-drop attitude that epitomizes Wildcat basketball is back.

I know that now, and I knew that then. Nebraska fans did not.

"There is no reason we should lose to K-State," one beleaguered fan said. "Unbelievable."

Under my breath, I could only chuckle.

"How could we lose to them?" was another response.

"Man, I don't know," I answered in mock disbelief. "Maybe K-State is good this year."

"No way."

Other fans chose to ignore the final score from Lincoln: K-State 66, Nebraska 64.

"Who cares? Nebraska is a football town, anyway."

It was Feb. 13, that's for sure.

The bar — Duffy's, I believe it was called — was surprisingly loud for an entourage of Husker fans that had just gone through a Cat scan. But nowhere could I find an answer to the ubiquitous question: Is K-State this good?

In fact, the loss was so devastating to Nebraska fans that they chose to talk about anything but the game.

One intoxicated gentleman —thinking I was an advertising major at Nebraska — all but got me a summer internship for a major advertising agency in Lincoln.

And another drunken Husker, this one a female whom I mistook for a member of the football team's offensive line, had a rather interesting question for myself and the two other members of my party — a photog friend and a former Collegianite.

"Do you guys ever measure your penis?" she asked sincerely.

She claimed to be with the University Daily Nebraskan, the student paper in Lincoln. My response?

"Why? Is this going to be an ongoing series? And how about accompanying photos and graphics?"

And people say the Collegian goes muckraking.

The point of this column? I'm not really sure. Maybe I'm just trying to give the basketball team added motivation to pound the Tigers — give Scott Abel the post-game opportunities that I had in Lincoln.

There's no better time than tonight to give Mr. Abel future column material.

Interesting sidenote: K-State enters tonight's contest with four players averaging in double figures. Dating back to the 1950-51 season, four players have averaged in double figures for the Wildcats just four times during the course of a season.

Three of those four teams won the Big Eight title, and all four teams advanced to the NCAA tourney.

Something worth remembering.

Huskers upset No. 3 Hawks

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LINCOLN, Neb. — Nebraska seems to have an unbeatable edge on Kansas when the Jayhawks come to the Bob Devaney Sports Center.

Freshman Terrance Badgett and senior Derrick Chandler led a second-half surge that lifted Nebraska to a 68-64 upset of a third-ranked Kansas on Sunday.

The Huskers (15-7 overall, 3-4) have won four of the last five meetings with the Jayhawks and are up 13-4 in meetings at Lincoln.

Nebraska' won last year's game at Lincoln in overtime on a last-second basket.

"I think we give them our best shot every year," Nebraska forward Bruce Chubick said. "Our crowd really got up for us today. They gave us a lift."

"Obviously, this is a very tough place to play," said Kansas center Eric Pauley, who managed only nine points and two rebounds against Chandler. "We've been beaten up here every time since I've been here. Don't take anything away from Nebraska, but we helped them win."

Kansas (18-3, 5-1) saw a 12-point second-half lead erased by a run led by Badgett, a redshirt who scored eight of his 11 points after halftime.

Nebraska trailed by 12 after Kansas' Rex Walters opened the second half with a 3-point jumper, one of only two baskets for the Jayhawks' leading scorer in the game.

"The first five minutes of the second half they like to take the crowd out of it," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said. "The kids really increased the intensity level. Our 1-3-1 defense was very effective. We went into that to stop penetration."

But on the other end, Badgett scored six points in a 11-point Husker run that put Nebraska up 44-43 with 12:58 to play.

The sellout crowd of 14,679 turned up the volume on the Jayhawks thereafter.

"We got our fans back," Chandler said. "We proved a lot of people wrong."

"Today we were fired up," NU forward Eric Piatkowski said. "We really needed this game. We were 2-4 in the Big Eight. We hadn't beaten a ranked team. We want to go to the NCAA. We were on national television. They are a team we've had success against in the past. Everything was perfect."

The Husker defense, in particular, was perfect. KU, one of the best shooting teams in the nation, hit only 28 percent after intermission.

"We were running a couple of different defenses, and we just seemed to get Kansas out of its rhythm," Nee said.

"Basically they did the same thing the second half as they had done in the first," Kansas coach Roy Williams said. "We just did not execute well the second half. We lost our poise. That's something teams like us aren't supposed to do."

Still, Kansas regained the lead twice in the next eight minutes before Jamar Johnson, Chubick and Chandler scored to put the Huskers up 61-57 with 3:40 left.

Steve Woodberry's follow shot evened the game at 64-64 with 45 seconds to play. Then Chandler hit a pair of free throws with 28.2 showing on the clock.

Walters then drove for the basket, missed and Badgett came down with the rebound. He was fouled by Walters but missed both free throws to give KU another shot.

Walters again drove for the basket, but Chandler tipped the ball out and Badgett came up with it. He raced for the basket and slammed a layup to put the icing on the Husker win.

"When you have the ball in Rex Walters' hands you have got the situation you want," Williams said. "He has won a lot of games for us. Don't remember it as two dumb plays made at the end of the game."

Chandler led Nebraska scoring with 19 points, Piatkowski added 16 and Badgett 11.

Woodberry was the only Kansas player in double figures with 17.

Lowery kick lifts AFC in Pro Bowl

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HONOLULU — Howie Long recovered a fumble by Steve Young to set up the winning score in overtime, a 33-yard field goal by Nick Lowery that gave the AFC a 23-20 victory over the NFC in the Pro Bowl on Sunday.

Young made the costly fumble just minutes after his dramatic touchdown pass to Rodney Hampton forced the overtime.

Kansas City's Derrick Thomas caught Young from behind on the fumble in overtime, and Long, of the Los Angeles Raiders, fell on the ball at the NFC 28.

After three running plays, Kansas City's Lowery made his third field goal of the game to win the all-star contest after 4:09 of overtime.

San Francisco's Young, scrambling on fourth-and-12 with time running out in regulation, found the Giants' Hampton open at the goal line, drilled the ball to him, and Hampton stepped into the end zone with 10 seconds remaining. New Orleans' Morten Andersen kicked the PAT to draw the NFC into a 20-20 tie and force the overtime.

Buffalo's Steve Tasker, who blocked a punt the previous week in the Super Bowl, blocked Andersen's field goal try earlier in the fourth quarter, and Terry McDaniel scooped up the ball and ran 28 yards to put the AFC ahead 20-13 with eight minutes remaining.

The AFC had turned another blocked Andersen field goal into its first touchdown, in the closing seconds of the first half.

The second time, Andersen was kicking from 53 yards out when Tasker broke though, blocked the ball up the field and batted it along trying to get possession.

The Los Angeles Raiders' McDaniel caught up with the play, grabbed the ball and ran the rest of the way to break a 13-13 deadlock with eight minutes remaining.

A few moments earlier, Tasker had forced a fumble on a punt return by the NFC's Johnny Bailey of Phoenix, but the AFC wasn't able to capitalize on that turnover.

The AFC came up with a goal-line stand late in the third quarter, with the game tied at 13-13 and the NFC on the 2-yard line after a 48-yard pass from Green Bay's Brett Favre to Jerry Rice of San Francisco.

The AFC defenders yielded just a single yard yard on the first three plays, then stopped Rickey Watters for no gain on fourth down.

Lowery kicked his second field goal of the game, a 29-yarder, midway through the third quarter to tie it at 13-all.

Buffalo strong safety Henry Jones intercepted Troy Aikman's pass at the AFC 26 and returned it to the NFC 42 to set up the field goal.

Lowery had kicked a 42-yard field goal with no time on the clock to make it 13-10 in a wild finish to the first half.

Castle provides solitude for writing

Zivanovic will spend summer in Scotland

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

Hawthornden Castle, a Scottish landmark a few miles outside of Edinburgh, sits high on a cliff overlooking the beautiful wilderness below. It provides a seclusion many writers only dream of.

Judith Zivanovic, associate dean of arts and sciences, will soon experience that seclusion. An aspiring author working on her first novel, she has been awarded the Hawthornden Fellowship. As part of the award, she is allowed to live in castle for a month this summer.

Zivanovic said the award is based on published work and references from people familiar with the work.

The authors must pay their own transportation costs, but each writer is given a study-bedroom equipped with a photocopier and computer. The castle has its own library of reference books.

"The amazing thing is that there will only be five writers there," Zivanovic said. "You are waited on hand and foot. They serve you breakfast, do your laundry and clean your room."

The staff even leaves lunch outside the door so they are not disturbed during the day, she said.

Zivanovic is writing a story on the life of Benno Martin, chief of police of Nuremburg, Germany, from 1933 to 1948.

"I am interested in this topic because I am third-generation German," Zivanovic said. "Also because my husband suffered tremendously as a child in Yugoslavia. His father was sent to a prison camp in Germany for years. Friends of his father were guerrilla fighters against the Nazis."

After receiving previous grants for her work on Holocaust Germany, Zivanovic came across Benno Martin within the readings.

"I began to see many interesting aspects of him," she said. "I have written a couple of plays on this period. However, there is so much material about this man, I was going to have to write a novel to fairly cover the material."

She spent last summer at a similar retreat, the Wurlitzer Foundation, in Taos, N.M. She said it was there that she developed years of research into the first draft of her novel.

"In Scotland I hope to accomplish some editing and more extensive development of the action and dialogue," she said.

Martin was a very ambitious Nazi, Zivanovic said.

"Martin engaged in machinations to save Jewish lives and property. At the same time, he was garnering honors in the Nazi Party," she said.

She also plans to spend a week in Edinburgh to do some research in the National Library of Scotland and at the university library there, she said.

"I anticipate finding material that I haven't found here."

Zivanovic also did the research and writing on this period because after the war people were denying the Holocaust ever happened, she said. Generations now are not learning about it.

"There is a resurgence of Nazi views in Germany and the United States. Neo-Nazi organizations are asserting that the Holocaust did not occur," she said. "Yet substantial numbers of records prove otherwise."

Group helps low-income families

Habitat for Humanity goal to improve housing

RITA KIDD
Collegian

The K-State chapter of Habitat for Humanity assisted the Salina affiliate in re-roofing a house Saturday.

The Salina group is currently working on two houses, and the work on Saturday involved re-roofing the second house. The group plans to renovate the entire house, one project at a time.

Habitat for Humanity was started in 1976. According to the Habitat handbook, the organization seeks to provide "a decent house in a decent community for God's people in need."

"It isn't just charity," Donna Shickman, publicity chairman, said. "It's housing for low-income families. We try to raise their standard of living as much as we can."

Students work alongside low-income families, sharing construction skills and work ethics, on houses in need of repair. According to Habitat for Humanity they try to eliminate poverty housing from the world.

The Habitat guidelines for the U.S. and Canada recommend a simple, decent, well-insulated, 1,000-square-foot, two- or three-bedroom house with one bath.

"There is a long selection process to be picked for projects," Shickman said.

Homeowners are chosen based on their level of need, their willingness to become partners in the program and their ability to repay the loan. They must also contribute some work hours of their own.

Any monetary gifts received by the Habitat are used for expenses which cannot be donated. Campus volunteers pay their own expenses, such as transportation and meals.

"Our main purpose is to raise money for the affiliates," Noel Priefert, president of the K-State chapter, said.

Fundraising, awareness of the organization and actual work projects are short term goals, Priefert said.

The Habitat has assisted in 10,846 house projects as of June 1991. Recent estimates report a much larger number of projects, Priefert said.

Jam session grabs crowd

Holmes Brothers display musical blending of styles

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

One long, intense jam session.

That was what it was like Saturday night in McCain Auditorium as the Holmes Brothers took the stage.

It was not a concert. Nothing the Holmes Brothers did made it even seem remotely like a concert.

Some had already realized this and showed up in jeans. Several times during the night, I kept expecting to turn around and find myself in a smoke-filled bar, sipping a beer.

There was no grand entrance, the band simply walked in — four regular guys who happened to be passing through.

There were no announced songs. They just began playing. I had to guess at the titles of some, or ask my fiance the name when he seemed to recognize one.

By the second song they weren't just playing their instruments — they were playing the audience.

"Come on now, and let me know if you can feel it," Wendell Holmes sang out.

"Everybody who can feel it, I want you to say yeah."

"Yeah!" The crowd was playing now, as well.

By the sixth song, I had given up reviewing and started clapping along with everybody else.

I was truly amazed at how much I enjoyed it. Wendell instantly reminded me of Louis Armstrong and Joe Cocker, all wrapped into one.

Sherman was there in the background with his strong bass voice, though I wanted to hear more. It didn't seem right not to clearly hear the bass.

Willie "Popsy" Dixon was on drums. It was one of the few down sides to the night. They seemed too loud, and I almost wished he wasn't there. That was, until I heard him sing. He hit the high notes loud, clear and ringing. His gospel background was instantly obvious.

Then there was Gib Wharton on steel guitar. Long blond hair underneath the strangest hat, he sported blue jeans and sneakers. He sat there just picking away at the steel.

I'd known about his musical background in country and western and had always associated steel guitar with this. So what was he doing there playing blues and jazz?

And yet it fit. The audience loved his solos, always giving him the most enthusiastic applause.

I was amazed. Here were four musicians with radically different singing and playing styles, and yet it all meshed. I loved it. The crowd was still clapping and singing along.

Some of the songs were their own. Others were covers. "Amazing Grace" was instantly recognizable. Also thrown in were a couple of old Elvis tunes. Once, when the crowd was jamming the hardest, I realized we were clapping to their version of the old lullaby, "Hush Little Baby Don't You Cry."

One encore was all the crowd asked for, and one was all it got. That was one regret, and I left with only one other.

The music stores were closed.

Year of the Rooster opens with Vietnamese celebration

Dragon Dance, traditional meal highlight 'Tet' celebration, glimpse of culture provided for young and old

BREN WORKMAN
Collegian

The K-State Vietnamese Student Association celebrated "Tet," the Vietnamese New Year, on Saturday at St. Isidore's Chapel.

The festivities included a traditional meal, activities and dance.

The holiday marked the end of the Year of the Monkey and introduced the Year of the Rooster.

"The Vietnamese New Year Festival is similar in importance to Christmas," said Jonathan Wann, Vietnamese Student Association president and senior in business administration. "We celebrate with family reunions and special foods, and all with an emphasis on the new beginning of the new year."

The festival started with the playing of the national anthems of both Vietnam and the United States, and was highlighted by the traditional Dragon Dance.

"The dragon brings good fortune and drives the evil spirits away," Kim Cao, senior in business administration, said. "People offer red pouches of money to the dragon in a form of investment for a good new year.

"The elders usually give gifts of money to the younger family members on Tet also," Cao said.

Vietnamese custom includes a remembrance of the past year and stresses the importance of the new year.

The celebration is one way in which Vietnamese students and area residents can retain certain aspects of their culture.

"It is very important to remember where you come from to see where you are going," the Rev. Keith Weber of St. Isidore's Chapel, said.

"It is not always in the best interest of people to be totally consumed by American culture," said David Surowski, faculty advisor to the Vietnamese Student Association. "It is crucial to retain aspects of a culture to preserve identity."

Surowski said the festival was open to everyone, and the number of American guests attending this year was larger than in previous years.

"This is the best opportunity we have to get a glimpse of a great Vietnamese tradition," Surowski said.

ESSENTIALS

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Reader should tell ex real feelings

DEAR CASSANDRA,

A few months ago, my boyfriend and I broke up. I've dated a lot of people, but he's the only one I've ever really cared about and in which I was interested. He had a lot of qualities I'd usually consider a "downfall," but just being with him felt so right that I easily overlooked them.

Since the break-up I've gone out with guys most girls would consider much better than him. Problem is, I don't care what anyone else thinks. He's the only one I want to be with.

I know he cared about me and am almost positive that he backed out because I made him feel insecure. I never told him how I felt, and he knew that I got asked out quite often.

All of my friends and family think he was "just another guy" and have no idea how strongly I still feel about him. I'm sick of everyone telling me that I can do much better than him, and I'm sick of pretending I don't care. What should I do?

Tired of Pretending

DEAR PRETENDING,

If this fellow is the one you want to be with, let him know. If you've never told him how you feel then it's safe to assume he doesn't know how you feel.

Don't worry about what everyone else thinks of this guy. You're the one that goes out with him, not your friends and family. You're the only one you have to please.

You don't say what "downfalls" this person has, but if you're willing to accept them then that's all that matters.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a friend who lives on my floor who has a subscription to Playgirl magazine.

Whenever I walk by her room I constantly see her and her roommate admiring the male penis size. It makes me feel like maybe there's something seriously wrong with these girls.

Are these girls sexually frustrated to the point that they have to get their thrills by means like this?

Questionable Neighbor

DEAR MARY POPPINS,

Take a ride on the clue bus, honey. This is 1993.

Women these days have been known to actually — you'd better sit down — enjoy looking at pictures of naked men.

And why shouldn't they? Men have leered at pictures of women since film was invented.

I have a feeling your neighbors are making sure you see them reading their tawdry magazines, shameless harlots that they probably are. They're probably just trying to get a rise, as it were, out of you by discussing, gasp, penises.

If I were you, I'd sit down with the two of them and offer moral advice and guidance. I'm sure they'd be receptive and grateful.

Senior vocalist seeks recording contract

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

This past weekend may have been a dream come true for a K-State student striving to be the next Richard Marx.

Mark Schultz, senior in marketing, has been writing music for four years. He spent the weekend in Denver trying to get a recording contract with A&M Records.

A World Entertainment Productions agent from Los Angeles heard his demo tape and said he thought it was different and unique.

"He wanted me to come out to Denver and talk to one of the agents about what I need to do about getting a record contract," Schultz said.

The songs he writes and sings are mostly love and top-40 songs.

"I've always done it as something kind of fun, but people are starting to get serious about it now," he said. "I'm excited about it all."

In the last few weeks alone, Schultz has sold 498 demo tapes on campus. He started out with 500 tapes. Each tape has three songs on it and sells for $5.

"I was just over at the Chi Omega house last Wednesday, and they bought 53 of them," he said.

Schultz says some radio stations have been playing his songs. The song that may be heard the most is called "Don't Walk Away."

"The first time I heard it in town, I had just got done playing basketball, and I was driving home, and it popped on the air. I probably sat through two stoplights. The light turned green, and I just couldn't go because I just couldn't believe it," Schultz said. "It was really incredible."

When Schultz was asked if he would put school on hold if he got a record deal, his first response was, "That is exactly what my parents want to know.

"I'm planning on graduating in May 1994, but it depends on if I get a deal and how soon they would want me to move to LA and start recording," he said. "It would be a tough decision."

Right now Schultz said he wants to finish college. He said he would rather put off going to Los Angeles than have a good song and never have it go anywhere.

"I spend more time playing the piano than I do studying anyway," he said.

Schultz said he taught himself how to play the piano.

"I used to take piano lessons when I was young, but I quit because my teacher used to slap my hand with a ruler because I was so bad," he said.

Schultz said he started playing the piano first and then started coming up with words.

Kenton Epard, senior in electrical engineering and pre-law, has been friends with Schultz since they were in kindergarten. They used to play in a band together in Colby.

Epard plays the guitar and the piano. He played the electric guitar to the second song on the demo tape called "Who Will You Run To."

"Mark has a lot of Richard Marx in him. Marx is one of his heroes," Epard said.

Conference ends with Croat objections

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ZAGREB, Croatia — A conference called to show international solidarity for rape victims in Bosnia's war ended in disarray Sunday when some Muslim and Croat women objected to a resolution they said was too soft on Serbs.

More than 500 women, including some of western Europe's leading female politicians, turned out for a meeting to denounce the mass rapes reported in Bosnia and work on strategies for halting such crimes.

But their solidarity collapsed over a resolution that, while blaming Serb fighters for most of the atrocities, said men on all sides had raped women during the war.

"We refuse this resolution because it mentions only Bosnia-Herzegovina, and not Croatia, and because it equates the aggressor and the victim, saying that all parties rape," said Slavica Bilic of Wall of Love, a Croatian group founded in 1991.

Dafinka Vecerina, a lawyer from Zagreb, Croatia's capital, said, "Being raped in a park in Brussels and being raped today in a detention camp in Bosnia have nothing in common. These women were raped only because they were Muslims and Croats."

open another one up," Rezac said.

"I do have more Washburn students in my office. They are an educational institution in Kansas," he said, when asked for clarification on his comments. "I definitely see Topeka's problem, but I am not promoting bringing Washburn in."

Hochhauser then offered a different perspective on the question.

"I have had numerous discussions with the Shawnee County delegation, and the theory has been to support the regents institutions. We recognize that unless the regents institutions are adequately funded, there's no chance Washburn can be introduced into the regents system," she said.

"I hear more and more frustration in that delegation. I am worried their support for the regents institutions will be eroding as they get more frustrated," Hochhauser said.

The next Eggs and Issues will be at 7 p.m. on March 6. Discussion will begin at 7:30.

Views vary on military ban barring homosexuals

Linda Richter, professor in political science, said the U.S. Supreme Court historically allowed Congress to make special provisions for the army.

She said she agreed with the new secretary of the U.S. Department of Defense that the courts would be moving in at some point to give gays equal protection under the law, even if the president did not address the issue.

Richter said most armies in the world have accepted homosexuals.

"This is consistent with a world pattern of nondiscrimination. We are the last in line," she said.

Clinton may have had a political motive in lifting the ban as gays supported him during the campaign, and it is expected that presidents help those groups that supported them during their campaigns, Richter said.

The fear of AIDS is a genuine concern as the medical evidence clearly shows that gays are a high risk group, Liese said.

Gays are not the only high risk group. Married and single men who go to prostitutes are high risk groups, too, Donovan said.

"Junction city is full of prostitutes. They are all over the place," he said.

There are many soldiers suffering from AIDS in the hospital at Fort Riley, Donovan said.

Liese said he is aware of the argument that supports the provision of separate living facilities for gays.

"Who will pay? The taxpayer?" he said.

There are homosexuals at Fort Riley, and they are all taking showers together without any problems, Donovan said.

"Lesbian females and gay men are used as scapegoats for a lot of problems that exist anyway, whether or not Clinton became president," Donovan said.

The acceptance of gays in the military is a step in the right direction for the country, he said, but the majority of homosexuals do fear hostility and prejudice.

"There are hundreds of homosexual men and women at Fort Riley. I know that for a fact," he said. "The more tolerant we are of each other, the better it is for all of us."

K-State has a very liberal administration that is supportive of gay rights, yet BaGaLS finds it difficult to attract members, Donovan said. The majority will not admit they are gay because they are afraid.

"There may be a few courageous ones," he said.

Donovan said he graduated from Harvard ROTC and served for two years in Oklahoma and Germany. He served the army in a position of authority, he said.

"I know the army as an institution," he said

Richter said it is better for Clinton to take the decision now as he will have time to recover from the political consequences.

"When rights are extended to groups that did not have them before, there is always an adjustment period," she said.

There were problems when women and black people were integrated in the army, Richter said.

After the adjustment period, things will be fine, she said.

Liese said comparing the present issue with racial integration "is like comparing apples and oranges."

White Rose of Sisterhood

She is a sister
Surrounded by the scent
Of the White Rose
We will watch that sister grow
Into a wonderful and beautiful being.
The sun which brightens her life
Will encourage her to reach higher
For the honorable and beautiful things.
As sisters, we will wipe away the tears
Of love and pain;
Which water the soil around our feet
And water our lives
With the thoughts of Kappa Delta;
And together we will show the world
That one rose alone cannot exist;
But together, with love,
The scent of one rose becomes stronger
When surrounded by other roses;
Just as one sister becomes stronger
When surrounded by her sisters.

ASK lobbies for financing

DEREK NELSON
Collegian

TOPEKA — K-State students joined with students from across the state in Topeka Monday to lobby for higher education during the annual Associated Students of Kansas Lobby Day. Of the Regents' universities, only Wichita State University did not participate. They dropped out of ASK last year.

For the K-State delegation, the day served two purposes.

"I think that the most important thing that we have done today is to promote ASK as well as Kansas State University," said Derek Kreifels, freshman in business and delegation member.

Another member of the K-State delegation member, Mary Farmer, junior in history, said she felt the day went well.

"We have represented Kansas State and the Regents' system well today in support of higher education," Farmer said.

ASK's goals for this legislative session include tuition and financing of higher education, campus safety and voter registration.

"ASK has outlined several priorities. Included in these are tuition and the financing of higher education," said Jennifer Hanlon, ASK state chair and Emporia State Student Body President. "This is not new for us, but again, we are encouraging full funding of the base budgets.

"In addition, we are asking that out-of-state tuition not be raised at a higher rate than in-state.

"The goal is to let the legislators see that Regents' students vote. They don't always get to meet people who are affected by the decisions they make," Hanlon said.

Sen. Marge Petty, D-Topeka, agreed student lobbyists provide legislators with a different perspective.

"The major difference is the other lobbyists are full time. Their job is being aware of what's going on at all times. It's more important to hear from people who are being personally impacted rather than from people who are being paid," she said.

Rep. Don Smith, D-Dodge City, said he enjoys talking to the student lobbyists.

"They're bright, optimistic young people. They are not jaded like most of the lobbyists and they are very sincere," Smith said.

He said he expected higher education to fare well in this legislative session.

"It looks favorable for adequate funding of higher education," he said.

Not all legislators are as optimistic as Smith. Rep. Kent Glasscock, R-Manhattan, foresees another fight ahead for funding of higher education.

"I think there is no chance of getting the Regents' want list, and it will be a challenge to get the governor's recommendations.

"The governor's recommendations on all budgets will be under extreme pressure. But the Regents will not be singled out. No one has it out for the Regents. All budgets will come under scrutiny," he said.

ASK is supporting the governor's recommendations.

Petty is also concerned about higher education. Her concerns lie with the fundamental approach to education.

"I think we're asking the wrong questions about education right now. We need to think long-term. We need to look at this in terms of five and ten years down the road. We need to prepare our young people for the global workplace," she said.

Although Glasscock predicts a tough road ahead, he believes lobby day can be effective.

"It can't be anything but a help. Lobbying representatives from the Regents' schools doesn't do much good, but meeting with legislators from non-Regents areas can help," he said.

Jim Persinger, senior in marketing and the K-State student body president's chief of staff, was pleased with K-State's showing.

"Today was a great success. I felt that we represented the interests of higher education well," he said. "The legislators were receptive

Sexual harassment in schools focus of week

JULIE CORBIN
Collegian

Sexual harassment in schools is one of the main topics of the Women's Week Celebration Feb. 8-12.

The week is sponsored by the Diversity Task Force in the College of Education, the special education department and the Sex and Race Desegregation Center.

Events throughout the week will address key issues in women's positions in education.

Two symposia will be at 4 p.m. Wednesday and Thursday in the Bluemont Media Center. The first will be a panel on women and education. The panel includes Anne Butler, director of women's studies; Trudy Campbell, assistant professor of educational administration; and Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center.

The speakers will present 15- to 20-minute presentations, followed by open discussion.

"I hope to equate the audience members with some particular challenges and sources of support facing women who are pursuing university education today," Davis said.

The second symposium will be led by Bob Shoop, professor of educational administration. It will cover sexual harassment in schools.

"Although many people have become aware of sexual harassment, many people think it is something that only happens in the work place," Shoop said. "But in reality,

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — In this year's recruiting season for college graduates, nurses are hot but aerospace engineers are not.

Companies hope to hire more college graduates this year than in 1992, but only a few fields are expected to benefit, college placement officers said. With many companies restructuring and eliminating jobs, there are fewer openings for job-seekers straight out of school.

Health care is one industry that is hiring, said Dawn Oberman, a statistical services specialist at College Placement Council Inc. in Bethlehem, Pa. Jobs also are available in management information systems, for people who teach others how to use computers.

A focus on the environment has created openings for engineers, geologists, biologists and chemists. And with the attention that President Clinton has promised to pay to rebuilding the nation's infrastructure, times should be good for civil engineers, Oberman added.

But other industries are cutting jobs just as aggressively. Military cutbacks and hardships in the commercial airline industry have virtually shut down the market for new aerospace engineers. Would-be nuclear engineers may need to find another specialty. Jobs in finance and banking, except for technical and back-office jobs, are still hard to come by.

"There's a fundamental shift, and most of it has come from a decrease (in campus recruiting) among the Fortune 500 companies," said Richard Stewart, director of placement at Purdue University. "You can look at your list of companies having problems, and that's the company that's not coming to campus now."

A survey of 316 companies last fall by the College Placement Council found 54 percent of employers planned to hire more graduates in 1993 than last year.

Respondents predicted they would hire 7.7 percent more graduates in the 1992-1993 school year than a year earlier. Actual hires were projected to rise to 70 per company from 65.

"However, talking to placement officers this past January and December, we haven't seen that yet," Oberman said.

Not only do many recruiters have fewer jobs to offer, they are cutting back on recruiting costs.

"Back in the heyday of the 1980s, companies would send 30 or 40 recruiters to campus," said Vicki B. Lynn, director of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute's Career Development Center. "Half of the people would be standing around with nothing to do."

Now, companies either do not come at all or send just a few recruiters.

And companies surveyed by College Placement said they plan to visit 11.3 percent fewer campuses this year.

The number of job offers continues to fall. At Rensselaer, 47 percent of the companies that recruited on campus last year made a job offer, down from about 63 percent in 1991, Lynn said.

Worsening matters, colleges are turning out more graduates to compete for fewer jobs. The number of college graduates continues to rise despite a slight dip in the population of 22-year olds, Hacker said.

▶GRAND JURY INDICTS MEMBERS OF CRACK RING

TOPEKA (AP) — A federal grand jury has indicted nine people for allegedly operating a cocaine and crack cocaine ring based in Junction City.

U.S. Attorney Lee Thompson said the indictment was returned on Jan. 27 but was sealed until Monday while law officials coordinated the arrests of those accused.

Thompson's office identified those charged as Marcos Torres, 27, an inmate at the Hutchinson Correctional Facility; his wife, Eva Melinda Torres, 27, Junction City; Armando Nelson Pelliere, 27, Junction City; Cesar Albert Planas, 29, Littleton, Colo.; Alcides Alonso Plato, 39, New York; Ricardo Guevara Taylor, 35, Wichita; Ricardo Auerelio Scott-Sanjur, age and address unknown; Arturo Brazier, 33, incarcerated in New York state, and Richardo Gooding, 19, Stone Mountain, Ga.

Thompson said the indictment alleges Marcos Torres was the leader of the drug distribution ring that had regularly distributed cocaine and crack in the Junction City area for more than three years.

He said Marcos Torres had previously been indicted on three federal counts of distribution of crack, but this indictment supersedes those brought last August.

The defendants face potential maximum sentences under the new charges of life in prison and a $4 million fine, Thompson said.

Most of those charged are citizens of Panama, Thompson said.

▶NO DECISION MADE IN SCHRUM CONFIRMATION

TOPEKA (AP) — The Senate Ways and Means Committee Monday interviewed Ruth Schrum of Manhattan but made no decision whether to recommend her confirmation as a member of the state retirement system's board of trustees.

Gov. Joan Finney appointed Schrum, a retired teacher, to the board of the Kansas Public Employees Retirement System in May. The governor also appointed Schrum to the Kansas Board of Regents last month.

The Senate must confirm Schrum's appointment to the KPERS board. Her term expires in June. She said she does not intend to seek another term, choosing instead to continue on the regents.

"I've been serving since May, and I've learned the material, and I feel I shall be of value on the board until June," Schrum told the committee during her confirmation hearing.

Washburn tradeoff proves to be rumor

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — There will be no tradeoff of admitting Washburn University into the state regents system in exchange for closing the state's hospital for the mentally retarded in Topeka, legislative leaders said Monday.

In fact, they said they cannot understand how such a rumor got started, because to their knowledge nobody is considering such a proposal.

All but one of those contacted Monday, including most members of the Topeka legislative delegation, said they had not heard the rumor until they saw a published story over the weekend.

Only Rep. Joan Wagnon, D-Topeka, said she had heard speculation there could be a tradeoff of admitting Washburn to the state's university system in exchange for Topeka legislators accepting the closure of Kansas Neurological Institute.

"It's all speculation at this point," Wagnon said. "Nobody has said they're going to introduce a bill."

Sen. Alicia Salisbury, R-Topeka, a member of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, said she had not heard the rumor prior to the story's appearance.

"I personally could not place any credence in it," she said. "I think the people of KNI deserve more than a suggested tradeoff. The two issues should not even be discussed in the same arena."

Sen. Bill Brady, D-Parsons, another Ways and Means member, also said he had not heard the rumor.

"That's just ridiculous in my opinion," he said. "That epitomizes what people don't like about politics."

Rep. Rochelle Chronister, R-Neodesha, chairwoman of the House Appropriations Committee, also said the rumor was news to her.

Distributed computing spreads tasks to different computers in a network

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

"Distributed computing" is the new buzzword for Computing and Network Services.

It means the distribution of computing tasks to different computers across a network, Rick Summerhill, Unix and network coordinator, said.

K-State is using distributed computing all across campus in studios, labs and offices. Summerhill said there are 42 subnets of the main network. The only places not connected to the network are the residence halls, Bramlage Coliseum and KSU Stadium. There are plans to connect these areas by next year, he said.

Robert Kruh, University vice provost, said this type of computing is the direction in which K-State is moving.

"The way in which the world is developing puts more and more emphasis on network computing," he said.

The transition toward distributed computing started full force after the decision was made not to merge K-State's mainframe with the mainframe at the University of Kansas, or any other mainframe, Kruh said.

The merger with KU was considered last February when there were processing problems and concerns about the mainframe capabilities. Reorganizing the central processor solved the problem, Kruh said.

"After some consideration, we decided that distributed computing was attractive and we should move in that direction," he said. "Going to KU would not have been as easy as this option."

The importance of the transition, Kruh said, is demonstrated by the $1 million President Jon Wefald and Provost James Coffman have allocated to improving distributed computing capabilities on campus.

Summerhill said the mainframe unit, which is used for all administrative services, is a participating computer in the University's network. It is still an important part of the system, but it only accounts for 10 percent of the computing done on campus Kruh said.

Network computing allows people to use a small personal computer and hook up with other programs being run off another station. Summerhill said it increases the number of applications that can be run.

A mainframe computer system differs from a network in that there is just one central processing unit that handles all the computing tasks.

Summerhill said there were also plans to start building a CPU farm in July. This is a collection of computers that will process computationally intensive programs and add computer power and research facilities to K-State's system.

Legend has it the Chicago fire in 1906 began when Mrs. O'Leary's cow kicked over a lantern in the barn. After the fire, most of the city was leveled and had to be rebuilt.

Soon Manhattan will have a taste of Chicago's rich and colorful history when the Old Chicago Grill and Bar opens in late February.

"We were hoping to open the restaurant in early February, but we have had some setbacks," said Thom Walker, manager of Cactus Jack's Mexican Cantina and the Old Chicago Grill and Bar.

The new restaurant will be located in the southeast corner of the Village Inn Plaza shopping center in Westloop. The site of the Old Chicago Grill and Bar, formerly the location of Malo's Seafood Restaurant, has undergone extensive remodeling.

It now has a seating capacity for 400 people.

Strolling through the restaurant, Walker pointed out the fireplace, etched smoked glass dividers, dark-striped wallpaper and brick and wood paneled interior, which will provide a relaxed atmosphere to the various rooms, he said.

"Although we want the dress to be casual, the food and atmosphere will be upscale," he said. "The atmosphere will be warm and friendly."

The servers will probably wear baseball jerseys, Walker said.

"I don't like to go into a restaurant where the servers are better dressed than I am. The service is what really sets a restaurant apart."

Although the atmosphere will be upscale, the food will be affordable.

"The meals will range anywhere from $4 to $14, with the average meal costing around $6 to $8," Walker said.

The menu will blend the restaurant's Chicago-style atmosphere with Manhattan's history.

"We're thinking that our menu will be a combination of newspaper articles portraying some of the local color of Manhattan," Walker said.

The Riley County Historical Society has provided the restaurant with information for the menu cover.

The food items on the menu have also been carefully chosen.

"The restaurant owners, the chef and myself have worked out a restaurant menu which offers a very big selection," he said.

The restaurant owners, J.D. Kennedy and Dean Murphy, collaborated with chef and manager, Robert Iacobellis, to plan the menu at Cactus Jack's and at the Old Chicago Style Bar and Grill.

"As soon as our chef has finished training a food preparation team at Cactus Jack's, he will come over here to do the cooking," Walker said.

"Steaks, shrimp, limited seafood, French baked breads, duck with cumberland sauce and about a dozen salads, appetizers, and sandwiches will be featured. We are also proud of our rotisserie chicken which is cooked in its own juices without any additional fat."

Besides offering a wide variety of menu items, the Old Chicago Style Bar and Grill will feature free bar snacks at a designated time at night.

"We are hoping to draw in some of the Aggieville crowd by offering free snacks every night," Walker said.

Although the restaurant does not plan to have live bands,Kennedy said he does plan to invite a comedian, guitarist or individual

Panel advocates rape prevention

ALICIA HALE
Collegian

A Rape & Campus Safety Awareness Panel stressed the importance of victims speaking out against sexual assault Monday night during a presentation in K-State Union 212.

Representatives from the Women's Resource Center, Lafene Health Center, Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services, University Counseling Services and the K-State Police Department provided information and answered questions concerning the issue of rape.

Judy Davis, director of the Women's Resource Center, said their main goal is the advocacy of the prevention of rape, but when prevention fails, they offer a variety of services to rape victims.

"There is abundant critical evidence that the quality and type of services someone receives following a rape has a great deal to do with their recovery and their well-being in the future," Davis said.

Services the center offers include support and advice but never making decisions for the victim. The center also talks to friends and family of the victim, helps victims understand all the choices available to them and refers them to other sources for help.

Dori Lambert, counselor for University Counseling Services, also stressed the importance of prevention and awareness. She said getting help as soon as possible is just as important.

"Reacting to rape is essential," she said. "The quicker someone gets assistance, in terms of dealing with the emotional trauma after an assault, the more likely they will have a shorter recovery time, and they will be able to have a more integrative life afterwards."

Paula Davis, physician at Lafene, stressed there are a number of female providers at Lafene, and their first priority is to treat urgent situations, such as the possibility of pregnancy and sexually transmitted

Local poverty hits home

THE ISSUE

New census figures show how far poverty has spread in Kansas.

WE SUGGEST

The recent information should be used to help rectify the overall problem of poverty.

With the recent release of figures from the 1990 U.S. Census, poverty pushes its way to the forefront of issues once again.

According to the figures, one in five residents of Chautauqua, Cherokee, Douglas, Riley and Wallace counties is living below the federal poverty level of $12,675 annual income.

The figures for Riley and Douglas counties are slightly skewed because college students count as residents, and many students have little income of their own.

While this may add ammunition to the playful jokes about the poverty of students, it can't overshadow the fact that many Kansas residents can barely make ends meet.

The numbers themselves can be frightening. Sedgwick County has 43,458 residents living below the poverty line, Shawnee has 15,735, and 19 percent of Crawford County residents do without.

Tragically, more children suffer the trials of impoverishment in counties like Cherokee (30.2 percent) and Wallace (29.5).

On the other side of the rainbow, wealthy Johnson County ranked as the 22nd most affluent county in the nation.

It seems sobering that such extremes can exist within highway exits of each other.

Now that we know the numbers, we must use them in deciding how to improve the life of Kansas residents.

We know neediness is particularly dense in the deep southeast corner of the state, and we must address it there. We know 23 percent of Bourbon County residents older than 65 live in poverty, and we must address it there.

These figures give us a chance to change.

Change can't come from Clinton alone

JOHN HART

America is impatiently waiting for President Clinton to fulfill his central campaign promise, which won him the election: change.

Forty-three percent of American voters put their faith in Clinton because he promised change. The public, for the most part, didn't want change for the sake of change. If that were the case, Frank Zappa would be in the White House. The understanding was that Clinton's change would be synonymous with progress. But that point will be debated in four years.

For now, it's crucial for us to examine what Clinton's "change" is all about. The recession, which ended well over a year ago, fueled the public's call for change. The Clinton campaign wisely seized that opportunity and advanced the theme of change by employing rhetoric that identified George Bush as representing stasis.

For example, 12 years of Republican rule equals a time for a change, or 12 years of gridlock equals a time for a change. The most fascinating aspect of the idea of change is not what Clinton will or will not do, but the American public's hopes and expectations about change.

The prevailing attitude that emerged during the campaign essentially called for the government to play the role of father/provider. The public wanted Clinton to get them jobs, pay for health care and solve the AIDS crisis.

Millions of voters believe the Clinton administration can actually bring about this kind of change. Millions of voters are in for a bitter disappointment.

The American public's faith in the government to change society is approaching religious proportions. The claim of AIDS activists that the government, namely Ronald Reagan and George Bush, not the people who engage in the behaviors that spread the HIV virus, are responsible for the AIDS crisis illustrates this belief in an omnipotent government.

Ted Kennedy promoted the "Government is God" (GIG, not to be confused with a live musical performance) movement with these words last summer: "The ballot box is the place where all change begins in America." Welcome to 1984.

Many examples from daily life refute Kennedy's claim that all change works through Big Brother. Where is the government when Salvation Army volunteers work to change the condition of a community by delivering food, clothing and blankets to elderly shut-ins and the homeless?

Where is the government when churches go into the inner cities and establish ministries or community centers designed to get crime-prone youths off the streets?

All change in America begins in the individual. People, not abstract political or economic theories, are at the center of all of today's social problems and the soul is at the center of people. Thus, the individual soul, not the government, is our most potent agent for change.

The ballot box is a place where change, sometimes significant, can begin. Yet it is not worthy of the faith millions of American voters who believed "it's time for a change" have put in it.

In 1996, after Clinton has broken a few of his promises, which only God could fulfill, America will grow increasingly cynical, and Ross Perot will resurrect the tired "no more business as usual" theme.

Then, the candidate who makes the most appealing promises and appears to be the best provider, not who is the most qualified, will be the next president, unless Americans stop looking to the government to solve all of their problems and start examining themselves.

CAMPUS SAFETY 101

ED LEBOEF
GUEST COLUMNIST

"Everyone is trying to get from point A to point B in 10 minutes during class changes."

When the Campus Safety Task Force was begun by student government in 1990, one of its commitments was to issues of pedestrian safety. Since I took over as chairperson last year, our emphasis has been on crime prevention, but I'd like to remedy that a bit. Recently, there has been a growing concern over the idea that sidewalks are just not big enough for both walkers and bike riders. Our task force is looking at the dilemma and trying to arrive at some acceptable answers. Right now, I need to bring the problem to you.

This year, there seem to be more bicycles on campus. I note this because this is the first semester since I started here in 1989 that I have had to look for a space to park my bike. Now I can imagine those who usually drive are out there reading this and saying, "Well, Ed, join the club." More bikes on campus also means that this is the "walkers vs. the bikers vs. the drivers." Most of us are in all three roles quite often.

Fortunately, no big accidents have occurred recently. But once again, I can imagine that each of us has a story to tell that goes something like: "I was walking past the library, when a bike zoomed past this close to me."

Now, for the few of you who need it, I'm going to quote to you from the 1992-93 campus traffic regulations — "Riding on the sidewalk, pedestrian walkways or grass constitutes a $10 fine, as does improper parking." You must also obey all street signs, and using hand signals would be a good idea.

So, you must be saying, "We've got these rules, let's enforce them." There are at least three inherent problems to doing so for the parking control officers who handle this. First, how do you approach a moving bicyclist to stop without putting the two of you in possible danger? Second, what to do with an uncooperative biker. Third, these traffic officers are usually out in parking lots, away from the walkways.

Bikes on the sidewalks are not the only travel hazards on campus. I'm sure many riders would like me to ask that when you are walking to please stay off the bike lanes and out of the street, except at crosswalks. And for goodness sakes, look before you go out into the street. When you are driving on campus, the speed limit is 20 mph, but accept the fact that it is going to be a lot slower when classes change. Also, when you're getting out of a car on the street, look behind you before you open the door.

Everyone is trying to get from point A to point B in 10 minutes during class changes. As I mentioned before, we are fortunate that with the thousands of people going around this place daily, accidents are few and far between. The urgency of the matter stems from the rise of close calls that have been reported recently.

So, what is it going to take to bring order to the sometimes wild walkways of our campus? Do we need to move bike racks to the outskirts of campus, or would you like to have to buy a permit for your bike? These ideas are floating around.

Before we have to take those steps, I'd point out that I believe the answer for personal safety is in each of us. We have been given perceptual awareness with our eyes and ears, and most of us tend to have consideration for those around us.

Let's use these assets more. This is the common thread that ties the bicyclists, the drivers and the pedestrians together.

Campus Safety Week is Feb. 8-12.

Society has a lot to learn from religion

Editor,

It took a little longer than I had expected but, true to form, Brad Seabourn is back, pulling passages out of context, establishing himself as the authority on biblical interpretation and thinly veiling his venomous hatred toward a religion that he does not accept nor understand.

What is truly ridiculous is trying to disguise this bombast as journalism. If it were any other religious viewpoint, there wouldn't be this kind of attack. In all truth, Seabourn's ravings are very hypocritical, considering his strong support of the religions, as they are legally recognized, of Humanism and Atheism.

I would be very interested to know by what authority and vast wisdom and experience does Mr. Seabourn base his very pointed attacks?

As there has been no real substance underlying all of the bitterness and arrogance that has been made to look like editorial opinion.

Are we now a truly more progressive, decent, equitable, considerate, responsible, unified society since we have moved away from the values that Mr. Seabourn so openly despises? During the last 30 years since this shift has begun, the U.S. is the undisputed champion of the world in violent crime, divorce, murder and abortion, and we are alone in the way we treat our elderly.

Have we furthered the cause of minorities when basically every malady afflicting society is several times worse for them than it is for the majority? The gains have actually been steps backward.

Simply put, I don't have all the answers, nor do I use a column to purport that I do, but looking around and comparing where society went without God sure doesn't look as good as where it could be with him. Or maybe I am just mistaken, and the Los Angeles riots and the incredible number of reports of abuses and crimes done everyday are hallmarks of a newly defined and enlightened society that has no need of old-time religion.

You can't compare race and sexuality

Editor,

In the famous words of college basketball analyst Dick Vitale, "You need a T.O., Baby!" This is a very accurate statement in regard to the unresearched rhetoric that has been appearing in this newspaper concerning the lifting of the ban against homosexuals in the military.

I will tell you a little about myself. I am an African American captain in the U.S. Army with 10 years of active duty, including the Persian Gulf War. I am about to discuss facts, which I think is what a newspaper should present to the people.

Many are trying to compare homosexual rights to the struggle of black civil rights. I think not.

First, African Americans were never banned from the military. We were segregated. African American men have served and died for this country from its birth to the present.

After prolonged study and consultation with military advisers, an Executive Order was issued on July 26, 1948, calling for "equality of treatment and opportunity for all persons in the armed services without regard to race, color, religion or national origin." What this did was to end segregation of the U.S. armed forces for everyone.

At that time, Secretary of the Air Force Stuart Symington responded, "it was the right thing to do ... morally ... legally ... militarily." So, do all of you understand that, from this aspect, there is no comparison of the current homosexual ban because there never existed a ban on African Americans?

Second, if homosexuals want to be compared to African Americans, where is some visible evidence that you are homosexual? My point is that being African American is not a behavior. Being homosexual is definitely a behavior.

I will not reduce myself to hating anyone because I serve and fight for the rights of every person. But to the gay community, where are your years of enslavement? Where are the statistics of lynchings? Where are the 200-plus years of struggling just to be respected as an equal? There is no way to run from the prejudice that I have seen and faced because of what I am. I am not privileged to hide. I, or my people, have never had a closet to come out of, and, frankly, some of my ancestors may not have had a closet to live in.

In this Black History Month, we all need to see what it means and has meant to be black in this country. Take this into consideration before aligning causes and circumstances to us a proud, but still yet unrespected, people.

Columnist must like being safe victim

Editor,

Kelly Klawonn, what do you want to be when you grow up? I say grow up because it's pretty obvious you haven't. You know, people like you make me sick. I don't mean because you're a lesbian, or because your column overflows with political correctness. What makes me sick is your constant whining.

"I'm a victim of this male-dominated society!" and "No one learns about women or lesbians in history!" I just can't tell you how sorry I feel. Because, frankly, I don't.

All the things you talk about in your column are true. Women worked in the factories in the 1920s, and some were raped by men. Women still are raped by men. Every time I hear about it, I think that the perpetrator should be locked in a dark hole somewhere for a long time. Unfortunately, rape is a fact of life. People will continue to rape no matter how they are educated.

Were women denied the vote until 1920? Yes. If you didn't hear about women's suffrage in history class, Kelly, you must have gone to a very conservative school. At least, none of the classes I ever attended asserted that women were "lucky" enough to be allowed the vote. It was more like they fought for it and won. That means they didn't sit at home writing boo-hoo columns about how horrible it was that no one was writing down their stories in official history books. They did something and made history.

All of your references are to victims. Raped women. Disenfranchised women. Tortured homosexuals. You and your colleagues identify with victims and enjoy being victims because then you don't have any responsibilities. You don't have to do anything, you can crawl back to your little hole and point fingers. You call for unity and love, but quickly whine and feel left out when you notice that the people in history don't happen to fit your ethnic/sexual group. If you really felt the tolerance and need for unity that you incessantly preach, you wouldn't care. You would merely be glad that a fellow human being achieved something great. Because that is what we all are.

Tigers ignore Wildcats' newfound wealth

Mizzou welcomes No. 23 Cats with 67-51 win

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

COLUMBIA, Mo. — Twelve hours into their first Top 25 ranking in five years, the No. 23 K-State Wildcats were brought quickly back down to earth after the Missouri Tigers administered a 67-51 beating Monday night in Columbia.

The Wildcats shot a meager 31.6 percent from the field during the game, while committing 18 turnovers to the pressing defense of Mizzou. The turnovers fed the high-octane Tiger offense, which hit a season-high 58.5 percent from the field.

"We just did not do the things we've been doing," Cat coach Dana Altman said. "We didn't execute our offense at all, and we were real sluggish against their press defense."

Missouri's defense forced K-State into six turnovers in the first 12 minutes of the first half and forced the Cats into missing nine of their first 10 shots of the game.

"I'm not sure what was wrong," Altman said. "That wasn't the same team that's been playing lately. We took some very bad shots and didn't handle the ball well at all."

Four of K-State's turnovers in the first half came from guard Anthony Beane, who was playing in front of his family in his home state. Beane had no turnovers in the second half.

"The second half, I had to settle myself down," he said. "I was really hyped up in the first half, and they sped me up."

Beane scored only 2 points and connected on just one of his nine field goal attempts, including none of his three 3-pointers.

"It started right from the get-go," Altman said. "I think Anthony was just trying to do too much tonight."

The Wildcats trailed at halftime 33-20 and fell behind by 19 after a Missouri run in the first four minutes of the second half that expanded the margin to 43-24.

K-State put together a run of its own run to close the gap to 8 points when an 18-foot shot by Jones ignited the Wildcats on a 16-4 streak with 15:25 to go.

Brian Henson followed two free throws by Ron Lucas with a 3-point bucket, and Vincent Jackson knocked down two treys of his own to close the gap to 49-41 with 11:25 left.

The two teams traded baskets until a Deryl Cunningham lay-up with 7:52 to go marked the last Wildcat field goal for a five-minute stretch.

But Missouri also went cold and gave the Wildcats a shot. The Tigers missed the front end of three free-throw attempts, but a 3-point shot by the Tigers' Melvin Booker with 3:35 left buried K-State's last hope.

"We got it down to nine points," Altman said. "They got stuck, but we got stuck. We took some very good shots that we didn't knock down.

"We had our opportunities, but we couldn't take advantage of them.

"It was just one of those nights when it wasn't going to go down."

Vincent Jackson led the K-State effort with 19 points, but only connected on seven of his 19 attempts.

"We didn't come totally prepared tonight," Jackson said. "We came in lackadaisical. With our ranking, teams are going to come out to get you, and we just didn't come ready."

Cold Cats shoot 31.6 percent

DEREK NELSON
Collegian

COLUMBIA, Mo. — K-State has used improved shooting to jump into the Big Eight race this season, but on Monday night, the Wildcats could only connect on 31.6 percent of its shots.

Meanwhile, Missouri was having a nearly flawless night from the field, shooting 58.5 percent.

That spelled a 67-51 defeat for the Wildcats.

"We did not do the things tonight that we have been doing. We didn't execute our offense at all," K-State coach Dana Altman said.

"That was not the same team that has been playing lately."

Every time the Cats made a run at the Tigers, Missouri answered with a run of its own.

With 11:28 remaining, a Vincent Jackson 3-pointer brought the Cats within eight. But Missouri finished the game with a 18-10 run.

Missouri's only offensive lapse came during a scoreless, three-minute span midway through the second half.

But the Wildcats didn't take advantage of the situation and were also scoreless during that period.

"We had some shots tonight," Altman said. "We got down to nine points there, and they got stuck, and then we got stuck."

K-State's first point came on a Brian Henson free throw with 16:14 to play in the first half.

The first Wildcat field goal of the game didn't go down for another three and a half minutes.

"We came out very sluggish, and it really took a long time to get started," Henson said. "We just didn't have them ready to play tonight."

Anthony Beane, who had been averaging 13.3 points over his last six games, scored just two points and connected on one of his nine field goals.

"We came out tentative tonight," he said. "This is not the way we've been playing all year long. They were a lot more aggressive than we were.

"They dictated the tempo at both ends of the court during the whole game."

And Beane was just as worried about the Wildcat defense as he was about the sputtering offense.

"It's not the points we were worried about," he said.

"Our defense has been our bread and butter all year long, and we weren't doing it."

▶TUBBS CLARIFIES STATEMENT

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Billy Tubbs isn't claiming he was misquoted when he said Oklahoma will "beat the hell" out of K-State — just misunderstood.

"Beating the hell out of them would be like three points," the sarcasm-filled Oklahoma coach said Monday during the Big Eight's telephone press conference. "We haven't distinguished what beating the hell out of them means."

Tubbs made headlines, including in the Collegian, last week with his bold prediction following K-State's 62-61 victory in Manhattan. Asked, "How good is K-State?" Tubbs shot back: "We'll beat the hell out of them in Norman. You mark that down. I don't give a shit how good they are."

Oklahoma plays host to the Cats, the Big Eight's most improved team, on Feb. 23.

Does Tubbs still predict to beat K-State?

"Yep," he said. "I thought we should have beaten them up there.

"Yeah," he repeated. "I still think we'll beat them."

▶MIAMI'S HUMPHREY SHOT IN LEG

ALABASTER, Ala. (AP) — Miami Dolphins running back Bobby Humphrey, recently arrested in a Georgia drug case, was shot in the leg Monday on an interstate highway.

Alabaster police Lt. Stanley Oliver said Humphrey was taken to Shelby Medical Center, where he was reported in good condition.

Oliver said a suspect was taken into custody but had declined to give a statement until an attorney arrived.

Police did not immediately know what led to the shooting.

COLUMN

Despite loss, Altman should be Coach of Year

Usually, I don't go out and make bold predictions. My columns last year consisted of things that got under my skin — K-State fans (didn't something happen recently with a penny?) and major league baseball.

It's a new year and time for a change in attitude in my columns. So, how about this idea?

Sometime during March Madness or thereafter, Dana Altman will be named Big Eight Coach of the Year.

Yes, that's correct. Mr. Altman — Coach of the Year.

Now, I know someone somewhere just spit out his or her coffee or is giggling with laughter. I'll give you some time to either go get a new paper or settle down.

BRIAN ANDERSON

OK, how do I know, with eight more games left before the Big Eight Tournament, that Altman will be bestowed with such an honor? I shall show you why.

■ Defenses win championships.

In a conference of run-and-gun, fast-break offenses, the Cats have improved in team defense from 73.1 points allowed last season to 65.3 this season — which is tops in the conference. Two years ago, Altman's team gave up 80.7 points against Big Eight teams.

■ (The second-best) Big Eight Newcomer of the Year.

Sorry, readers. You'll find out later that Kansas' Darrin Hancock will win it, but Anthony Beane will make this a close race. Beane has certainly left his mark on the K-State season and the Big Eight conference with his 12-point average and 29 assists in league play. And, of course, you know about his game-winning heroics in five games.

Beane has done a lot for the team, and the Cats would be in the bottom half of the league without him. But by the end of the season, however, I'm afraid he will be screwed out of the award.

■ Thrashing with AC/DC.

Aaron Collier and Deryl Cunningham, along with Ron Lucas, have made their presence known in every game with their rebounding and high-percentage shooting. The trio holds the top three spots on the team in field-goal percentage and has grabbed 45 percent of the team's rebounds. The Cats rank third in the Big Eight in team rebounding margin.

■ The future — with a conservative look.

The loss to Missouri gives K-State a tie for second place and a record of 14-4. This week, the Cats invite Iowa State and Nebraska to the coliseum. A split is welcomed; a sweep is fabulous.

I say bring out the brooms.

The Cats head to Boulder Feb. 18 to play a sliding Buffalo team as Coach Harrington tries to save his job. Sorry, Joe, see you later.

Kansas ends the Cats three-game winning streak Feb. 20 in a close game. This would be the game K-State can't win near an end of a game. Record — 17-5 and 7-3 in the league. Still in second place and nationally ranked.

K-State loses at Oklahoma, beats Oklahoma State and Missouri at home and is upset at Iowa State. Record —19-7 and 9-5 in the conference to finish second in the Big Eight.

Certainly, Coach Altman should be honored if the team stays the course. And if that is the case, this team would have improved by five games over last season's conference record — something no one in his or her right mind would have thought, with K-State playing a weak non-conference schedule and then getting hammered in Big Eight play.

Undoubtedly, the men's basketball program at K-State has returned.

Guilty feelings about intimacy plague couple

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Obviously my brain is ruminating on a certain "problem," if you can call it that. Cassy, if I may call you that, I have been seriously involved with one of my "sisters" — the Christian term for a "significant other." "Eve" and I both strictly adhere to the scriptures, and we endeavor to taper our lives accordingly.

We are both extremely content with our relationship, and, although to this point it has been a mostly platonic journey, we have been contemplating crossing over to the path of intimacy. We are now at the cross roads where we are faced with romantic feelings and have looked to John Holzmann's book "Dating with Integrity" for guidance.

Holzmann states in his aforementioned, revered manuscript: "Brothers and Sisters in the Lord avoid physical-sexual intimacy and, indeed sexual intimacy of all types."

Many of our Christian brethren have been greatly influenced by Holzmann and abide by his tenets. Holzmann adds, "physical-sexual intimacy can include anything from the caress of a finger on a sleeve to hand-holding to coitus." Unfortunately, Eve and I plead guilty to two of the above intimate acts but I must stress, we plan to take our virginity to the altar.

We feel guilty that we may have displeased Christian dogma by the way we have acted, but the mutual attraction has proven to be too overpowering: We pray for self control, but to no avail. My question is this: Should we abstain altogether from intimate activities or continue developing this side of our relationship as we both enjoy it, even though the guilt is omnipresent? Any prudent, moral advice on how we can continue with our intimacy while also eradicating the guilt would be appreciated. God Bless You.

Adam

DEAR ADAM,

I can tell that you are filled with sexual frustration, and that it appears to be manifesting itself in chronic verbosity. There are other outlets, and we, rather you, can touch on those later.

But enough ribbing, Adam.

If you and Eve both want to take your virginity to the altar, that's great. But my first piece of advice to you both would be to stop taking this Holzmann book seriously. Intimacy and romance is about two people, not about two people and a manual. It sounds like this book is fueling your guilt.

Call me crazy, but I don't consider hand-holding and sleeve touching in the same league with coitus.

If you both want to save yourselves until marriage, then do just that. Sit down and talk about what levels of intimacy you're both comfortable with, set some ground rules and stick to them. It won't be easy — I definitely see cold showers in your future — but you'll both be happier if you set parameters.

If you're concerned about violating Christian dogma, you and Eve might consider meeting with your pastor. He or she probably has heard this problem many times and likely understands the power of sexual attraction.

Intimacy is the physical and emotional sharing of love and caring and is a wonderful spiritual experience. It would be a shame to deprive yourselves of the beauty of giving and sharing pleasure, simply because you are burdened with needless guilt.

and courteous to us. The K-State delegation did a good job, I was very proud of the students who attended."

Michael Henry, K-State ASK Campus Director, said the goal for the day was to insure the students of the regents schools are represented and their voices are heard.

Henry, freshman in political science and speech, also said K-State's budget will come under the scrutiny of the Senate Ways and Means Committee on Wednesday and Thursday.

K-State students will return to lobbying on Feb. 27 for the annual K-State Lobby Day.

Rape prevention focus of panel diseases.

Also important, she said, is the treatment of physical trauma and possibly gathering legal information.

"In the case of Lafene, a lot of the evidence gathered over the years has been used in a plea bargain rather than an actual court case, but that has resulted in several convictions. So, it has been very useful information," Davis said.

She said Lafene helps the victim weeks, months and even years after the rape by continuing to diagnose and treat any physical problems or STDs the victim may have acquired.

The panel also discussed the issue of alcohol in relation to rape and its effects on women in particular. Bill Arck, director of Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services, said alcohol is present in most rape cases, and women are much more susceptible to its effects than men for a number of reasons.

"Women are, of course, generally lighter in weight, and therefore have less fluids in their systems. So, they oxidize less alcohol. Therefore, it makes them more susceptible just based on weight and size," Arck said.

He added that a woman's menstrual cycle, birth control and polydrug use, mixing alcohol with other drugs, all make a woman more prone to alcohol's negative effects.

Because they are affected by it more seriously, alcohol also causes more complications in women than in men, Arck said.

"All these things put together tell me that drinking alcohol puts a woman more risk, and it should tell other people that, as well," Arck said.

University Police Chief Charles Beckom joined the panel to discuss the legal consequences of rape. He stressed the fact they do everything they can within the law to ensure the legal action of a rape case remains fair, and the victims receive the help they need.

"We want to make sure that the victim is well taken care of, and we want to make sure that we are meeting all of our obligations at the same time," Beckom said.

Women's Week events address key issues of women in education

it is prevalent throughout the school systems. Whether it is administration harassing teachers or teachers harassing students, or even students harassing students.

"Sexual harassment doesn't just spring up in 40-year-old men — it's learned — and it's learned in and out of public schools," Shoop said.

In an effort to raise awareness about harassment, Shoop will present video clips along with case scenarios. He will give audience members a chance to talk about him when they have witnessed sexual harassment.

"I have three goals," Shoop said. "First, to raise awareness of the fact of sexual harassment on the part of the teachers and administrators. Second, to identify sexual harassment when seen and know what it is. And thirdly, to development a strategy to eradicate sexual harassment in schools."

Women's Week Celebration coincides with National Women's History Month and Susan B. Anthony's birthday and Women's Equality Day, which both fall in February.

"I see this as a diversity issue — one aspect of a diversity issue. This issue is very critical, especially in public schools. We do not deal effectively with all groups — groups of all backgrounds. This is just one part of a bigger picture," Campbell said.

Other events include a film festival, an essay contest and a Susan B. Anthony birthday celebration.Films will show at noon daily in the Bluemont Media Center.

Black soldiers opened door to the West, paved way for integrated armed forces

When a buffalo is backed into a corner by an enemy, it comes out vigorously fighting, struggling for a victory. The black soldiers in the 9th and 10th U.S. Cavalry divisions in the mid-1800s fought in the same manner, historians say.

The Native Americans were the first group to realize these black soldiers' significance in history, and they are said to have admired their strength, dubbing them the "Buffalo Soldiers." Although the actual origin of the nickname is unclear, it is said the Native Americans compared the courage of the soldiers to the buffalo.

Four members of the 9th and 10th Cavalry divisions Buffalo Soldiers participated in a panel discussion Tuesday in the K-State Union as part of Black History Month.

Troopers William Harris, 75, Albert Curley, 71, Turl Covington Jr., 76, and William Harrington, 98, served in the all-black 9th or 10th Cavalry divisions. Harrington began at Fort Riley on a special assignment in 1913.

The Buffalo Soldiers opened the door to the West by guarding wagon trains, protecting settlers from Native Americans and helping to build towns. Later these men were allowed to join all-black units who fought in the Spanish-American War, World War II and the Korean War.

In one incident, Covington said his outfit was not allowed to fight during World War II. The group was sent to Europe but ended up serving on guard duty, as cooks and in the laundry, he said.

"We were a well-organized outfit," Covington said. "We got treated awful bad."

Curley said when he and his all-black outfit arrived in Italy the white soldiers made fun of the black soldiers. They warned the Italians that the black soldiers grew tails at night, he said.

"We fought just like anybody else. At that time you didn't think. You just fought for your own life and your own skin," Curley said.

About 1940 President Harry Truman required all military units to integrate blacks and whites. The four agreed the transition at first proposed some anxiety, but mostly it was just another step in the right direction.

"At first, they wanted to keep us separated. They put us on a separate wing of the building," Curley said. "Eventually, they put us all together.

"The war really helped. When the bullets started, they're all your friends. When the bullets stopped flying, you go your way, and they go their way," he said.

Better late than never — the Buffalo Soldiers' recognition did finally come. A national monument of a black soldier

Recycling on campus costly

Efforts by facilities reduced after budget cuts, lack of state funding

"Until it is economically feasible or legislated by the federal government, I don't think recycling will be done on a larger scale. Unfortunately, people need an incentive."
JERRY LANE
DIRECTOR OF FACILITIES

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

K-State has been losing money since 1989 trying to keep the campus environment clean.

Recycling has been a difficult project for custodial services, Jerry Lane, director of facilities services, said.

"There were never any state funds to offset the cost," he said. "It has never been profitable."

For the first six months of this fiscal year, facilities has made $346.18 from the recycling project while suffering a net loss of $3,473, Lane said. When figuring expenses for labor, the truck and materials used, the project is unprofitable for K-State.

The first recycling program at K-State began in early 1989.

"We were collecting plastic, glass, white bond paper, colored paper, newsprint, computer paper and aluminum cans," he said. "We had collection centers in 20 locations on campus."

During 1991, there was quite a fiscal problem in the state of Kansas, and the budget for facilities was significantly reduced, he said. This hurt the recycling project because it was funded entirely through the Division of Facilities, specifically custodial services.

"We suffered a large budget reduction," Lane said. "Because of that reduction, we eliminated the recycling program all together."

When the recycling project was eliminated, there was concern from the administration, Lane said. Facilities was instructed to begin another recycling program, only on a smaller scale with a reduced budget.

"We eliminated colored paper, plastic and glass," he said.

Collection centers on campus were reduced to eight buildings. These buildings are Ackert, Anderson, Bluemont, Cardwell, Nichols, Seaton, Umberger and Willard halls. When relocating the recycling centers, facilities looked at where buildings were located and where space was available in the buildings.

"We tried to space them out around campus and put them in buildings that had good space available," Lane said.

All material collected is taken daily to Howie's Recycling because K-State has no storage facility for the recycled material, he said.

Although the recycling project is operating on a low budget, funding for future recycling projects on a larger scale is doubtful, Lane said.

"Until it is economically feasible or legislated by the federal government, I don't think recycling will be done on a larger scale," he said. "Unfortunately, people need an incentive."

Incentive to educate others environmentally has motivated Students Acting to save a Vulnerable Environment.

Jennifer DeLuca, senior in English, is president of SAVE. She said the 10-member organization has been in existence for four years. The membership varies from year to year depending on the popularity of certain environmental issues.

SAVE is currently working on an adopt-a-building program similar to the adopt-a-highway plan, DeLuca said.

"This would take the burden off the administration and put it on the students," she said.

Fraternities, sororities and other student groups would take it upon themselves to clean the areas around the building they adopt. By involving more people, this may create more drop off points for the recyclable material, and recycling would increase.

"If it's more convenient, they're more apt to do it," DeLuca said.

Townes stresses need to redefine culture

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

Emilie Townes "Shattered the Silence" in her speech Tuesday by stressing the importance of a re-definition of black culture.

"We must re-examine everything. We need to go back as far as we can and travel the roads we've past and the ones from which we came from," she said.

Townes is assistant professor of Christian social ethics at St. Pauls School of Theology. She said black Americans need to discover the truth about their heritage.

"We need to look at where we've been, who we are and where we are heading," she said.

"That we must learn to struggle not only within ourselves but within the community."

Throughout her speech, Townes talked about sexism, racism, homophobia and justice.

"We live in a sexually repressed culture," she said.

Townes said many still do not believe the HIV virus is an epidemic. She said many people in society are too comfortable with the way things are, and many have perceptions that the people who have the virus are just gays and prostitutes.

"We must separate body from spirit. Body is lower than the mind. Mind represses higher than spirit. We must learn to love the mind."

Everyone, no matter what the culture or race, should be respected and recognized, Towne said.

"If we can't work to create justice we have co-signed to worthlessness."

Townes said the truth of the past is many times hidden.

"We must discover the truth about ourselves and what we have been," she said.

NEWS DIGEST

▶TRANSFORMER CASUALTY OF PRESS BOX CONSTRUCTION

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

A transformer leaked 50 gallons of oil containing Polychlorobiphenyls, or PCB's, Tuesday at the construction site for the K-State's new press box at the KSU Stadium.

The accident occurred when construction workers were digging footings for the press box and entangled underground transformer cables in equipment. This caused the transformer to crack and leak, John Lambert, director of K-State's public safety department, said.

Safety workers will clean the affected area today and send the chemical to a licensed disposal company department, Lambert said.

Most of the transformers on campus do not have this chemical in them, and it is rare to find one that does, he said.

PCBs can cause skin irritation in humans and result in other minor problems, Lambert said. The area was sufficiently blocked off, however, to eliminate any of these problems, he said.

▶GRADE SCHOOL REACHES GOAL FOR REBUILDING FUND

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Manhattan Catholic Schools has raised the $40,000 needed to pay for an addition to the west side of Seven Dolors Grade School.

The school has replaced the music room with a new music room, an art room and a library, principal Charlotte Scheckel said. The music room was destroyed in a fire in November 1991.

The rebuilding project, which was started in September 1992, has been completed at a cost of about $150,000, she said.

Insurance paid for a little more than $100,000, and the school development committee raised the other $40,000, Father Jerome Morgan said.

The final $10,000 was presented to the school last night by Lawrence Funk, grand knight for the Knights of Columbus Council 1832.

The other $30,000 had been donated earlier by three anonymous sources, Morgan said.

ON THE AGENDA

Local Sears hopes for business as usual despite national closings

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

One month after Sears announced it was closing stores nationwide, store officials and employees said the Sears store in Manhattan Town Center is doing well.

In January, officials of Sears, Roebuck and Co. announced the closing of more than 100 stores across the country, as well as the elimination of 50,000 full- and part-time employees by 1994.

At the same time, the company announced it would be phasing out its catalog by next year.

The anticipated changes are an effort to regain market shares and ensure the company's profitability. In 1991, Sears fell from first to third among top U.S. general merchandisers, behind Wal-Mart and Kmart .

Ernest Dickey, manager of the local Sears, said the national changes are not expected to affect the Manhattan store.

The discontinuance of the catalog will affect the store the most Dickey said. The Sears employees in Manhattan often direct customers to the catalog for items that are not carried in the store, he said.

To compensate for the loss of the catalog, Dickey said the store tries to keep the inventory as active as possible.

He said the announcement has not caused a change in the attitudes of his employees.

Paula Templeton, junior in marketing and Sears employee, said she believes her job is secure. She said her job will change some without the catalog

Shay Jewett, graduate student in student counseling and personal services and Sears employee, said the only thing her store would have to cope with is some cutting back of employee hours.

Jewett said at the time of the announcement there was tension among employees because they didn't know what was going to happen.

The tension was relieved when they found out the store would stay open, she said.

Peter, played by Scooter Nelson, argues with his wife Rita, played by Jennifer Catney, during a dress rehearsal of "Prelude to a Kiss" in Nichols Theatre Tuesday night. It opens Thursday.

"Prelude to a Kiss" conveys real meaning of life, love for couple

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

Audiences of K-State theater department's production of "Prelude to a Kiss" will be transported into a fairy tale.

Peter, played by Scooter Nelson, junior in journalism and mass communications, and Rita, played by Jennifer Catney, graduate in theater, put their young love to the test when Rita switches bodies with a dying old man.

"It is a romantic comedy and is very much a play about love and commitment and about loving the person below the skin," said Marci Maullar, general manager of K-State Theatre Group.

The play itself is unique in more ways than one.

Prelude is a very simple story, but it addresses the major issues of the essence of love, said Kate Anderson, associate professor of theater and director of the play.

"The content of the play is sort of surreal. It is a fairy tale, and it isn't the kind of thing that will happen to someone in a normal day."

Although it is a fairy tale with a happily-ever-after ending, there is a message the actors hope to communicate to the audience.

"The whole point of the story is the change Peter goes through when he learns he loves Rita for who she is and not for what she looks like," Catney said.

The story conveys another powerful message when Rita realizes she needs to live life to the fullest no matter what the present situation is.

Playing a character within a character was the challenge Catney and Walt Boyd, graduate student in speech, faced, Anderson said. Boyd plays the character of the old man.

"Usually when you work on a part you figure out how Rita would do it, but I also have to play the old man as if he were Rita," Catney said.

To perfect their parts Catney and Boyd would watch each other play their separate parts and then try to imitate the characteristics, such as facial expressions and body movements, that make up the character's personality.

There is a movie out on video of the same title. The movie version was written by the same author, Craig Lucas, and is very similar to the play, Anderson said.

Catney has avoided seeing the movie until after the play.

"I have intentionally not seen the movie. It is hard enough playing the old man playing Rita, and I don't want to add trying to play Meg Ryan on top of that," she said.

The play will run at 8 p.m. Feb. 11-14 and Feb. 18-20 in Nichols Theatre.

Because the theme of the play ties in so much with that of Valentine's Day, a special showing of the play was added specifically for that day, Maullar said.

"The content of the play is sort of surreal. It isn't a fairy tale, and it isn't the kind of thing that will happen to someone in a normal day."

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Safety begins with you

THE ISSUE

Personal safety is a subject many people take for granted, at least until their own safety is threatened.

WE SUGGEST

Campus Safety Week is a good way to become more aware of the dangers that we face and how we can protect ourselves.

Students may not realize it, but this week is designated Campus Safety Week. Then again, this may not be the only thing many of those students do not realize.

For example, one in four college-aged women have experienced rape or an attempted rape since the age of 14. Or that in 1991, there were 241 reported campus burglaries.

The week is sponsored in part by 15 K-State offices and services, ranging from Lafene Health Center to the K-State Police Department.

The purpose of the eye-opening events is to educate students in ways they can guard their safety, as well as where to go for help when their safety is threatened.

These people may not be able to help students avoid car accidents or house fires. They can, however, help them deal with dangers like rape and robbery. They can teach students what to do when these or other emergencies arise.

Campus Safety Week kicked off Monday with a panel on rape and campus safety awareness and will continue tonight in the K-State Union Courtyard with "Personal safety, are you at risk?"

The week will end with a self-defense instruction course offered at 7 p.m. Friday in Union 212.

Along with these discussions and seminars, several different departments on campus will be offering programs and information.

So, even though you may not have known that nine out of 10 acquaintance rapes go unreported, you can try to educate yourself to keep your own safety from being compromised.

Just Guys is just that

TAYLOR MALI
GUEST COLUMNIST

With my name and phone number at the bottom of every poster for Just Guys, I guess I shouldn't be too surprised to get phone calls like the one I got at the end of last semester.

"So, are you guys a bunch of fags?" inquired a very nervous male voice.

I told him no, but that there was an excellent gay support group on campus if that's what he was looking for. Not surprisingly, it wasn't.

"Then do you, like, sit around and slam women or what?" he asked.

I gave him the quick version of the purpose of the group: Just Guys is a group of pro-feminist men who get together to talk about the problems that they face as men.

I told him when the next meeting was and encouraged him to attend. Something tells me he didn't.

My heart was beating fast when I hung up the phone. I think I was angry. But in retrospect, the ignorance of my unknown brother served as a valuable reminder. The fact that men cannot gather as a group without someone thinking they're either gay or misogynistic (or both) shows not only the novelty, but the necessity of such a group.

And now that Just Guys has decided to close its meetings to women, it is more important than ever for us to clarify our all-too-easily-misunderstood purpose.

What I find particularly frustrating is that in order to limit the number of anonymous phone calls I knew I would get, I racked my brain for weeks last year trying to think of a name for the group that would be neither offensive nor threatening.

I finally settled on Just Guys because of all the puns involved in the word "just." It's not a perfect name, and no man has ever shown up at his first meeting knowing exactly what will go on, but Just Guys has been good enough to bring 15-20 men together every other week to talk — and that is what I wanted.

See, I'm worried about men. I'm worried about women too, but so are a lot of capable people who can do more to help women than I can. I feel more alone in my concern for men. I'm worried about the fact that men are the most likely victims of violent crime, that most of America's homeless are men. I wonder why 75 percent of all suicide victims are male and why the average man dies seven years before the average woman.

If these guys ever got together, I often think, what might they discover? For one thing, they might discover they're more sexist than they thought. But there just doesn't seem to be a place where men can meet to talk among themselves. At least no place that doesn't serve beer or have the game on.

For many people — not just radical feminists — men serve as convenient "bad guys." Perfect scapegoats. Some ideologies seem to depend on all men being as ignorant, unjust and egotistical as some men undeniably have been. And I do not intend to defend the individual behavior of any man. But many people are so comfortable with viewing men as the problem that they can't bring themselves to admit that men might be part of the solution.

For who knows how long, men have had a monopoly on almost every conceivable kind of power: political, religious, economic, intellectual and sexual. The time for that to change has long since come.

It sounds corny, but I believe there is a deeply masculine power that men must fight hard to discover, honor and keep within themselves. Some will say this power is the real problem, that it is actually this power that must be abandoned at all costs. But I think any man who has been lucky enough to discover this power in himself has never felt the need for any other kind.

That's why I go to Just Guys meetings. I'm looking in myself for a power that I can keep, that is wholly mine. It's not a fierce, macho power; it is serene, selfish, and guiltless. I guess this is why I feel so strongly about not letting women sit in on Just Guys meetings. I once said that I could express my feelings better when women were not around, but I think I was lying.

All I know is that when I sit in a circle of men, all of whom have had the courage to come to a meeting — and I know it takes courage — I know that we're all doing valuable work within ourselves that might otherwise be left undone.

Coach's comment shows a problem

Editor,

The quote attributed to Coach Altman in the Feb. 3 Collegian vaporized my Oklahoma-victory purple pride. "'I had been teasing him that my sister could shoot better than him,' Altman said of Beane's 66 percentage from the charity stripe."

Comparing a male athlete to a girl or woman is the ultimate jock insult. Such comparisons are also gender slurs. This type of comment devalues women and denies the diversity of human talent and ability. Perhaps someday the sports world will strive to curb both sexist and racist comments.

Bernard Shaw concluded his Nov. 20, 1992, Landon Lecture, entitled "An Uneven Playing Field in America," with a timely challenge. Shaw stated, "Ladies and gentlemen, ... we must change so that those who study what we did correctly conclude that our society matured and our society affirmed that a woman does not have to out-man a man to be respected and respectable."

▶ SPIRIT

Fans must re-create Hades for sport foes

Editor,

It's about time this school's students start waking up and stop being fair-weather basketball fans. For those of you that didn't know, this year's team is on the verge of the Top 25. That is a great success, and I believe this team will only get better.

This season's crowds at Bramlage Coliseum have been pathetic by both numbers and crowd noise, with the exception of the University of Kansas game. Do the students go to see KU or their own school play? Why is the KU game the only game that excites anybody? Sure, it's the biggest rivalry, and it should be this school's most exciting game of the year, but it shouldn't be the only game of the year for the fans.

This team is out there leaving its guts out on the floor for us and the University, as well as themselves. The least that this school's students could do is go out there and support the team.

Sorry, fair-weather fans, the excuse of the team's lack of success doesn't cut it this year. Neither does the team's supposedly weak home schedule. We play Temple, LaSalle, and seven tough Big Eight opponents — hardly a weak schedule. Go to school at Wichita State, and then tell me what you think about their home schedule against those powerhouse Missouri Valley teams.

Let's go out there and cheer our school with all of our heart and make it a living hell for the opposition.

▶ ALLOWANCES

Most students must work for money

Editor,

I have come up with two perfect solutions to the problem of athletes and their need for allowances.

First, have every student (part-time and full-time) pay an additional $30 in student fees. Assuming there are 20,000 students, that will raise $600,000. We will take that money and pay $2,000 to 300 student-athletes.

Obviously we will pay the football players (they only got to go to Tokyo once this year) and the male basketball players first. They have to concentrate so very much on their sports to be able to stay competitive, they should not have to worry about money. After paying that elite group their "fair share," we will then divide up the rest of the allowances on a reward basis. The best athletes get the money; the others don't.

Second, if the athletes really need more spending money, they can quit their sport and go out and get a job. It might be an educational experience for them to realize how much money they really are getting. I would love to see them trying to work enough over 365 days to pay for just tuition, room and board, and books, never mind about entertainment. Maybe they might discover how hard it really is to be "just a student."

I have discussed this plan with several groups of people. Surprisingly enough, none of the people I talked to were very interested in having to pay another $30 in fees to support a bunch of athletes who already get more than they do. In fact, the people I talked to already have student loans, one or more jobs and a hope to win the lottery. What they don't have is a desire to ante up for someone else's beer money.

CORRECTION:

In Shawn Woodford's Feb. 5 column, "Knowledge warehouse is hurting," a reference to Farrell Library said it was not the recipient of large donor gifts.

In 1992, Joe and Joyce Hale gave a $2-million gift to be used specifically for the library.

The Collegian regrets the error.

QUEER GEOMETRY

KELLY KLAWONN

Approaching a merge in the road, a car came out of nowhere and sped by as the two lanes quickly melted into one.

My first instinct was to go faster and make him rethink this Al Unser maneuver of his. Don't make eye-contact, just pretend he is not even there. Send his little import into a wicked skid and finish it off with a tailspin.

As his car slid in front of mine, my eyes became transfixed on his fender. There, on the right corner, was a sticker of a pink triangle. Immediately I wanted to give him some sign or gesture to let him know that I knew what he was saying and about who he was.

Originally the pink triangle was a symbol of oppression. Today, it is a symbol of pride. It represents the queer community's past as well as our future.

During World War II, the Nazis embroidered a pink triangle on the uniforms of gay and lesbian prisoners in concentration camps. They used the triangle to single out gays and lesbians for special torture and persecution because of their sexual orientation.

Initially it seemed weird that we would embrace a symbol that was given to us by a man who tortured and killed so many of us, instead of creating our own symbol. While we have created pride rings and incorporated the black triangle, we should not abandon the pink triangle. When we wear a pink triangle we recognize the the lives and sacrifices of our brothers and sisters who came before us.

At first, I had some apprehension writing about the significance of the pink triangle. Some people felt like I was giving away a secret of sorts. Others felt that by telling people what the triangle means, I would be further branding gays and lesbians who wear triangles.

Somebody who didn't previously know what the triangle meant will be hostile or violent to someone wearing one. This is a frightening scenario, and one that we all fear will become a reality. But that should not prevent us from expressing or acknowledging who we are. We should not let another person's fear or ignorance control our lives.

If somebody only wears a triangle necklace in places where it is acceptable (i.e. within the gay community) or wears it without acknowledging what it means, what good does it do? Our pride needs to extend beyond the friendly confines of our community.

Coming out is hard and sometimes very painful. If we lived in a perfect world, we would not have to worry about coming out and acknowledging our gay, lesbian or bisexual identity. But ours is not a perfect world. Our sexual identity is an issue, and because of this we need to be out, be seen and be loud.

I wear my pink triangles as a symbol of who I am and where I come from. The pink triangle allows me to show who I am.

Our symbols allow us to be out to society without having to make an issue of our sexual identity. Because it is impossible to tell if somebody is gay, lesbian or bisexual, many people assume we don't exist. The triangle is one way to show that you exist and you are proud of who you are.

I don't believe in making people feel uncomfortable. I also do not believe in lying about who I am to make someone feel better about his or her own insecurities. If wearing my pink triangle makes somebody uncomfortable because they now know I am a lesbian, then so be it. I will not hide who I am to make others feel more comfortable.

Wear your pink triangles to show pride for yourself, your community and for change.

UPC interested in minority input

Multicultural committee hopes to bring involvement

RANCE AMES
Collegian

The Union Program Council is adding a new Multicultural Programming Committee this semester.

"UPC voted to add this committee last November," said Maura Coleman, senior in fine arts and UPC vice president for membership. "It will raise the number of committees on UPC from nine to 10."

UPC President Sharon Willits, graduate student in student counseling and personal services, said the committee will help UPC to provide better programming for everyone.

"It is hard to program without knowing what everyone wants," Willits said. "This committee will give minority students more of an input, which will help UPC to program for all populations of the student body."

Bernard Franklin, assistant dean of student life, said the formation of the Multicultural Programming Committee helps bring all aspects of campus life into entertainment for students.

"The concept of UPC is to be entertainment and a campus social network," Franklin said. "If you are not bringing all angles into UPC then you are not representing all segments of campus.

"This committee will provide a climate that helps everyone to realize that their opinion matters, and they can make a change within UPC and the K-State Union," Franklin said. "It is important for minority students to understand that the Union and UPC belong to them also."

Coleman said the committee will be formed this spring and will begin programming next fall. It is open to all K-State students, and she encouraged anyone to apply.

"We try not to set limits on how large a committee is, and we generally never turn an interested student away from UPC," Coleman said. "If there isn't room on one committee, we will find a spot on another committee."

The other UPC committees are Eclectic Entertainment, Special Events, Arts, Outdoor Recreation, Feature Films, Kaleidoscope Films, Travel, Issues and Ideas, and Promotions.

Applications for all of the committees are available in the UPC office on the third floor of the Union. The application deadline for leadership positions is Feb. 12. The application deadline for membership is March 5.

Professor bats 1.000 in history

DAVID GROSKO
Collegian

"Take me out to the ball game." In this case, however, it should be "take me into the classroom."

History professor Robert Linder has taught History of Baseball in American Culture for the last three spring semesters.

He has always loved the game of baseball and even played semi-professional baseball for the Salina Merchants and the Salina Longhorns, he said.

"It is a great way to learn some American history and enjoy doing it," Linder said. "Baseball is a super vehicle for teaching the history of the United States in the last 150 years."

He starts out teaching some historical background of the game, he said. He then focuses on one player each decade. He said he tries to make one player a prototype of the decade because every decade in American history has its own personality. Toward the end of the semester, he discusses some of the great pitchers of the game.

"Teaching the course has a double amount of pleasure to it. I've enjoyed playing and watching the game all my life, and now I am getting a chance to teach it," Linder said. "Of course, I'm old enough I can actually remember back to the 1940s and 1950s. I kind of serve as a living historical document."

Linder said the students who take this class have an appreciation of the game. There is no problem getting students motivated to read the books or do the papers, he said.

Danny Parra, senior in exercise science, said he took the class because he is a big baseball fan, and the history of it is interesting.

"I was surprised when the game of baseball actually started out. I thought it started back in the late 1800s, but it really began in the 1840s," Parra said.

He said another interesting fact about baseball is that Alexander Cartwright invented baseball, not Abner Doubleday.

"I'm a big sports nut as it is, and this just tops it off," John Hadley, senior in accounting, said about his interest in the class.

Linder plans to keep improving the class as he teaches it, he said.

"The ultimate ideal would be to offer the class for either three or six hours. For three hours of credit, the class would be as it is now. For six hours, I would take students on spring break to spring training for a week," he said. "We would interview players and watch games. Then the students would write a summary paper on their week."

Hadley said he has been to spring training before, and it was a great experience.

"I hope Professor Linder pursues this option to the class," he said.

Linder said he also would like to bring in some former major league baseball players to give lectures. The students would then cross examine them on their experiences.

He said he wants his students to remember at least two things about this class.

"One is that baseball is an incredible institution in American life," Linder said. "And the other is every time they go to a ball game to think about the class."

The one baseball quote Linder uses the most and likes to leave with his students is by Jacque Barzum in the book "God's Country and Mine."

"Whoever wants to know the heart and mind of America had better learn baseball, the rules and realities of the game and do it by watching first some high-school or small-town teams."

Wildcats look to erase memories of Mizzou

Cyclones still winless in Big 8 road games

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Wildcats' play in Monday night's nationally televised 67-51 drubbing at the hands of Missouri won't roll over into tonight's game against Iowa State, Wildcat coach Dana Altman said.

Primarily, he said, because his team hasn't had enough time to let it sink in.

"We're bouncing back after just one day's rest," he said. "There just isn't time to dwell on it."

The Wildcats are 14-4 overall, 4-2 in the Big Eight and barely clinging to their first Top 25 ranking in five years. They will try to erase the memories of the Missouri fiasco with a 7:30 game tonight against the 14-6 Cyclones.

"It was a disappointing loss," Altman said. "We're going to have to bounce back as quick as possible."

K-State was down by as much as 19 in the second half of Monday night's game, but at one point cut the deficit to 8.

"We could have thrown in the towel, but we didn't," Altman said. "That showed we can bounce back. Now, we just have to bounce back even harder."

But do the players fear a repeat performance?

"Oh, no," guard Anthony Beane said. "Oh, no — we'll be back.

"Iowa State is a good team, but we'll just have to come out and play a lot more aggressively on both ends of the court."

Iowa State, 4-3 and in fourth place in the Big Eight, takes a two-game winning streak to Manhattan. But the Cyclones, who have averaged 95 points in recent wins over Nebraska and Colorado, haven't won in three conference road games.

Iowa State has lost on the road to Kansas, Missouri and, most recently, Oklahoma State. The Cowboys thumped the Cyclones, 94-77.

K-State beat Oklahoma State 75-62 in Stillwater.

"They really need to get a win on the road some time," Altman said. "I know they are going to come at us."

To add to their road woes, the Cyclones have been outrebounded in all seven of their road games this season — by nearly 12 boards a game. K-State has outrebounded the opponent in 16 of its 18 games, including all 11 home games.

Despite Iowa State's lack of success on the road, Cyclone coach Johnny Orr said he doesn't look at this game as a must-win situation.

"You'd like to win them all," he said. "It's hard to get those road wins. Kansas found that out in Nebraska, and K-State found that out in Missouri."

Orr also said the Missouri game, in which the Cats made a season-low 31.6 percent of their shots, was not a good indication of this season's K-State team — a team he called one of the biggest surprises in the nation.

"It was just one of those nights when it wouldn't fall in the basket," he said. "They're playing very well together.

"They're playing good defense, they're rebounding, and they're doing the things they need to do down the stretch to win."

Iowa State is led by seniors Justus Thigpen and Ron Bayless. The tandem is the third most-productive guard duo in the nation, averaging a combined 31.7 points a game — behind only Duke and Florida State.

Combined, the two guards are making 49 percent of their shots, including 41 percent from 3-point range. As a team, the Cyclones are shooting 50 percent and averaging more than 85 points a game.

But Iowa State will have to get by the Wildcat defense that continues to lead the Big Eight, giving up just 65.3 points a game. The 67 points K-State gave up to Missouri was the most an opponent has scored on the Cats since Kansas scored 71 on Jan. 18.

And Altman said he still isn't sure what happened in Columbia.

"I don't know what all the factors were," he said. "I don't know if it was the ranking. I don't know if it was ESPN.

"I just know we didn't play well. Whatever the reasons, it's over.

"And we have to move on."

Tim Argo, president of the K-State parachute club, descends toward the ground after a jump at the Wamego airport. K-State has had a parachute club since 1967.

K-STATE'S PARACHUTE CLUB IS . . .

Flying high

ERIC MOORE
Collegian

Look, up in the air.

From heights of five to 21,000 feet, falling at speeds of 120 miles an hour, it's the K-State Parachute Club.

The need to skydive may be elusive to the inexperienced mind. Why do they do it?

"Words can't begin to describe the sensation," said Gil Hopson, graduate student in journalism and mass communications. "Skydiving certainly has changed my life."

Scott Haggerty, senior in industrial engineering, looks deeper into the sport.

"I don't jump for the rush anymore," he said. "I jump more for the accomplishment and the camaraderie of the sport.

"There is a real challenge in making stacks and formations. It is not so much like falling — it is more like flying. I love the sport.

"There is nothing like it."

Tim Argo, president of the club and graduate student in business administration, said it is like nothing he's ever tried.

"There is nothing else like it," he said. "I have tried hang-gliding and scuba diving, and they don't compare."

The club at K-State was started in 1967.

There is a one-time $100 payment for the first class, which includes training, equipment and one jump. Dues are $25 a semester, and there is a $15 fee per jump.

Argo said there are 20 to 100 students in the club, depending on the time of the semester.

The club took several third places at the National Collegiate Skydiving Championship during winter break at Clewiston, Fla. The competition involved 20 to 25 teams.

Main events for collegiate teams are the four-way relative works and the four-way canopy works. The four-way relative works lasts 35 seconds and starts from about 9,500 feet. Points are scored for specified formations.

K-State's team of Argo, Haggerty, Kelly Phillips and Jeff Martin took third in the relative-works competition.

The four-way canopy works event starts at 8,000 feet. Divers open their parachutes immediately and are allowed two minutes to make as many stacks as possible, rotating from top to bottom. They get one point for each stack.

The four-way canopy team of Phillips, Haggerty, Martin, and Kevin Rawson also took third.

"We are very pleased that we were competitive this year," Argo said. "The level of competition was the best it has been in several years."

Martin placed third in the intermediate class.

Any student can compete as long as two of these three requirements are met: have less than 1,000 jumps, have been jumping for less than five years, or be under 24 years old.

How did these guys become involved in skydiving?

"My little brother and I were curious. So, we went to a drop zone in Lyons, Kan.," Haggerty said. "Well, I couldn't be outdone by my little brother. So, he and I took the class together.

"Basically, when I was working on my undergraduate degree, I was teaching scuba-diving lessons. I met this guy who was a skydiving instructor, and after talking to him for a while, we decided to switch."

Argo said the first jump is something to be remembered.

"This is something you have been conditioned all your life to be afraid of," he said. "Your first jump

COLUMN

Hey, honey — wanna go fishing on Feb. 14?

RON LACKEY

This might be considered a sexist, stereotyping, pseudo-valentine column, but let's face the facts — women and men enjoy spending their free time differently.

It seems like your significant other always wants to do what you do not. She wants to go to the mall, shop six hours and come home with a pair of socks, maybe a Whitney Houston CD.

You want to go fishing.

You really don't want to go to the mall and watch her shop while you could be wetting a line. You catch yourself walking by the fountain in the mall looking for fish. It is a reflex, and you can't help it. Ladies, I promise you, they're not counting coins.

Your significant other doesn't understand why you miss your 8:30 a.m. class, but have no trouble getting up at 4 a.m., anxious to sit in a cold, wet blind for hours. She doesn't understand why you don't have any money to take her to dinner but you are a preferred customer at Bass Pro shops.

The old saying of "he who dies with the most toys wins" is true. Men will spend every cent they have to own the best toys around. If I pawned all my outdoor toys, guns, waders, rods, reels, tackle boxes and the like, I could probably buy her a small island in the Bahamas.

If a couple is dating and the male is a fan of outdoor sports, he will probably try to get her out for a fishing trip. If you're lucky, your companion will have a great time and want to do it again.

Ninety-nine percent of us will fail miserably. Thirty minutes into the trip, questions will arise.

"Why do you like this?"

"I would never eat these fish — this water is dirty."

"I just don't understand what's fun about this."

"I'm hot."

"I'm cold."

You try to explain that you should just enjoy being outdoors. Admiring the red-tailed hawk on a fence post. Listening to the wind sneak through the cattails and watching the Kansas sunset paint a picture no human being could even hope to reproduce. Simply enjoying some outdoor therapy.

Your significant other will try to explain what these mosquito bites are doing to her skin. How gross it is to eat fish out of a farm pond. And finally, why you have to drive the boat two miles to shore because she's not going to the bathroom in front of Uncle Ned.

She doesn't understand why I drive down the highway with my head out the window looking at farm ponds saying, "Ooh, I wonder if I can fish that?"

She doesn't understand how I can see two pheasants a mile ahead of the car — and tell you which one is the rooster. She doesn't understand how I can be sitting in my living room, watching television at full volume, and hear the geese flying 200 feet over my house — then running outside in my underwear to watch them fly.

I'm sure she has her gripes, too. You know you're in trouble when she has found quail feathers in her car. Proving true her once-ridiculous theory that you take her car, your dog and three muddy friends hunting every weekend.

If you and your mate can work around each other's hobbies, chances are you'll do fine. Encourage your significant other to do his or her thing. If you're lucky, your companion may somehow understand how Mother Nature soothes your soul, forgiving you for your endless passion for the outdoors.

While I'm writing about endless passions, JC — will you marry me?

SPORTS DIGEST

▶ASHE AWARDED OLYMPIC ORDER

NEW YORK (AP) — The International Olympic Committee said today it would award its highest honor to Arthur Ashe, the tennis star and human rights advocate who died last weekend of AIDS.

Ashe, the only black man to win a Grand Slam title and a spokesman for a string of social causes, never participated in the Olympics. But IOC president Juan Antonio Samaranch said he epitomized what the award, the Olympic Order, means.

"I think a great athlete and a great man deserves his last homage coming from the Olympic movement," Samaranch said. "I think he was really a thorough Olympian."

▶RICHMOND NAMED NBA ALL-STAR

NEW YORK (AP) — Former Wildcat Mitch Richmond was among the players named Tuesday to the NBA All-Star team as a reserve.

It will be the first all-star appearance for Richmond.

Richmond played just two seasons at K-State, but he stands as the schools fifth all-time leading scorer with 1,327 points. As a senior, Richmond broke Bob Boozer's single-season scoring record with 768 points and led the Cats to a 25-9 record.

In the NBA, Richmond was the 1989 Rookie of the Year with Golden State.

In all, five of the players chosen were picked for the first time, including former Jayhawk Danny Manning.

Telephone survey to help in job search

Senior polls former students to help future graduates select companies

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

While some people cringe at the thought of answering a telephone survey or filling out a questionnaire, the former K-State students Wendy Wolff has contacted enjoy it.

They are hotel and restaurant management graduates providing helpful information for future graduates.

Wolff, senior in hotel and restaurant management, is in charge of finding K-State alumni from the hotel and restaurant management program.

Using a list of contacts and phone numbers, she spends hours each week trying to locate the graduates.

The list includes more than 150 students who graduated between 1984 and December 1992.

These alumni are asked about their current job status, including where they are working, when they started, how much they are earning and what they like or dislike about the job.

They are also asked what courses helped them the most at K-State and which courses need improvement.

Wolff started this project at the beginning of the spring semester after inquiring about a hotel and restaurant problems course.

Patrick Pesci, instructor in hotel and restaurant management, said Wolff was a perfect candidate for the independent study course.

"She has the people skills and the organizational skills necessary for a job of this magnitude," he said.

Pesci meets with her each week to check on the progress of the research. Wolff is the type of student who doesn't need much guidance, he said. She just gets things done on her own.

"It is a time-consuming project, but one that will help so many students in hotel and restaurant management," Wolff said.

Once the phone surveys are finished, Wolff will produce a report on the information she was given about the various companies.

The final report will be put on file later this spring in the hotel and restaurant management office for all students to use.

This report will include an average salary in the field, the likes and dislikes of people working for specific companies, where the most jobs are available and if there are any internship program openings.

"The graduates I talk to are very open and honest about their current jobs and responsibilities," Wolff said.

Some alumni talk about their frustration with companies they are currently working for, she said.

"The positive and the negative comments will be included in the report because it's information the students need to know," Wolff said.

Getting honest feedback from the alumni helps instructors realize what needs to be improved, Petrillose said.

The undergraduate students will benefit by knowing what to expect from various companies, said Lisa Regan, junior in hotel and restaurant management.

"This will help all future graduates, by giving them information and contacts within the industry," she said.

ESSENTIALS

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Fake letters, foul language and a jealous boyfriend

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I am glad to see the Collegian finally allowing a column like yours. It allows a place to voice frustrations and opinions in an anonymous manner. However, if the truth be known, I would say the majority of the letters written to you are fake. Made up by a bunch of students sitting around their fraternity houses, sorority houses or dorms seeing what they can come up with. Even though some of the people who write may be sincere, for the most part don't you feel sometimes you are being made a fool of?

On a different subject. Please explain why the Collegian can get away with printing a direct vulgar quote from Billy Tubbs, and television has to beep it out.

Also, Tom Lister can quote Ice-T's four-letter words, but if you say "damn" on the air, the Federal Communications Commission slaps you with fines.

It would be in the best interest of K-State if the Collegian would tone down the vulgar language. Once those who graduate in journalism go into the real world it will not be tolerated.

Wake Up and See Reality

DEAR WAKE UP,

What? People faking letters to Cassandra? Say it can't be! I'm glad you wrote in — I'll bet that a person has to get up pretty early in the morning to pull the wool over your eyes.

Of course, you are right. Some of the letters I receive are obvious fakes. I try to toss them. But I run some because, fake or not, they might be of use to someone having a similar problem.

I have never felt that I'm being made fun of. In fact, I'll tell you a little secret. Cassandra Duveaux is not a real person! It's a nom de plume (literally, fake French-sounding name, such as Dom DeLuise).

As for all the damn vulgarity that seems to be in the Collegian these days. Well, I don't know what the hell is going on there. Some people think unnecessary vulgarity sucks, but what do I know. Crap, I'm just an advice columnist.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a big problem with my boyfriend of three years. He is extremely jealous. I consider myself a fairly attractive woman, and so does he — that's the problem. He hates it when I even look at another guy. I have some male friends, but he gets mad whenever I talk to them. I have told him over and over that they are only friends, but he just won't listen to me.

I really do love him, and he loves me. I just don't know how to convince him that it's OK for me to talk to other guys.

Private Property

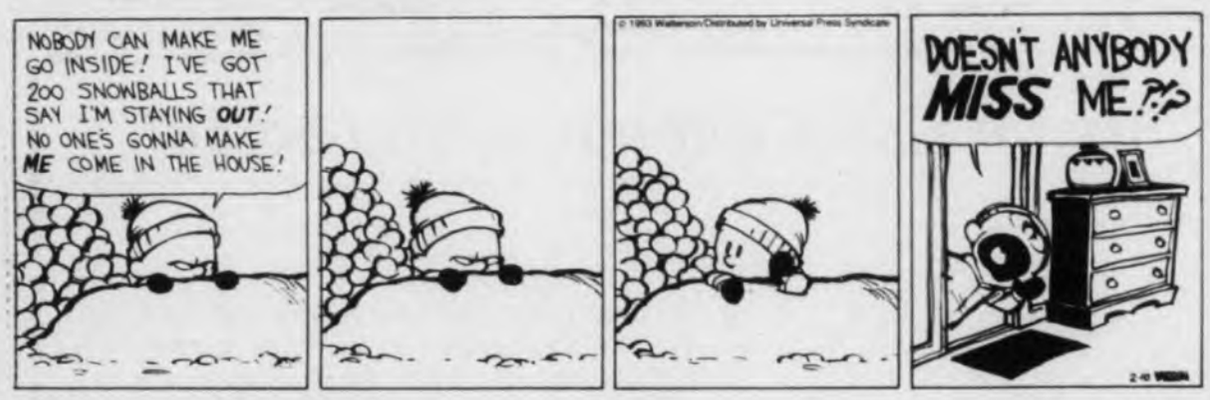
DEAR PRIVATE PROPERY,

Show your boyfriend this letter. I will direct my advice to him and all other jealous boyfriends because he is the one with the problem, not you. Here goes:

Hey boyfriend, take a smart pill. It's OK for your sweetie to talk to other guys. It's fine for her to have male and female friends. Actually, it's better that way.

Sure your girlfriend is pretty — most boyfriends think their girlfriends are pretty. Other men think your girlfriend is pretty. Accept the fact that her attractiveness is another one of her many attributes.

If you insist on being consumed with jealousy and suspicion, you will lose her. She will finally realize that you don't respect her enough to trust her and that you are insecure. You will also be unhappy. You will spend all your time and energy worrying about whether the 2.5 billion men in the world are trying to put the make on your girlfriend. And even if they were, there's not a thing you can do — she decides who she sees.



Don't you think this time and energy would be better spent doing things that make her want to be with you? Try paying her a compliment, listening, sending a few flowers — all the things you used to do before you turned into the green-eyed monster.

And quit worrying. She still likes you best. She just doesn't like how you are acting.

Letters to Cassandra Duveaux may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan., 66506.

Buffalo Soldiers pioneers in integration of Army on horseback was dedicated at Fort Leavenworth in 1992. Harrington was also recognized by former President Bush by a presentation in the Oval Office.

"When you do something good, you like to pass it on. I'm one of the few who was invited to the Oval Office. I was interviewed by President Bush," Harrington said. "I just wanted to tell you young people that you have a chance that I thought I'd never had. The president and his staff gave me a standing ovation. I was one of the few who got a standing ovation from the president of the United States."

Syvette Davis, sophomore in English, said she was particularly interested in the panel discussion because her great-uncle, Loren Brown, was a Buffalo Soldier. Davis also attended the dedication celebration in Fort Leavenworth, where the 10th Cavalry Division was located.

"It was an awesome feeling to see these men finally get the recognition and the monument they deserved," she said. "They had such a tough time. The monument shows our respect and honor."

Capt. Allen West, assistant professor of military science, said he thought it was important for students as well as faculty to realize the Buffalo Soldiers' contributions.

"We have a national monument for something a lot of us don't know why it is there," West said. "History is always taught from the white perspective. Not only the Buffalo Soldiers' contributions may have been kept secret but others.

"We owe it to this generation at some point if we are going to break down the walls of prejudice. It's now or never," he said.

scares the living daylights out of you. There is something wrong with you if it doesn't.

"The human body usually takes about 75 to 100 jumps to start to settle in, but even after 100 jumps, every jump is not easy."

Even Haggerty — who has jumped more than 250 times — said there is still some uneasiness.

"I'd be lying if I said that I was never afraid of a jump," he said. "Occasionally, the anxiety level increases. Then I have something to prove to myself.

"I jump for myself. I don't feel the need to impress anyone."

Davis also said society needs to look at the different situations people face, such as racism and sexism, and give them more thought.

Townes said Black History Month can help all college students appreciate black culture.

"This month is a good time to lift up the history not talked about and to re-think things," she said.

Executive branch loses many perks to cutbacks

Clinton signs series of program cuts limiting travel privileges, advisory boards

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — With the stroke of a pen, President Clinton on Wednesday began the process of eliminating 100,000 government jobs, dismantling scores of commissions and stripping executives of many fringe benefits.

It was the second installment in Clinton's campaign to show that fiscal belt-tightening — which he will ask the entire nation to participate in next Wednesday — starts at home.

The era of high living on the taxpayers by government officials has come to an end, Clinton said as he signed a series of orders. The reductions are in addition to program cuts to be included in the president's upcoming economic program and budget.

On Tuesday, Clinton announced a cut in the White House staff of about 25 percent.

Americans don't want a government that wastes money, a government that costs more and does less, he told his Cabinet.

"Now, you and I must deliver," he said.

The new orders will reduce, through attrition, the 2.1 million full-time civilian federal work force by 100,000 by the end of 1995. Ten percent of the cuts will come from management. Some 200,000 workers retire or quit each year.

Other provisions of the plan are as follows:

■ Require cuts in administrative costs totaling 14 percent by 1997. This includes travel, consulting fees, printing and supplies.

■ Eliminate a third of the 700 presidential advisory boards and commissions. Some examples: the Board of Tea Experts and the Advisory Panel for the Dictionary of Occupational Titles.

■ Eliminate home to work use of chauffeur-driven limousines for top Cabinet deputies, except for national security reasons. Cabinet secretaries will continue to have full limo service.

■ Require all federal executive dining rooms to either cover their own costs or shut down. Ten of 14 departments had executive dining rooms during the Bush administration, costing $4 million a year, said White House aides.

■ Further restricted use of federal aircraft for non-government purposes. Cabinet officials will need White House permission for such trips.

House Republicans praised the cuts' and urged Democratic congressional leaders to do the same.

"We need to pare back our own bloated committee staff on Capitol Hill," said Rep. David Dreier, R-Calif., ranking Republican on the Joint Committee on the Organization of Congress.

Clinton's cuts cover neither the legislative nor judicial branches of government. The military is also not covered, nor is the independent U.S. Postal Service.

A week before he unveils proposed tax increases, new spending and tax breaks to boost the economy and lower the deficit, Clinton said he wants to prove to the nation that government can do more with less.

Perquisites and privileges for government officials grew during the 12-year Republican rule.

"That era has come to an end with our coming to office," he said.

At Clinton's prodding, several Cabinet members told how they found and eliminated excesses.

Labor Secretary Robert Reich said he closed the Labor Department's executive dining room.

"Once executives had to eat in the cafeteria with normal employees, we saw a lot more interactions that didn't happen before," he said.

Pavilion ice rink gives all a slippery good time

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

Simon Sylvester-Chauduri, 7, shoots the puck toward the goal during a youth hockey session in the Manhattan Ice Skating Rink Wednesday evening. The rink is open until late March, weather allowing. Groups of all types, along with open-skating nights, have kept the rink busy.

Hockey, skating lessons, offered for all ages, fill up quickly

COLLEGIAN STAFF

Elbow-to-elbow, skaters at the Manhattan Ice Skating Rink take the floor.

Clad in mittens and sweatshirts, people of all ages try their hand, or feet, at ice skating on a rink one-eighth the size of a regulation hockey rink.

With smiling faces and an occasional wipeout, skaters circle the rink. Some dare to brave the center, but others cling to the walls.

Students arrive in groups to play and show off, while small children drag their parents around by the arm in an effort to master the sport.

Although the rink is small, skaters keep the employees hopping and have been doing so for about 10 years.

"We're pretty busy," said Glenn Kipp, sophomore in arts and sciences and rink employee. "Some days it's slow, some it's busy, but on weekends it picks up."

Located in the Park Pavilion in Manhattan City Park, the rink is open daily during the season. Ice-skating lessons for children, youth and adults, as well as youth hockey lessons, are offered.

About 40 children are enrolled in the hockey lessons, and the figure- skating classes fill up quickly. However, the rink size makes practice difficult.

Although past Olympians may not call the Manhattan rink home, there have been competition skaters who have worked for the rink, Kipp said.

In 1987, members of the Manhattan Hockey Club had a game in St. Louis. The Edmonton Oilers had an exhibition game in St. Louis at the same time, and the club members were able to meet Wayne Gretzky, Kipp said.

Owned and operated by the city, the indoor ice rink is the first of its kind in Manhattan.

"They (the city) used to fill that little area in front of Johnny Kaw for people to skate in. Then they decided to build an indoor rink," Kipp said.

The rink is a non-profit organization. The money made at the rink is the money the employees make, Kipp said. All profits get turned are put back into the rink.

Kipp said employees try to keep the rink open as late into March as possible, but they are scheduled to close during spring break because the ice begins to melt.

"Once it melts and people fall, they get drenched," he said.

The ice is four inches thick now, Kipp said. The skaters are constantly scraping it off into snow, and the employees continue to build ice as fast as possible by adding water on top of the rink. By late March, it is usually too warm to keep the rink open, and it closes for the season.

"Towards the end of the season, there's so much ice on top, the coils can't freeze it all," Kipp said.

Powell will complete term if asked

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — General Colin Powell said Wednesday he will complete his term as chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff if asked by President Clinton, but would prefer to leave a bit early.

Powell strongly disputed a New York Times report that his desire to retire early was because of disagreements with Clinton over the new president's policies on homosexuals and budget cuts.

Powell, 55, is the nation's highest ranking military officer as well as the chief military adviser to the president. He has held the job since Oct. 1, 1989.

"I am not unhappy, I am not disappointed, I am not cross with the administration," he told CNN.

Powell said he had wanted to quit a month or so before his term as Joint Chiefs chairman ends on Sept. 30 in order to get his family resettled. He said he had made his wish known privately before Clinton took office.

In a later CNN interview, when told that a White House spokesmen had said Clinton wants him to serve out his full term, Powell indicated he would stay on the job if asked.

"I will stay for whatever period of time that the president wishes," Powell said. "I serve ultimately at his pleasure, and I haven't heard (Clinton wants him to stay through September), but I'm delighted to hear that."

The law allows Powell, who has spent 35 years in the Army, to serve a third two-year term as head of the Joint Chiefs. But custom dictates that he leave after four.

Overlooked in the flap over Powell's retirement plans, was his statement Wednesday that he now believed the defense budget could be cut even more than planned by the Bush administration, without hurting U.S. security.

Beane's shot at buzzer tops Clones, 68-66

Just when the Cardiac Cats seemed to be out of their supply of late-game heroics, K-State pulled off its fourth overtime win this season.

And just when Anthony Beane seemed to be turning human — he botched a chance to win it in regulation — the junior guard once again came through in the clutch for K-State, hitting a leaning 10-footer with just under a second left.

In the end, the Wildcats left Bramlage Coliseum with a 68-66 win and, because of Missouri's loss to Oklahoma, sole possession of second place in the Big Eight.

"There's something about this team," Beane said. "There's something very special about this team. We never quit no matter what the situation.

"Everybody sucked it up and showed that we have a lot of heart."

Bad experiences keep some from using Lafene

NEIL ANDERSON
Collegian

"Lafene Student Death Center" is what some students have dubbed Lafene Health Center.

Some students will not set foot in Lafene because of a bad experience or because they have heard of one. Grim tales of lack of better judgment, or of dismissal of symptoms, are available to anyone with a willing ear.

Ercilia Hernandez, graduate student in marriage and family therapy, had such an experience.

Hernandez said she went into Lafene with what she thought was a cold or the flu, and the physician's assistant who saw her agreed and told her to continue her treatment of over-the-counter medication. She returned two days later with the same problem.

This time, the physician's assistant diagnosed her with allergies and gave her medication to treat them, she said.

Renee McKain, a Manhattan resident, had a similar experience in Lafene.

McKain, a senior in social work at the time of the incident, had a high temperature in the morning and visited Lafene a couple hours later.

She said her temperature was taken at 106 degrees. She said she was told by the doctor to take Extra-Strength Tylenol and to try to get some sleep.

McKain said she went home and tried to sleep. By mid-afternoon, her roommates found her in an incoherent state. They took her to the hospital emergency room, where her temperature was taken again at 106.

After blood tests were done, McKain said she was given medication and sent home. She said she was also told to try to sleep and return in the morning if she still felt sick.

By the next morning she had started to feel better, she said.

"I blame Lafene as a whole, not an individual doctor, for what happened," she said.

She said she hasn't been to Lafene since and won't ever go back.

Dr. Larry Moeller, medical director of Lafene, said he doesn't know what to say to students who won't return or go to Lafene.

"It's their choice," he said. "We always look for ways to improve ourselves."

Moeller said there are few definite things in medicine, and the gray areas outnumber the clear-cut, black-and-white areas.

"With education, communication and real caring, you can overcome misconceptions," he said.

There are peer reviews and case consultations, which makes the atmosphere like a think-tank, he said.

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene Health Center, said Lafene is always interested in hearing from students, whether they have complaints or compliments.

There are two suggestion boxes in Lafene. One is by the front desk. The other is near the pharmacy.

Zweimiller said complaints can be phoned in, written in or given in person, and all complaints are taken seriously.

Misdiagnosis is possible, he said, whether visiting a doctor or health care center. He said Lafene investigate all sides of the issue when a patient complains.

He said the cause of some misdiagnosis cases might be the build-up of patients waiting to be seen.

On an average day, Lafene sees between 300 and 400 patients, he said. Seventy percent of those

K-State student wins USA Today award second time in a row

JENNIFER SWANSON
Collegian

A K-State student has been named to USA Today's All-American Academic Team for the second year in a row.

Cynthia Riemann, senior in industrial engineering and physical sciences, was one of only 20 college students in the nation to receive this honor.

A K-State student being named as an academic all-American is the equivalent to or even better than having an athlete who is an all-American, Charles Reagan, executive assistant to President Jon Wefald, said.

"When there are only 20 throughout the nation, it is a great honor. It goes along with the exceptional performance of K-State students in academic competitions," Reagan said.

Riemann was one of 13,042 applicants in a process that required students to send in a standard resumé, two letters of recommendation and a transcript.

Students were also asked to write about their most outstanding academic achievement, she said.

Riemann's achievement was the result of a class she took at K-State, which fueled her interest in industrial waste minimization.

Each semester, students in the product process class make an aluminum vice to learn the manufacturing process. Riemann said heat treatment during the process produced a cyanide salt that was not extremely dangerous but was costly to dispose of.

People are spending a lot of time trying to figure out what to do with industrial waste once it is produced, Riemann said. In an attempt to find ways to minimize industrial waste production, Riemann proposed a way to change the heat treatment process.

RIEMANN

"I found a process that produced no waste, and they are using it now," she said.

Ten judges, selected by USA Today from various university organizations throughout the country, picked the 13 women and seven men for the team.

Each team member was given a cash award, a trophy and a trip to Washington, D.C., Riemann said.

When she was notified of her selection in mid-January, Riemann said she was very excited.

"I was very excited to go. The person who went last year told me how exciting it was and about the incredibly interesting people I'd meet," she said.

Other recipients were from all over the nation and in every discipline, Riemann said.

Two unique students who stuck out in her mind were a formerly homeless man and a biochemist from Harvard who was graduating at the age of 20.

Winning the award also gave Riemann a chance to tell others

Slam poetry finds home in Lawrence

Flamingo lounge offers twisted readings of poems

MIKE LANE
Collegian

Where can you go for an evening of psychotic love, pyromania and sexual frustration? The Flamingo Lounge in Lawrence.

While the club is usually home to exotic dancing in a smoke-filled, mirror-enclosed room, last Monday night was different: Lisa Edmunds was performing.

Edmunds, graduate student in English, came to the seedy lounge to put on a show for a small yet eager audience.

This was no striptease, although there were times when the act got a little wild. No, this was an evening of poetry. Slam Poetry to be precise.

Slam Poetry is more than just a poetry reading. It is an event that pits the creative disposition, dramatic interpretation and poetic abilities of three poets in a three round competition. As the name implies, the poems are often derogatory and usually funny.

The poets read their own poems, which are judged by judges chosen at random from the audience. Poems are rated on a scale of one to 10, with 10 being the highest.

The idea of Slam Poetry began several years ago in Chicago and has since moved nationwide. The event has found a home in Lawrence at the Flamingo and is organized by Cheryl Lester and Frank Dotun of Lawrence.

Taylor Mali, graduate student in English, is a regular competitor and was a contender in last year's "Grand Slam," the championship of the contests.

"The idea of poetry slam is performance," Mali said. "It's an effort to try and revitalize people's interest in poetry."

Poetry Slam is not about traditional poetry. Actually, it's more like standup comedy. Funny titles and introductions aid in a poem's overall effectiveness. Some poets, like Mali, exploit their names like All-Star wrestlers. He is known in the Slam Poetry world as Taylor "Maximum" Mali.

The entertainment does not stop with the recitation of a poem. Audience participation is encouraged.

"You have an active participation in the slam. Let the poets know what you think ... so they won't do it again," said Dotun, who was the MC of Monday night's event.

Feedback from the audience comes in the form of shouts and clapping for a well-received poem, and a crowd's displeasure has been known to result in beer throwing.

Monday night's "Slam" pitted Edmunds against Christine di Angelis and Phil Wedge, both from Lawrence.

Edmunds, who described her poetry as "a dark sardonic celebration of sirenic psychotic love," was no Emily Dickenson, but "a mix between Allen Ginsberg and Andrew Dice Clay."

She had a captivated audience and smashed through the monotonic diatribes and troubled perversity of

NBC settles with GM on demo

News program admits 'Dateline' report on truck's gas tanks was rigged

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — NBC News announced Tuesday that it had settled a defamation lawsuit brought by General Motors Corp. over the network's demonstration of a fiery pickup truck crash on its "Dateline NBC" program.

"We acknowledge and take responsibility for the problems GM has identified in the demonstration crash," Stone Phillips, the program's co-anchor, said.

"We deeply regret we included the inappropriate demonstration in our 'Dateline' report. We apologize to our viewers and to General Motors."

In a statement from GM lawyer Harry Pearce, the automaker said NBC had agreed to pay for the costs of the GM investigation.

"In view of NBC's announcement, and because it is our business to design and manufacture great cars and trucks and not to be preoccupied with litigation, we are dismissing the defamation suit that we brought Monday," Pearce said.

"With this matter behind us, we trust that the safety record of our 1973-87 full-size pickup trucks will be fairly and objectively examined.

"We're confident on our position that these vehicles are safe will be upheld when the ongoing investigation is concluded."

Earlier, media watchers had commented that NBC News made a mistake in not telling viewers it had rigged a pickup truck with incendiaries for the report on the gas tanks.

"I think any kind of enhancement of a test, of an event, shouldn't be done in the first place," Steve Powers, co-author of "How to Watch TV News" and a longtime TV newsman, said. "The camera can lie, and the viewer should be warned when there is a manipulation of the image."

NBC's report on GM's sidesaddle tank design aired Nov. 17. Last week, an Atlanta jury awarded $105.2 million to the parents of a teen-age boy killed when his GM pickup exploded in flames. GM denies its design is unsafe.

General Motors filed a defamation lawsuit Monday against NBC News. GM had filed a lawsuit separately on Jan. 20 against the Gaithersburg, Md.-based Institute for Safety Analysis, which staged the crash.

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Organization has right to voice

THE ISSUE

A new campus organization has been criticized for views that some call anti-gay.

WE SUGGEST

The First Amendment exists to allow all groups and individuals the chance to express their views.

With the recent formation of the organization Students Trying to Remember America Isn't a Giant Homosexual uTopian Society (STRAIGHTS), the freedom for circulation of ideas remains alive.

The group, currently a newsletter-only organization, whose leadership doesn't seem to be too keen on revealing itself, has posted fliers all around campus and created quite a buzz.

The fliers describe STRAIGHTS as a group formed "in response to an article in the Kansas State Collegian ... that implied that homosexuality was better than heterosexuality." The flier then states that the organization members are disgusted at apparent media opinion that "'alternative' (morally wrong) lifestyles should be accepted as normal ..."

Some have been moved to label STRAIGHTS as an anti-homosexual hate group, questioning whether such a group should even be allowed to exist.

But STRAIGHTS can exist, and it should exist. This group has a view to express, and it has every right to express it — just as BaGaLS has a right to exist, and just as Brad Seabourn and John Hart have the right to voice their widely diverging opinions.

The politically-correct mindset that dictates in favor of hate-speech codes and the censoring of "unpleasant" words holds very little water and smothers the free flow of ideas that is so crucial to our society.

STRAIGHTS may not hold a popular view to some people, but questioning their right to exist is a frightening action.

'Fundie' threat is very real

During most of the last presidential election (and most recently in a column on the Opinion page of last week's Collegian) a certain misguided sect of fundamental Christians, or "fundies" as I prefer to call them, blasted us with the familiar phrase "family values," and the ominous political threat "hostile" government officials pose toward these values. "Christian values and goals are under siege" was the cry.

BRAD SEABOURN

The underlying (and erroneous) assumption to most of their whining is that Christianity has "values" and "goals" that are truly worthy of consideration. The fact is, their hollow assertions of not being able to "inject" their "values" into government, claims of "threatened" civil rights and "twisted" interpretations of First Amendment rights parallel the insidious deception and moral blarney that litters the so-called Good Book from cover to cover.

If one follows the suggestion of the French philosopher Pierre Abelard to "use systematic doubt and question everything" when reading the Bible, one will quite logically and ultimately conclude that the majority of what is offered in the Bible as "truth" and of tremendous "value" to the individual and the family is simply so much "born-again" flatulence.

This process of course requires that one momentarily set aside the "God said it, I believe it, that settles it" mentality I recently encountered in the form of a Gomeric (Gomer-like) bumper-sticker plastered to the tail-end of one of God's mobile billboards (an evangelical driving a car). If this can be accomplished without incorporating too much guilt and self-flagellation, then there may be hope for you yet.

Most of us who are parents realize (I hope) that our children follow and scrutinize our words and actions quite thoroughly. They will in fact imitate everything we say and do. Therefore, to best teach our children appropriate behavior, it follows that we should set a good example.

This can (and should) also apply to the concept of God as "father." The Bible gives us a very clear picture of what God "the father" would have us imitate. For instance, God prefers to condemn all mankind for the sins of Adam and Eve and thus let the innocent suffer for the guilty; to keep alive and torture for all eternity anyone who questions, disobeys, or disagrees.

These are the "family values" Christians would have us emulate. Yet, any sane human being can see these actions are only slightly magnified copies of what many of our most heinous criminals do. Christians can twist the concepts of divine authority, justice and mercy around all they want, but the conclusion remains the same. If God holds all mankind guilty for the sin of two people, if he has visited upon the innocent the punishment of the guilty, if he is to torture any single soul for eternity for any reason, then it is absolutely, positively, without question, patently wrong to worship him.

Of course, many Christians prefer not to emphasize the Old Testament, authoritarian aspect of God and offer the "love thy neighbor as yourself" axiom as Christianity's crowning glory. This statement, as babbled from the lips of Jesus — Christianity's so-called "great moral teacher" — indicates he understood essentially nothing about love. Christians pride themselves in saying "Jesus loves you ... he loves everyone." They also say he doesn't discriminate in his love, that he loves us all equally "even if we are totally and disgustingly unworthy of love."

In short, Jesus loves Jeffrey Dahmer as he loves Mother Teresa.

However, to offer indiscriminate love in this manner only cheapens it. Do you feel special now, knowing you are loved as much as a serial killer?

It is quite obvious to even the most casual reader of the Bible that Jesus did not say, "We should love because ...." He demanded love. This fabulously talented moral philosopher obviously did not understand that love is a complex emotion that is generated over time as a result of the development of mutual understanding and respect involving the presence of many important commonalities embedded in an elaborate network of symbolic and concrete intimacies and interdependencies. And this was a great philosopher?

Jesus did not teach; he commanded. He did not encourage free inquiry, the first duty of a teacher; he expected obedient parroting of himself. He did not advocate the dissection, discussion and weighing of alternative positions as skilled teaching calls for; he taught that his were the only worthy declarations. He did not explain and defend his ideas with logic and evidence as experience pedagogy requires; he rested their on his authority. And this was a great teacher?

To see how bad a teacher Jesus was, one only has to compare him to the likes of Socrates, Aristotle, Plutarch, Antisthenes, Thales, Plato, Epicurus, Theophrastus, and Epictetus, to name only a few. But then, what are the chances of this occurring with much frequency, in a society totally controlled and governed by those who practice and place Christian "values" above all else?

Double standard marks criticism

Editor,

Question: What is the difference between Ice-T rapping about "dusting some cops off" in his now infamous song "Cop Killer" and Arnold Schwarzenegger dusting off a multitude of L.A.'s finest in his screen role of "The Terminator"?

Answer: Arnold is a well-respected white Republican (even seen with ex-president Bush during his re-election campaign) who is only acting out a part in a movie, while Ice-T is an uppity black man who is deviously promoting the murder of policemen.

I would hazard a guess that Tom Lister has seen "The Terminator" and maybe even enjoyed it (I know I did). So take my advice, Tom, and jump off the "Cop Killer is a threat to our nation's police" bandwagon. Frankly, I find it not only boring after months of coverage, but damn hypocritical as well.

United States is no bed of roses

Editor,

I must take issue with a letter that appeared in the Feb. 9 Collegian. Although I agree with Randy Crow's estimation of Brad Seabourn, I certainly do not agree with his assessment of the United States.

The United States is not the world champion in abortion. That title belongs to Russia. Birth control is not generally available in that country, so abortion is all they have. And in India, girl babies are aborted just because they are girls.

The United States is not the world champion in murder. In Brazil, it is practically legal for a man to murder a woman for the flimsiest of reasons, and in Saudi Arabia a father may legally murder his daughter if she has engaged in "immoral activity." And the last time I checked, it was Tokyo, not New York City, that led the world in violent crime.

The United States is no rose garden, but neither is the rest of the world.

▶ ORGANIZATION

Ideas reach new low with arrival of group

Editor,

I've been on this campus for several years now, and I had thought I had seen just about every type of hate and prejudice that was possible. Low and behold, I was wrong, and this campus (hopefully just a handful of students) has been brought to a new low.

I am referring to the new organization calling themselves STRAIGHTS. I didn't think much of it as I glanced at their flyer that was posted on every trash can on campus. I didn't realize the irony until much later.

STRAIGHTS refers to the "Students Trying to Remember America Isn't a Giant Homosexual uTopian Society." They must have had to work hard for that one. What this is, in effect, is a hate group against homosexuals.

To put things is perspective, I am a practicing heterosexual and in touch with what I desire sexually. My thoughts on homosexuality are that if it makes a person happy, then let them do it. It hurts no one, except those who are afraid.

In their flyer, they said that they were "sick and tired of the Collegian spouting off that 'alternative' (morally wrong) lifestyles should be accepted as normal, if not superior, to the 'regular' lifestyles." Pardon me, but who in the hell are you to say what is morally right or wrong? You offend me for choosing my morals for me. Are you so afraid that gays will take over, that you must form a group like this?

Other parts of this wonderful flyer mentions that they want to represent the majority of campus. I hope that they do not, not if the majority of this campus is so afraid of a person because of their sexual orientation that they have to decide right and wrong for all of us.

At the end of their flyer, they urge people to "think STRAIGHT thoughts and remember that America is still Number One." America is number one only because we can accept the differences among ourselves, not because we can point them out.

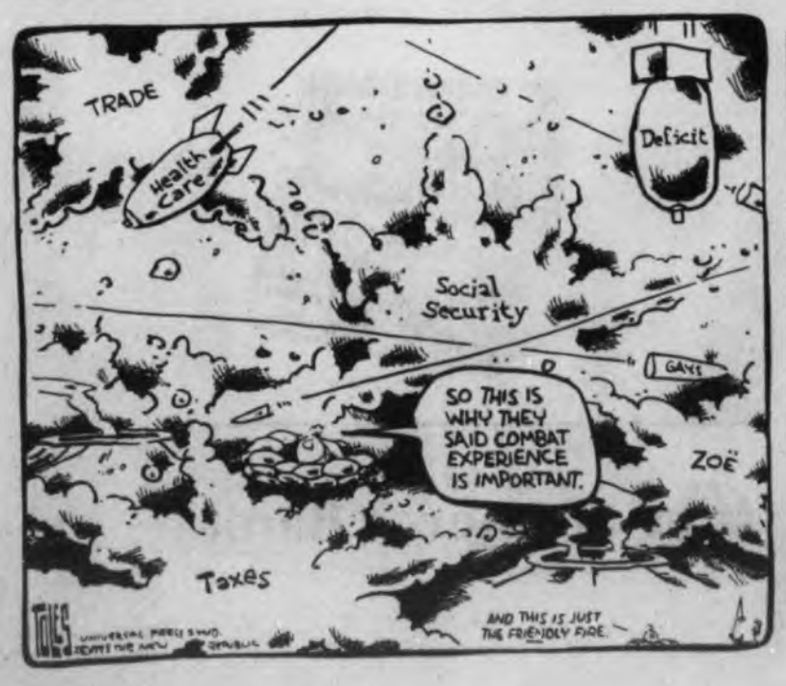
Discrimination is the common thread

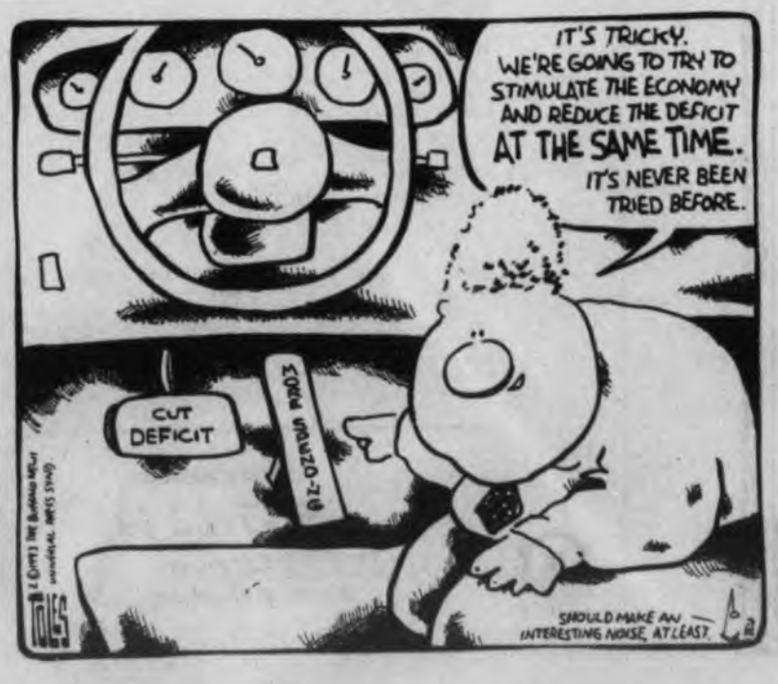
Editor,

On Feb. 9, Captain Allen West wrote of his concern in comparing race with sexuality. He has, however, confused substitution of one for another and drew parallels of experience.

No one can logically say race and sexuality are the same thing, but it is clear both elements of human existence continue to be, sources for separating people for purposes of derision and punishment to support the insecurities of the dominant group.



The writer makes a statement that "being homosexual is definitely a behavior." Using the terms "being" and "behavior" in the same definition points to his lack of logic. If one IS a homosexual, then discrimination on that basis is the same as "being" any other group. Do we then decide to punish those who have not exhibited any unlawful behavior because of whom they may "be"? What is the difference between this case and punishing someone for their race or gender?



A final point of the writer's lack of knowledge shows when he asks where is the evidence of "enslavement" and "lynchings" and struggling to be equal. The writer obviously has not researched history or he would know about such things as Paragraph 175 — that the Nazis used to eliminate anyone even suspected of being homosexual; the homosexual witch hunts of Joseph McCarthy and J. Edgar Hoover and numerous other historical citations that could be referred to.

I in no way negate the disgusting treatment of the African American and other racial groups in our country, but I cannot accept Captain West's argument, which is based on personal conjecture.

Beef critics seek warning labels

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Beef-processing critics filed suit in federal court Wednesday, seeking to make the Agriculture Department put warning labels on all hamburger meat.

The suit was filed by members of the Beyond Beef Coalition in the wake of the outbreak of illnesses among people, most of them children, who ate undercooked hamburger at the Jack-in-the-Box fast-food chain in the Northwest.

It charges that the incidence of E. coli bacteria contamination is more widespread than generally acknowledged, citing estimates by the government's Centers for Disease Control that there are 20,000 cases of severe illnesses every year because of it.

"The hamburger disease is much more widespread in the United States than the secretary of agriculture has acknowledged," Jeremy Rifkin, the coalition's president, said. "If even one more person dies from a new outbreak of this disease, the responsibility will have to lie with the new administration."

The suit seeks injunctions prohibiting inspectors from affixing "U.S. Inspected and Passed" or similar labels on meat and poultry products unless they also contain specific warnings about the possible health effects of E. coli bacteria.

The warning labels the group wants also would describe symptoms of E. coli poisoning and explain the need to cook hamburger at a minimum temperature of 160 degrees Fahrenheit in order to kill the bacteria.

Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy told a Senate committee last week that his department has nearly finished drafting a proposed label on how to cook and handle meat.

Joel Berg, a spokesman for Espy, called the suit ridiculous.

The College of Arts and Sciences is accepting nominations for The Outstanding Teaching Award which will be conferred at the Spring commencement ceremonies. Faculty and students who wish to nominate an outstanding teacher in the College of Arts and Sciences should pick up an application in the Dean's Office, 113 Eisenhower Hall. Nominations will close February 24.

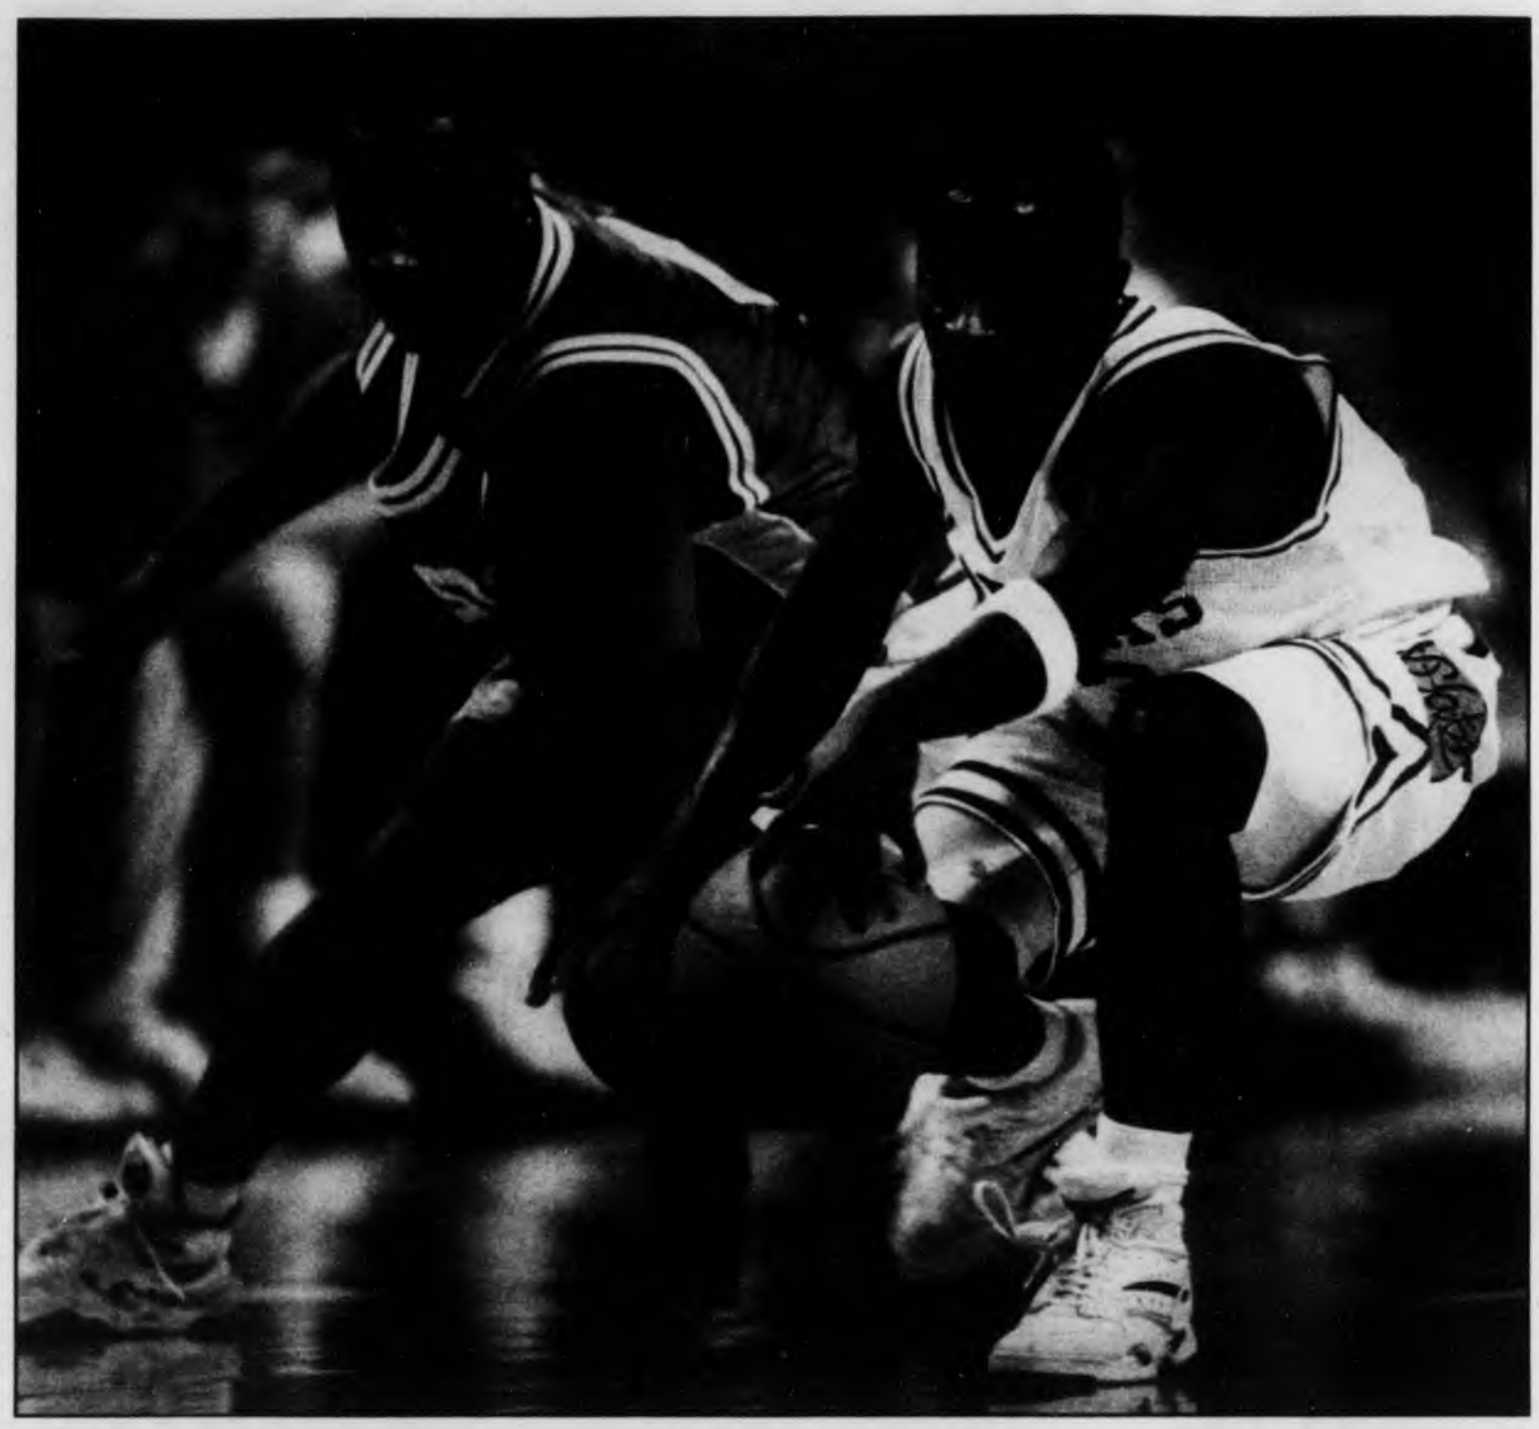
KSU KANSAS STATE UNIVERSITY

Principal-Counselor-Student CONFERENCE

The Office of Admissions cordially invites former students of these high schools to attend the 1993 Principal-Counselor-Student Conference. High school principals and counselors will be on campus to visit with you about your preparation for and experiences in KSU Academic programs. Your participation will help the University build a stronger relationship with your former high school faculty.



You are welcome to drop by between 10:15 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. on Thursday, Feb. 18. This is an excellent opportunity for you to renew old friendships with former classmates. The Provost has asked that your instructors excuse you from these class periods.

Wildcats win another squeaker

"We've got the biggest heart in the Big Eight."

They did it again.

Defying odds — as well as seventh-place preseason picks — the Wildcats pulled out yet another overtime win during this 15-4 Cinderella season.

And once again, junior transfer Anthony Beane provided the spark that finally extinguished the Iowa State Cyclones, who are now 14-7, 4-4 in the Big Eight.

"We've got the biggest heart in the Big Eight," said Beane, who drained a last-second 12-footer to seal the 68-66 win for K-State, 15-4 and 5-2 in the Big Eight.

The win was the fourth overtime victory for the Cats in as many overtime games.

"We just dig deeper than our opponents," forward Vincent Jackson said. "Before the overtime, we just said, 'Here we go again. Let's do it.'"

The Cats did it. And they did it again with late-game heroics that have become synonymous with Wildcat basketball.

The Cyclones were up by as many as seven points with less than three minutes to play when junior Askia Jones turned it up.

Jones took a 3-pointer from the top of the arc that clanked off the rim. It took a Wildcat roll and fell in, bringing K-State to within four at the 2:39 mark.

"That was a shot that was fortunate to go in," Jones said. "But when that went in, I knew we had a chance to come back."

Just 15 seconds later, Jones was fouled by Iowa State's Ron Bayless and made both ends of a one-and-and-one, cutting the lead to two.

After a Cyclone score, Jones hit back-to-back buckets, a driving 10-footer and another trey. That gave K-State a one-point lead with 1:10 remaining. Ten seconds later, Jackson fouled the Cyclones' Justus Thigpen, a 72-percent free-throw shooter.

Thigpen missed, and Julius Michalik fouled the Cats' Deryl Cunningham, who made one of two free throws.

After a pair of Bayless free throws, K-State had a chance to win in regulation. But Beane couldn't penetrate the lane, and his errant pass to Jackson resulted in the miss of an off-balance, long 3-pointer.

"When the game went into overtime, everybody seemed really confident," Cunningham said. "That's like the story of our season."

Senior Aaron Collier, who had just four points at the end of regulation play, scored six points in the extra period. His pair of free throws with 40 seconds left gave K-State a 66-64 advantage.

"That's a senior stepping up and doing what he has to do to help us out," Altman said.

Michalik then hit a five-foot jump shot that tied the game at 66 and set Beane up.

Beane ran the offense until 10 seconds remained on the clock. It was then that he drove toward the basket, looking for a shot against Thigpen.

"I had him figured out," Beane said. "I just spun and gave him a head fake, and he went for it."

Swish.

But all was not well for the Wildcats. As a team, K-State — coming off of the heels of a season-low 31.6 field-goal percentage in Missouri — shot just 39 percent.

"Monday night might have held on a little longer than I thought," Altman said. "Maybe that was in the back of their minds."

The loss dropped the Cyclones' conference road record to 0-4.

"It was a tough loss," Iowa State coach Johnny Orr said. "Both teams played very hard, and it was a tough game to lose."

The Wildcats held the Cyclones to 20 points below their season average. Thigpen, who entered the game with an 18-point average, scored just 13 points against Jackson. That marks his conference low for

Cardiac Cats strike once again

Brian Henson, Wildcat guard, fights the Cyclones' Ron Bayless for a rebound.

BRIAN ANDERSON

It's over when the fat lady sings.

This old phrase doesn't apply to K-State, primarily because she has not been able to warm up her voice.

The Cats won their fourth overtime game this season, nudging Iowa State 68-66.

And Coach Dana Altman said he knew his team could do it again Wednesday night.

"When they came over to the bench, they looked confident," Altman said. "The team showed great character in coming back tonight."

And the Cats said when the game hits overtime, the confidence peaks.

"As soon as we went into overtime, we were back in it," center Deryl Cunningham said. "I could see that everybody wanted to win."

Senior Aaron Collier agreed.

"We're just so confident as a team right now anytime we go into overtime," Collier said.

Again, point guard Anthony Beane hit the game-winning shot, a jumper from the free-throw line with one second left.

"Unlike most players, I feel comfortable in that position," he said.

Beane also hit a game-winning field goal, a 19-footer with nine seconds left at Cal-Santa Barbara.

"We feel very comfortable in overtime," Beane said. "The team has been in this situation many times."

The last time K-State had four overtime games in one season was in the 1956-57, when the Cats were 3-1.

The last time the Cats played three overtime games in a Big Eight conference season was the 1963-64.

One player that came through in the clutch was Collier.

"I picked it up a notch in overtime," said Collier, who scored 6 of his 10 points in the final period. "I wanted to play hard on defense. I was fortunate to get a few points."

The senior hit two baseline jumpers in the overtime, including a 10-footer at 1:05 to break a 62-62 tie.

Collier then drew a charge on Justus Thigpen to send the K-Stater to the free-throw line. He hit both free throws to give the Cats a two-point lead with 39 seconds remaining.

What does the rash of overtime wins say about a team?

"We're fighters," Collier said. "This team is going to fight all the way through. We're going to fight all the way until the buzzer rings — regulation or overtime."

B-Ball fan tradition is dead

Whatever accomplishments the K-State Wildcats earn the rest of the season, they should expect to do it on their own.

That was one of the feelings from last night's wacky finish against Iowa State, a game which saw a sparse and apathetic crowd give its team a boost through an entire three-minute span.

That feeling was capped best by the unlikeliest of sources, Cat coach Dana Altman.

Even though Altman is the youngest coach in the Big Eight, he is the epitome of a gentleman and has been slow to comment on the fans' lack of attendance.

His professionalism makes him the worst quote of all the Big Eight coaches, but when he has something to say, it makes you listen that much more.

Maybe a game that saw Altman do a "Rocky" victory run to the lockerroom, with hands outstretched, made him a little more outspoken than normal, but for the first time, he expressed his disappointment in the fan support of his team.

"I really thought a couple times that the crowd quit on us," he said. "When we were down by seven, I heard catcalls to the players. All of a sudden, people thought we weren't going to win.

"A lot of people quit. But the players never quit."

And that's why a drop in attendance from last week's Oklahoma game is so puzzling. Halfway through the Big Eight tilt, the Cats stand alone in second place, a game out of first. They're ranked 23rd in the nation for the first time since Mitch Richmond played for the Cats.

SCOTT ABEL

If you ever want to see good fan support, slide over to Hearnes Center in Columbia for a game.

When you walked into the arena, banners with little quippy quotes were scattered all over.

"Here comes a Cat-astrophe," and "Drive Dana to distraction." Not original, but at least there was effort.

The Tiger students arrived, and they screamed and hollered at the Wildcat players as they went through their warmups. They were on the K-State players even before they got into their seats.

"Overrated! Overrated!"

In the first half, Brian Henson went to the free-throw line listening to a student-led chant: " Steve is daddy's favorite!"

Brick.

Now that's entertainment.

"Now you're ranked, now you're not," they said, as Missouri finished kicking us around the arena. It was a full house for a team with a lot of big questions coming into this season. But hey, it's Missouri, not K-State.

Even though it was a bad game with two unexciting teams, it was still a great atmosphere for college basketball. Maybe I'm stretching here, but it might even have something to do with K-State not winning there since Rick Springfield was still hot.

Do painted faces only show up for KU? Aren't there any people with more inventiveness than the "Big Dork" chant?

But let's not leave anyone out. K-State's sparse and apathetic crowd hasn't been helped whatsoever by our athletic marketing department.

When fans go to a K-State athletic event, even if it is the sloppiest game of the year, they should be able to say to their spouse, friend or date — "Yeah, it wasn't such a great game, but I still had fun." Maybe they will even buy tickets later.

What's the fun supposed to be in watching 10 minutes of aerobic exercise during halftime? What's the entertainment value in watching little 6-year-old kids dance badly to rap music nobody knows?

Do fans leave these games going, "Yea, it was sloppy, but did you believe that halftime entertainment?" I think not, unless it was, "Do you believe it? I've never seen a halftime that bad."

Even a member of the marketing department who was instrumental in arranging last night's halftime entertainment got up and left her seat.

During the Iowa State football game, which was the first time K-State's been on TV since the VCR was invented, the athletic department gave out free tickets to grade school students on a cold school night.

So that night, it was a tie for what was more embarrassing: students spitting on Iowa State cheerleaders, drunken fans ripping down the goalposts, or all the empty seats. Take your pick.

"Stuff the Stadium" was the campaign for Iowa State. Twist my arm to keep me from going, please. Continuation of this kind of marketing genius we can do without.

In conclusion folks, there are a lot of factors

CAMPUS

Professors, students need coordinate time

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

Finding a professor outside of class can sometimes be frustrating for students. However, instructors have those same frustrations when students don't show up for appointments or aren't responsible enough to make the effort.

"I think that many students are not very aware of the real world," Robin Higham, professor of history, said.

Since 1963, Higham has been an instructor at K-State, specializing in military and naval history.

Currently, he is helping put together a book on how to behave in society.

"I think there's a tendency for students to live in their own world," he said.

Higham said an average class size for him is 40 students. Among the students he has known, military students stand out as the most responsible, he said.

"Many students who don't have this problem have been in the military," Higham said.

He said students often make appointments with him and then do not show up. He said he would be more than happy to return students' calls, but most do not leave names or numbers where an instructor can get back in touch with them.

"The image of the professor is one that he sits in his office and teaches classes," Higham said. "That's generally not true because professors do research and are involved in other things. When they (students) want an answer, they expect a faculty member to be there."

Higham said he lists his office hours and his work and home phone numbers on the course reading list. He said he generally likes to see people after class or by appointment but will take calls at home until 9 p.m.

"Students in my classes have no excuse for not finding me," Higham said. "I timed it one time. I spent 1,035 hours in my office, and only 30 students came in that year."

Yolanda Young, junior in finance, said certain professors are not as available as they think they are.

"One of my professors is only in her office one hour a week, and that's during another one of my classes," she said.

Young said she is unable to speak with this professor at the end of class because she has another class immediately afterward.

"I did call her at home once, and the next day in class she spoke about it," Young said. "She made it quite clear she did not want to be contacted at home."

Young said she works 22 to 26 hours a week while carrying 16 hours of classwork. She said she finances 100 percent of her college expenses.

"Certain professors have a predetermined attitude that a lot of students don't work, that they're irresponsible," Young said.

She said she did not know what to do about her instructor in this situation.

"They get mad at you because you make no effort," Young said. "Then you make the effort, and they aren't available."

Bill Feyerharm, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, said if students have problems, they should first try to take care of the situation with the instructor before going to the dean of their college.

"Approximately a year ago, the provost asked each college to designate someone to hear student complaints," he said.

Feyerharm said he was amazed at the small number of complaints received in the College of Arts and Sciences, but this doesn't mean the complaints aren't out there.

Jonathan Holden, distinguished professor in English, said he has been at K-State since 1977. He said he has never really had a problem with students being irresponsible or forgetting appointments.

"They almost always call, which I appreciate," he said. "All the ones I've dealt with are pretty responsible."

Basketball team deserves better

why K-State has lost the home-court advantage.

Over the last couple years, it was easy not to go. The team didn't look like it was giving its best effort, and it was simple to say that the team wasn't worthy of K-State's tradition. It was easy to explain a half-empty stadium for a Big Eight contest.

But this year, it looks like the fans and the people who are supposed to market the Cats aren't worthy of the team. Maybe K-State fan tradition died with Ahearn. Remember that when you see the 3,000 Nebraska fans in Bramlage Saturday.

As Vincent Jackson said after yet another comeback, "The game isn't over for us until the clock runs down and the horn blows."

VJ, I wish K-Staters could say the same.

K-Rock, K-MAN receive awards

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

KMAN-AM 1350/KMKF-FM 101.5 radio station has three new gold medallions in its reception area.

The medallions, better known as Addys, were presented on Jan. 30 by the Topeka Advertising Federation.

KMAN/K-Rock was the only station in northeast Kansas to receive the Addy Award for Excellence in Radio Advertising.

The Addy is the highest honor an ad can receive. Citations of Excellence are awarded to ads that are good, but not worthy of an Addy, Dennis Ebaugh, continuity director for KMAN/K-Rock, said.

"This year there were numerous categories where they did not have an Addy. The judges were tough this year," Ebaugh said.

This competition was the first in a three-tiered system sponsored by the National Advertising Federation. The next level is District 9, which includes Kansas, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska. That competition will be for radio, television and print advertisements.

Three KMAN/K-Rock ads received Addys. G. Thomas Jewelers' ad, "Space Oddity," was honored in the 60-second category. The ad was produced by Steve Anthony, music director and announcer, and Roger Burns, former continuity director. Anthony played an evil space monster and Burns played a good guy as they battled over the diamond industry.

Unique and funny characters made "Space Oddity" a winner, Anthony said.

"We took the characters way off the paper and had a lot of fun with it," he said.

"Being able to visualize it and not just hear it is what makes a winning commercial."

Anthony was not too surprised when the "Oddity" commercial received an Addy.

"When we cut the commercial we knew it would do something great," he said.

On the Wild Side's ad, "Wayne and Stevie," was honored in the 30-second category. Produced by Scott Hoch, account executive, and Mitch Rodriguez and Raubin Pierce, both announcers, it was a spin-off of Nickelodeon's cartoon "Ren and Stimpy."

KMAN/K-Rock's ad, "Leon," was honored in the station promotion category. Produced by Jason Wright, program director, and Al Linton, general sales manager, it was a seasonal greeting that spelled Noel backwards. The talent behind the mike was Mark Driscoll, whose voice can be heard across the nation on station promotions.

The "Leon" ad also won Best-of-Show Radio.

This is the award the Federation gives to the best spot produced in radio in all categories. The simpleness and humor of the ad was what made it so good. "Leon" will automatically go on to compete at District 9, Ebaugh said.

Taco Tico's ad, "Hey Taco," received a citation of excellence in the 30-second-commercial-with-a-budget-under-$100 category.

Creativity was looked for in the ads. For radio ads this included things like writing, production, enrichment and funny voices.

"The combination of excellent writing on Burns' part and the tenacity of the people who produce the commercials, which were basically the DJs, was what made the ads so good," Ebaugh said.

Last year the station received one Addy and one Citation of Excellence.

her opponents' poems. Her various works included "3 Parts Salt Peter, 1 Part Sugar," a depiction of pyromaniac headbangers and "Lady Poet or A Letter I Never Sent to Sonia Sanchez," which degraded stereotypical female poets.

"Sometimes I Just Want to Stab You in the Heart," a poem of psychotic, angry love, brought howls of enthusiasm from the audience, and "Postcards from OZ," Edmund's coup de grace, thoroughly belittled Kansas.

"Sometimes you just want to write a silly poem," said Edmunds, who won the Slam.

She said she will most likely compete in the next Grand Slam, which will be April 25 at the Flamingo.

"We want to get people from Manhattan to go to the Slams, to enjoy some poetry, and to show those Birkenstock-wearing, tofu-eating, bead-bearing folks from Lawrence that we're not all ropers," Edmunds said.

about education in Kansas.

"I felt it was important for me to advertise the type of quality education that is available in Kansas," she said.

Being named to USA Today's All-American Academic Team is not Riemann's only outstanding achievement.

She spent the summer of 1992 working at Los Alamos National Laboratory in New Mexico on a global climate-change modeling team. During the summer of 1991, she worked as an intern for Exxon.

Next year, Riemann will go to Manchester, England, on a Marshall scholarship to study chemical and environmental technology at the University of Manchester Institute of Science and Technology.

"I hope to get more knowledge of chemical and environmental engineering so I can work on waste minimization problems," Riemann said.

U.S. troops could be sent to Balkans

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — U.S. troops could be sent to enforce peace in the former Yugoslavia if warring factions can negotiate a settlement, the Clinton administration said Wednesday.

"Our conscience revolts at unending accounts of murder and rape," Secretary of State Warren M. Christopher said, unveiling a six-point peace plan after three weeks of study by the new administration.

"No great power can dismiss the likely consequences of letting a Balkans conflict rage," he said.

The deepening war, its threat to neighboring nations, and the long-seated religious and cultural hatred now aflame in the area pose a critical test for the new president, who will also have to marshal world opinion behind his position.

"We inherit, at this early point in our administration, a tragic and dangerous situation," Christopher said.

He denounced Serbian ethnic cleansing aimed at Muslims in Bosnia-Herzegovina and called the crisis an important moment for our post-Cold-War role in Europe and the world.

President Clinton said earlier in the day that the American public will support the plan.

"I think they want us to do more, but they want us to do it in a prudent way."

The secretary of state announced the possibility of using American troops as part of an international force to enforce peace terms if they can be reached.

"We are prepared to use our military power to enforce the agreement," Christopher said at a news conference.

At this stage, he said, "it is premature to try to analyze exactly what kind of military power is necessary."

Other senior U.S. officials, speaking on condition of anonymity, said there was no decision yet on whether ground troops would act as peacekeepers.

But Sen. Richard Lugar, R-Ind., a senior member of the Foreign Relations Committee, said Christopher called him and said as many as 5,000 to 10,000 American troops could join a 40,000-member NATO force that might go to Bosnia under U.N. auspices once a new peace accord is concluded.

Other key provisions of the administration plan include the appointment of Reginald Bartholomew, the U.S. ambassador to NATO, to assist international mediators in forging an agreement and a pledge to tighten the U.N. trade embargo against Serbia and Montenegro.

Christopher, at a news conference, denounced the Serbs, accusing them of a wide range of atrocities in Bosnia-Herzegovina, but he said President Clinton had ruled out providing the Muslims with U.S. weapons or using U.S. air power to silence Serbian mortar fire.

the season.

And K-State hit seven of its eight free throws in the final three minutes and in overtime. And Iowa State — who came into the game leading the Big Eight with free-throw percentage of 76 — made just two of its four overtime freebies.

The victory, which put the Cats a full game ahead of Missouri, prompted Altman into uncharacteristic jubilation. Altman thrust his arms skyward and ran into the locker room.

"Just the fact that we didn't give up, we were down 7, and it did not look good," Altman said. "And then to win it the way we did — I lost control."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?
by Cassandra Duveaux

Decisions, decisions ... Who says you have to decide?

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a big problem that I desperately need your help with. I have been dating a guy from my hometown for the past two years, and I really felt as though I loved him and there could never be another.

Recently, I met someone from my dorm. We have many similar interests, and he is everything I could ever ask for in a guy. I think I am falling in love with him as well. I haven't told either guy about the other one, and I can't seem to make up my mind between the two. Both of them care a lot for me. So, I can't even bear the thought of hurting either one. I've tried talking to friends and weighing out the pros and cons myself, but nothing has seemed to help me make a decision. What should I do?

Indecisive in Love

DEAR INDECISIVE,

A classic song from the 1970s is coming to me ...

"Torn between two lovers/feeling like a fool/loving you both is breaking all the rules ... ."

First of all, men are all the same. So it probably doesn't matter which one you choose.

But, if you feel you must ...

You have several options. First, you can date them both. There's nothing that says you have to date only one person at a time.

If that solution won't work, and you only want to be with one man, then you should make a quick, firm decision. If you pick one, you will likely hurt the other (but not necessarily). That's how love and dating works. It's not pleasant, but it's reality.

As I've said before, don't play games with people's hearts. Don't pit these two men against each other or play favorites. Be grown up about this and be strong of character. Live with your decision.

Search your heart. You probably already know the answer to your question but are avoiding a decision to avoid the pain.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a problem, and maybe you can help. Just about every night I am awakened about 3 or 4 a.m. I am not sure how to say this because it is a very embarrassing subject. You see, my roommate must think that I am a very deep sleeper because around that time he masturbates. He is quite loud. He rattles the bed and keeps me up.

My roommate is a nice guy. I don't know how to tell him to stop. What should I do?

Needing Sleep

DEAR NEEDING,

This sounds like a very gripping situation. Let me try to give you a hand. Such a problem could be the source of friction between roommates.

If you don't want to say anything to him about his nocturnal pastimes, then you might try any of the following options.

Put foam cushions under the legs of his bed. Try greasing his box springs — preferably with a water-based lubricant. You might try turning on music — go with something like Metallica, not Sade.

As a last resort, the next time he wakes you up just jump out of bed, turn on the lights and throw back his covers. Yell, "Hey, nice unit!" Then throw a bucket of cold water on him. Each night thereafter, put a big bucket of ice water near your bed. He'll see this and stop waking you up.

Here's the rub. Seriously, if it really is waking you up, get up loudly, and go down the hall to get a drink of water. He'll get the idea after a few nights.

Incidentally, I've also noticed that a good number of letters sent to me are apparently written on a typewriter or printer similar to yours — with the signature in the bottom, right-hand corner. If you are the person flooding my mailbox with stupid letters, I would urge you to take a lesson from your roommate and develop a more worthwhile hobby.

McDonald's in India would be beefless

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW DELHI, India — McDonald's has been invited to India — but told not to bring its Big Mac.

To sell beef in the land of the sacred cow requires a special license that is granted only to luxury-class hotels catering to foreign tourists.

Beef is taboo to Hindus, who are 82 percent of India's 875 million people. Muslims, who are 12 percent and the country's largest minority, don't eat pork.

So if McDonald's goes ahead with its planned $20 million investment deal, it probably will do what the British-based Wimpy's does.

"Chickenburgers are our hottest item," said the duty manager of the 1 1/2-year-old restaurant on Connaught Place, heart of New Delhi's tourist district.

Wimpy's advertises its hamburgers as 100 percent lamb. The lentilburger is popular with the vegetarian crowd.

"Most of the flavor is in the ketchup and the sauce anyway," said David Ginsberg, 33, from Huntington, N.Y., an American who has eaten in enough fast food joints to know, during a 2 1/2-year bicycle trek around the globe. "So what if there's no beef?"

"These lentilburgers would really sell in the States," said Ginsberg's biking buddy, Donald Mead, 29, of Atlanta, who doesn't eat meat. "This could be the greening of McDonald's."

On Tuesday, the government approved a seven-year investment plan by the multinational, based in Oak Brook, Ill, which would be a joint venture.

Motorcyclists urge lawmakers not to support helmet law

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Motorcyclists urged the House and Senate transportation committees Wednesday to send a message to Congress by rejecting a mandatory helmet bill.

A congressional mandate requires that states institute a mandatory helmet law by Sept. 30, 1993, or be forced to transfer highway-construction funds to a highway-safety fund.

Motorcycle enthusiasts packed the separate committee meetings to tell senators and representatives they oppose bills in the House and Senate requiring cyclists to wear protective helmets.

David Mann, president of ABATE of Kansas, a biker's education organization, said the state is being blackmailed with its own money and should not support the bills.

"I would request you to introduce a resolution letting the federal government know that the state of Kansas doesn't need them inflicting themselves on our state sovereignty," Mann said.

The bikers also argued that education improves motorcycle safety more than wearing helmets, and that helmets can lead to more severe injuries.

Donald Hoffman, a Topeka attorney, spoke in opposition to the bills.

He said that Kansans participate in many dangerous activities such as water-skiing, football, baseball and rodeos.

"Motorcyclists do not represent a disproportionately higher number of these victims than other lawful activities, which are not subject to government intrusion," Hoffman said to the House Committee.

Rep. Gary Haulmark, R-Lenexa, seemed to agree when he said there were plenty of activities that cost the state money, such as smoking and obesity.

He asked one witness who testified in support of the bill whether she would support laws to outlaw behaviors such as those.

But supporters of the bill said helmets save lives.

Rosalie Thornburgh, administrator for the office of traffic safety in the Department of Transportation, cited statistics from the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration indicating helmets prevent fatalities.

The NHTSA estimates that motorcycle helmets reduce the likelihood of a fatality by 29 percent.

In Kansas, the fatality rate of drivers wearing helmets is 2.84 per 100, and 3.47 per 100 is the rate among riders without helmets, Thornburgh said.

But House committee members were skeptical of the statistics.

Rep. Richard Reinhardt, D-Erie, said he would like to see a five-year study on motorcycle head injuries before conclusions were drawn.

Cyclists said the benefits of helmets are exaggerated.

Linda Mitchell, a housewife and motorcycle rider from Topeka, said helmets can actually cause injuries due to driver fatigue from the weight and heat of the helmet. They also can create visibility and hearing difficulties for drivers, she said.

patients are walk-ins.

"We are trying to emphasize making appointments to manage the patient flow," Zweimiller said.

A possible cause of problems could be a backlog of patients, which make the doctors feel rushed, he said.

Zweimiller said the doctors should explain the reasons for exams and tests.

"We are obligated to do everything we can once you have presented yourself to us," Zweimiller said. "It is the responsibility of the patient to ask 'why is this being done to me,' and also it is the doctor's responsibility to answer."

"I'm highly confident in all the staff at Lafene," he said.

Increases in housing fees upset students

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

The increase in residence hall fees has forced residents to re-evaluate their living conditions by weighing increasing costs against the dorm's security, maintenance and food services.

"I don't understand the increase in payments. They say they can't keep residents, but raising rates won't help — it'll only get people to leave and make things worse," said Julie Black, sophomore in park resources management and Boyd Hall resident. "I've lived here four semesters — I should at least get some sort of a discount."

Some residents have combated the higher residence hall fee with a previously-signed contract to freeze their rates for next semester.

"I signed a non-binding guarantee with housing my first year here," said Paul Kippes, junior in computer engineering and third year Putnam Hall resident. "My housing will still increase, but only an equal percentage of the fees that other residents pay. I'll pay about $360 a month."

Without the prior housing agreement, most residents will make payments of $395 per month.

"Most people are leaving, but I'm not sure if I'll leave next year," said Eric Rogers, freshman in chemical engineering and Goodnow Hall resident. "I don't think it's cheaper to stay — I just think it's easier."

Many residents enjoy the extra services offered, said Khristi Willingham, sophomore in pre-professional elementary education and Ford Hall resident.

"You don't have to cook or do dishes. It's easy to talk to someone across the hall, and it's pretty secure," she said.

This easier lifestyle is what the residence staff at Goodnow has tried to convey to its residents.

Flushing out students' thoughts of leaving, the staff members have created persuasion sheets highlighting the security, involvement and services connected with the halls.

"People don't think of the convenience, safety and resources that the dorms offer," said Dan Merson, junior in electrical engineering and staff member at Goodnow. "They only look at the money aspect of the situation and they say, 'This is ridiculous.'"

However, not all residents find the increase unbelievable.

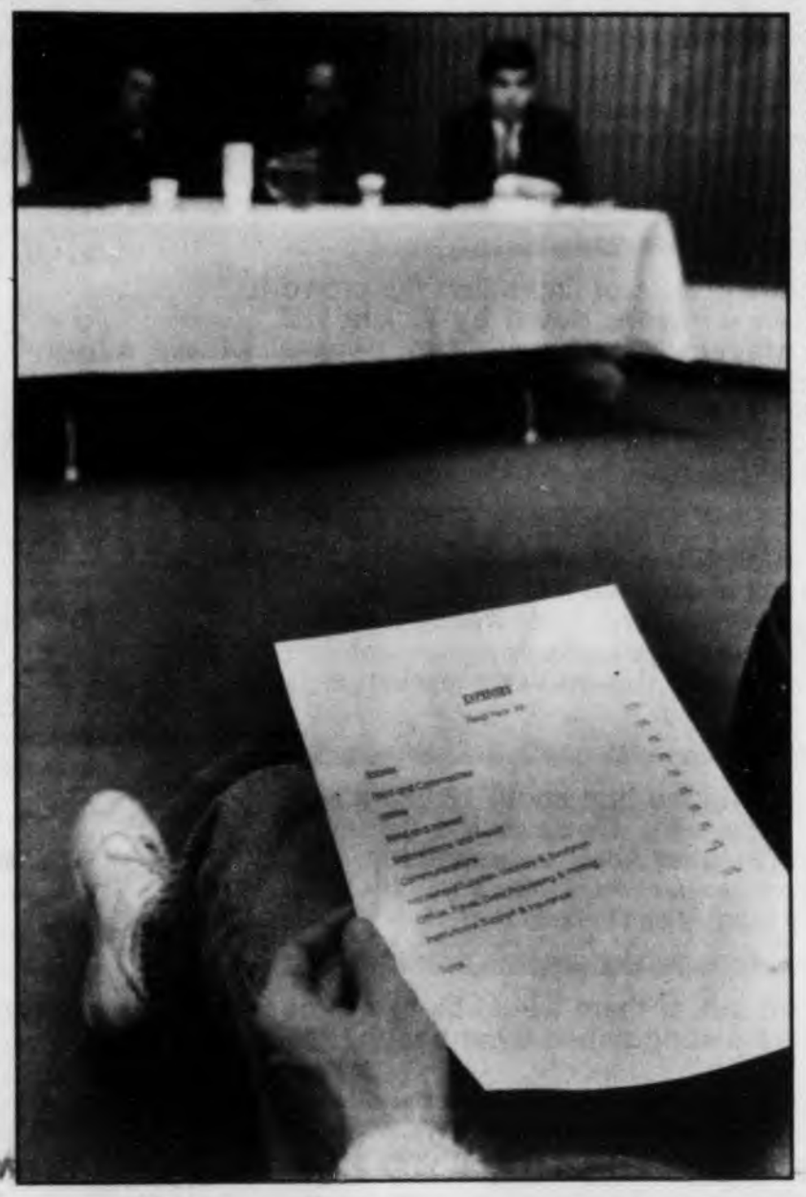
"I had a sister who lived in the dorms and moved out, and when she lived out she paid a lot more," said Russ Schertz, sophomore in chemical engineering and Moore Hall resident. "Even with the new increase, I think it's still more."

A cost comparison sheet displayed at Goodnow compares payments on a 12-month apartment lease to a 9-month residence hall contract. With estimates given by the Chamber of Commerce, KPL Gas Service, Southwestern Bell, and Housing and Dining Services, the totals show a dorm savings of $269.

Reasons explained in forum

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

Five Housing and Dining Services representatives answered questions and concerns on the increase in residence hall fees, laundry fees and dining facilities on the fourth floor of Marlatt Hall last night.



"We set this together because there were a lot of rumors that we needed to put to rest," Mark Jones, junior in agricultural journalism, said. "They'd heard of the increases in laundry and the carpeting of the food center. So, I called up Chuck to see if he'd come over to give us the inside story on why they were doing it."

Chuck Werring, director of Housing and Dining Services, started the discussion with an overview of the office's financial status.

"We are an auxiliary enterprise. We receive no funding from the federal government, the state, city or county," Werring said. "We are like a shop in the mall.

"KSU development is one small shop, and it relies on the customers coming in and must have enough money to make expenditures," he said. "We pay to have our shop in the mall. We've been faced with challenges, and now we must come up with the revenue."

Internal allocations passed

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

Student Senate focused most of its attention on housekeeping duties Thursday night when five internal bills went up for first readings. Two of the bills were allocations which were passed on special orders.

One such bill was the allocation of $85.25 to SGA for refreshments at KSU Lobby Day in Topeka on Feb. 17. The refreshments consist of summer sausage and cheese, purchased from the K-State Dairy. The money will be taken from the Associated Students of Kansas Line Item Account.

A second bill was passed for special allocation to the SGA Legislative Affairs Committee in the amount of $19 for rope used to hang banners advertising legislative forums last semester.

A bill that was passed in special orders in last week's meeting but was reconsidered this week was a bill to allocate $109.06 to the Women's Soccer Club for 5 jerseys. The bill was reconsidered because clothing cannot be paid for out of the Reserves for Contingencies account because it is a state account.

After debate, the bill was passed for the allocation to be taken out of the foundation account.

Also approved was a resolution stating Gov. Joan Finney's budget recommendations. This resolution was also brought up in last week's Senate meeting. The intent of it is to show support for the 1993 SGA legislative priorities on state budgeting on behalf of the student body at K-State.

The resolution allows for a salary increase for student, classified and unclassified employees and a 4-percent increase in other operating expenditures and also establishes a $39,700 increase in the Youth Education Service Program and the Kansas Supplemental Grant Program. This is a statewide program that has a budget of $2.8 million.

This resolution is the same proposal Finney proposed to the Kansas Legislature.

In other business, Mary Farmer, arts and sciences senator, was approved as the 1993 Student Governing Association's Elections Committee Chair at Thursday's Student Senate meeting.

Another internal matter was a change made in the way the agenda for Senate meetings will be handled. In order for a piece of legislation to be considered for the agenda of that week, the legislation must be turned in to SGA by noon on Tuesdays.

AIDS tests stay confidential

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

AIDS test results at Lafene Health Center, although confidential, are not anonymous, which produces an ongoing battle between Lafene and K-State students.

"We have a sense of responsibility to our patients, and the anonymous testing in our type of facility is simply not appropriate," Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said. "We are responsible for care beyond that one visit."

While anonymity means AIDS tests in which no personal identification is used, confidentiality involves recording the information in the person's medical records.

"You can tell us exactly what you want released," Zweimiller said. "The only people who can get your records are you and a court of law, and they need a court order for that."

Challenging that idea, the Communicable Disease Board continually meets with the 10 members of Lafene's medical board to discuss society-oriented concerns.

"We took a pro-anonymous stand because of the discrimination of AIDS," said Stacy Dalton, sophomore in grain science and marketing and member of the board. "Lafene's attitude that society is accepting, and that there's no discrimination, is unrealistic."

Zweimiller said he believes anonymous testing is what is keeping the lid on societal acceptance.

"There's a stigma that's been breaking down in our society, which is what AIDS activists want to happen," Zweimiller said. "AIDS is being taken out of the closet. Although, by staying with the anonymity, we are in a sense preserving that stigma."

Another issue of concern for students is the confidentiality of Lafene's student workers.

"Not to hire students is totally irresponsible. I just can't fathom that," Zweimiller said. "They sign an agreement of confidentiality, and if they violate that, they're terminated."

Cori Kolder, freshman in arts and sciences, is a first year chart-runner for Lafene.

"We have a manila folder, and you put the chart in that, so all you can see is the name. We're told to keep it in there," Kolder said. "Everything's kept confidential, and I'm not to talk about it outside of work."

The AIDS test itself can consist of a series of three tests. Testing begins with a blood screen, and if results are positive, a second screen is conducted. Positive results on the second test lead to a third, in order to confirm HIV-positive results.

"The tests are 99.5 percent accurate for sensitivity and

COMMENTS

"It makes me sick to my stomach. It's another source of guilt for not living up as a boyfriend."
— Giles Kyle, senior in civil engineering, on Valentine's Day.

"You can do almost anything in print or in broadcasting if you level with the reader and you level with the viewer. Don't ever try to pull the wool over anybody's eyes. That's a ticket to oblivion."
— Steve Powers, co-author of "How to Watch TV News," on the NBC broadcast of a rigged demonstration of a crash of a GM truck on "Dateline NBC."

"Girls who plan ahead and have professionals decorate the cake are probably the most happily married because they don't have the burden."
— Janice Hill, owner and head decorator at Vern's Donuts & Cakes, on how brides-to-be should make appointments when choosing their wedding cakes.

"There's something about this team. There's something very special about this team. We never quit no matter what the situation."
— Anthony Beane, forward guard for K-State's basketball team, on their close win over Iowa State University, 68-66.

"I really thought a couple of times that the crowd quit on us. When we were down by 7, I heard catcalls to the players. All of a sudden, people thought we weren't going to win. A lot of people quit. But the players never quit."
— Dana Altman, head coach for K-State's basketball team, on the fans' response to the close win over Iowa State University.

"There is no such thing as skin bleaching. I've never seen it. I don't know what it is."
— Singer Michael Jackson, after Oprah Winfrey asked him about his fading skin tone during a special interview with him. He said he had a skin disorder that attacks the pigments in his skin.

"They started calling me that about 12 years ago. I'm not really sure why. I guess it's because everybody thinks I'm 'Dear Abby' or something,"
— William T. Love, owner of Dr. Love's Jazz Club and Gourmet Seafood, on being called Dr. Love.

"Beating the hell out of them would be like three points. We haven't distinguished what beating the hell out of them means,"
— Billy Tubbs, head coach for Oklahoma's basketball team, clarifying his bold prediction made after the team's 62-61 loss to the Wildcats in Bramlage Coliseum.

BEING ASSERTIVE

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

Cindy Burke, Lafene health educator, plants a kick into a mat held by Lisa Emigh, junior in psychology, during a self-defense workshop Thursday night in the K-State Union. The workshop took place in conjunction with Campus Safety Week.

Students teach women self-defense, assertiveness as part of safety week

CAMPUS SAFETY WEEK

Self-defense instruction course taught by Rhonda Bathurst and Lisa Emigh

Four steps Bathurst and Emigh stress for woman to follow:

Step 1. Hold offenders accountable for their actions. An example is to say: "You are bothering me."

Step 2. Label the offensive behavior by telling the person bothering you exactly what he or she is doing.

Step 3. Demand the behavior to stop. There is no need to be polite in a confrontational situation.

Step 4. Extend the protest on behalf of all women. An example is to say: "Don't treat me or any other woman in that way again."

Stop! No! Leave! Fire!

A group of women were making a lot of noise in Union 212 Thursday night.

The voice is a powerful weapon, Rhonda Bathurst and Lisa Emigh said.

Bathurst, senior in art, and Emigh, junior in psychology, said the voice can be used to surprise a potential attacker. Yelling also can be empowering to someone who may be in a dangerous or intimidating situation.

The two taught a self-defense instruction course to a group of 16 women as part of Campus Safety Week.

In addition to self-defense moves, assertiveness training was taught as a part of the course.

Bathurst said part of assertive training is saying what you want through honest communication and letting men know when their actions are offensive.

Women need to speak up when they do not appreciate something or when certain actions make them feel uncomfortable, Emigh said. She said this is why it is important to speak out and let men know.

They emphasized confronting situations, both big and small, that are intimidating. Often, women are taught to be tolerant even if they are being hurt, Bathurst said.

"The more we can take charge of the little things that happen everyday, the better we can handle the larger, more threatening situations," she said. "Self-defense is having a sense of your own self-value and your own self-worth."

Handling little situations also keeps pent-up anger from erupting in an inappropriate place, she said.

Shari Sacks, sophomore in elementary education, said she will no longer say "please" or "excuse me" when she is in a confrontational situation. She will be direct in saying what she wants.

Deaun Blount, junior in pre-med, said there probably are

Futuristic electronic newspaper to unfold on mainframe

"This will cost us about $300 a month. Compared to a lot of stuff it isn't high."

KEN CONROW
ASSOCIATED DIRECTOR OF COMPUTING SERVICES

System to carry 5 newspapers, weather, campus information

RON LACKEY
Collegian

Computing and Network Services will sponsor the trial run of a university-wide electronic newspaper on Monday.

The University Central Online Resource Network, or UNICORN, will consist of national and international newspapers, local weather and university information.

Anybody can use the lab, and there is no fee.

"A student can go into any lab, and even if you have never logged in on the mainframe you can log onto UNICORN without a user ID," Neil Erdwien, associate specialist with Computing and Network Services, said.

"There will be three places on campus that a user can tap into the UNICORN system. Cardwell, Seaton and Fairchild are the only buildings on campus that have terminal labs," Erdwien said.

UNICORN's on-campus topics will include calendars and events, academic information, services and facilities, weather information, news and announcements, policies and procedures, employment information and miscellaneous items.

"We can count how many times these topics are brought up and so far people have been using weather a lot," Erdwien said.

On a larger scale, UNICORN will carry five newspapers. The newspapers are offered by a company called American Cybercasting Corporation from Aurora, Ohio. The American Cybercasting Corporation described its system as, "information on world news events, simultaneously and inexpensively."

"The Los Angeles Times, USA Today, The Moscow News, The Washington Post, and The Washington Times will all be available," Erdwien said.

Although the papers will be free to the user, it will not be free to Computing and Network Services.

"This will cost us about $300 a month. Compared to a lot of stuff, it isn't high," Ken Conrow, associate director of Computing Services, said.

Erdwien said that in the future UNICORN would like to tap into the Collegian's Associated Press newswire.

"All we're doing is a different method of distribution. The Collegian will be skeptical, but I don't think it would hurt their revenue."

Matt FitzGerald, campus ad executive for the Collegian and senior in social work, said he didn't think it would hurt the Collegian.

"People aren't going to stop reading the Collegian. Who wants to walk over to another building and sit down at a computer? The newspaper is a lot more convenient. I think the old fashioned newspaper will be around for longer than we think," FitzGerald said.

Recycling problem can be solved

THE ISSUE

A reduced budget and cost of the process have made it more difficult to recycle.

WE SUGGEST

Funding for state agency recycling should be reviewed, and individuals must continue to be environmentally responsible.

This Collegian is printed on recycled paper.

It is also recyclable. That is, if you can find a bin to recycle it in.

The campus-based recycling program has been seriously downsized since its inception in early 1989. State budget cuts in 1991 forced Division of Facilities to eliminate the program. Concern from the administration brought the program back — with a reduced budget.

Unfortunately, fewer collection sites exist now, and fewer materials are accepted. Ackert, Anderson, Bluemont, Cardwell, Nichols, Seaton, Umberger and Willard halls are the campus buildings that still have collection areas. Items have to be taken to Howie's Recycling daily because there is no place to store the materials on campus.

Yes, recycling programs are expensive. The supply of raw recyclable materials has finally grown large enough that recycling centers are now refusing to accept certain materials unless they can make a profit on them.

The good side of this is that it shows more people are making an effort to recycle. The flip side is there are less places accepting those materials.

There needs to be action taken by the state to encourage recycling. Established collection sites, curbside collection and increased funding for state agency recycling would help reduce the amounts of materials reaching our landfills each day.

Individuals can continue to help by recycling everything possible and continuing to use products made from post-consumer materials.

And remembering to recycle this paper.

Darwin's birthday deserves recognition

Editor,

Feb. 12 is the birthday of Charles Darwin. Most biologists look upon Darwin as the most important person in our profession. In 1859, without the benefit of genetic knowledge and without modern technology, he and Alfred Russel Wallace gave us the legitimate reasons for the evolutionary change in organisms that accounts for all biological diversity.

Ernst Mayr has written, "The truth is sometimes unpleasant and often unpopular. It takes courage and moral integrity to become the prophet of a new truth, and such a prophet is bound to be disparaged and maligned." This was indeed the fate of Darwin when he announced his theory of evolution by natural selection.

The harmony of the living universe, Darwin said, is not the wisely planned work of a creator but the product of an interaction of natural forces. Even man, he claimed, is part of this evolved organic world.

Now, almost 150 years later, his basic thesis is universally accepted by biologists. "Descent by modification" owing to "natural selection" has become the greatest, most universal, principle in biology.

Let each of us take a few moments today to honor this man for providing us with truth and legitimacy.

Do as columnist says, not as she does

Editor,

Kelly Klawonn's article on Feb. 10 enlightened me about a few things.

First of all, it's good to know Ms. Klawonn wants to slam into inconsiderate/ignorant little imports that get in her way.

Second, it's interesting that she thinks a "frightening scenario" would be hostile or violent treatment towards a person wearing a pink triangle. How odd that she would consider purposely crashing into a little import before realizing the driver is a fellow homosexual.

I've never had problems with homosexuals feeling indignant about discrimination until I read this article. Ms. Klawonn needs to realize equality and fair treatment should apply to all kinds — homosexual, heterosexual, bisexual and whatever else. Good thing I wasn't driving the little sports car that day.

Kenda Anderson
Senior/Advertising

Klawonn's topic gets real tiring real fast

Editor,

This letter is directed toward all of the articles Kelly Klawonn writes about her sexuality and gays in general. Without trying to be rude or offensive, I would simply like to ask Kelly, "Hey, could you please give me a break?"

Why do I ask you to bestow such a favor? Am I a homophobe? Do I think it is morally wrong to be homosexual? Well, I am not homophobic, and I am completely indifferent as to the moral correctness of your life style. The truth is, I'm just tired of hearing about you, you, you and the entire saga of the gay community's tribulation. If it were only a couple of articles, it would be appropriate. However, it seems that every time I pick up a Collegian, you are trumpeting the bastions of gay legions to stand up and let the heterosexual community know how oppressive it has become.

It seems that you have a sort of chip on your shoulder. Because of this, you wear your sexuality on your sleeve, and consequently, your thoughts come across so crass that you have become nearly as stand-offish as those who discriminate against gays.

You once wrote that you had learned our history (male heterosexual), and now it is our turn to learn yours. How are we ever going to create a tolerant, inclusive society when people continue to think along exclusive borders? History belongs to everyone, regardless of sex, preference, race, religion or creed. Although the history books are becoming more of a societal kaleidoscope, they have been far less than inclusive in the past. Why do you choose to present your sex and sexuality in a forum and manner that alienate many readers?

Recently, you wrote an article about gays wearing pink triangles to signify their homosexuality. Why? Why do I need to know that you are gay? Do you need to know that I am not? Be proud of who you are without having to separate you from myself.

John Winkler
Sophomore/History

▶ BRAD SEABOURN

Column on gays was written effortlessly

Editor,

First, I must do something I thought I would never do. I must commend John Hawks on the piece he wrote on homosexuals and military service. I disagreed on a few minor points, but I thought it was a very responsible article.

Having said that, I would like to turn to the purpose of this letter. I would like to comment on the dribble written by your guest commentator, Brad Seabourn. One of Brad's points is that our allies allow homosexuals to serve in their militaries. He leads the reader to believe homosexuals can serve at levels and capacities in these countries, and they don't have any significant problems. This is simply not true. In German military units homosexuals cannot be officers and cannot have security clearances. This means the jobs they perform are usually menial. Being denied a security clearance means their chances of promotion are almost non-existent. The Netherlands is considering banning homosexuals from their military because the morale on their naval vessels is low. They attribute their morale problem to the fact that heterosexuals are forced to live in cramped quarters with homosexuals for long periods of time.

The worst part of this article was the dribble about some yahoo Brad created, and this was the bulk of his article. I think it was intended to be a satire. However, it was the most pathetic attempt at satire I have ever seen. Brad, I hope you did not spend a lot of time and effort on this article because it sure as hell does not reflect it.

▶ JARDINE

Harassment not a solution to allegations

Editor,

I wish to present this open letter to your readers concerning recent "alleged segregation" in Jardine Terrace. Our council has, in cooperation with the Jardine family housing coordinator and the complainants, resolved this issue to the satisfaction of all parties involved. Despite resolution, some people may be unaware of this and harbor resentment. Please share this letter with your readers.

To the residents of Jardine Terrace and the students of Kansas State:

I am writing this letter not as the mayor of Jardine or as a representative of the Jardine governing council but as a husband, father and resident concerned for my family and community.

Since my responses to the Collegian's questions concerning "Allegations of segregation in Jardine" were printed on Feb. 5, my wife and I have received harassing telephone calls including threats. On three separate occasions at least two unidentified people have called our home, once to call me an "asshole for pursuing this." This climaxed last night.

My wife received a call from a person who only identified herself as a resident of Jardine and a member of a group who "are going to get rid of him (me)" and that my wife "had better start packing." I am painfully aware of how stressful this entire situation has been for all our residents, and, moreover, for the specific parties involved.

My wife and I have worked very hard over the past two years to make Jardine a better place to live. We have met many wonderful people and built many lasting friendships. This is why we are unclear as to why anyone would do this. I won't apologize for assisting these residents. I do believe everyone deserves equal protection under the law. But I do urge these callers to consider that threats against anyone will only serve to divide our community further.

The proper forum for meaningful dialogue exists not in veiled threats but in open and fair communication. It is in that spirit that I invite anyone upset about this issue to meet with me, the family housing coordinator or with the Jardine Council in person to remedy the situation. Only then can we as a community again look forward and begin the healing process.

Freedom of information much diluted

"I believe there are more instances of abridgement of the freedom of the people by gradual and silent encroachment of those in power than by violent and sudden usurpations" — James Madison

The time has come for President Bill Clinton to sweep away the last vestiges of Cold War paranoia and restore the ability of private American citizens to have access to the public records of their government.

Passage of the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 forbade the communication of any data concerning the design, manufacture and use of nuclear weapons. Since then, the government has increasingly interpreted the need to maintain national defense as a mandate to restrict access to any information that it might deem in any way harmful to the security interests of the United States.

As Watergate and Iran-Contra scandals have also shown, the highest-ranking members of the government seem to have a difficult time distinguishing between matters deserving legitimate national security secrecy, and using the law to cover their asses as they commit illegalities masquerading as policy decisions.

SHAWN WOODFORD

The conflict between the need to maintain national security and the rights of free speech guaranteed in the Constitution came to a head in late 1979 and 1980. Howard Moreland, a reporter for the magazine the Progressive, informed the government that he planned to publish an article revealing the technical details behind the operation of the hydrogen bomb.

Aghast that one of its most jealously guarded secrets was about to be revealed to the world, the government sought an injunction to prevent the printing of the article. The matter soon went to trial, where Moreland revealed that he had obtained his information exclusively from unclassified sources, published material on nuclear weapons and physics, and from talking to scientists and others who worked in the multi-billion dollar nuclear-weapons industry.

Eventually the government dropped its case because it was forced to admit that the information restrictions of the Atomic Energy Act were essentially unenforceable — the basic concepts that the H-bomb was built upon were common scientific knowledge, and the particulars of the U.S. H-bomb program had not, in fact, been revealed.

The blow for free speech that Moreland and the Progressive struck was short-lived. In direct response to the United States v. the Progressive case, then-President Ronald Reagan signed an executive order that effectively gutted the Freedom of Information Act.

FOIA, originally formulated in the 1930s as a way for private citizens to obtain information, required the government to explicitly specify why certain documents needed to be kept secret. Reagan's order changed that, and an FOIA request can now be denied if any government official deems a piece of information as "security-related."

The order also reclassified information that had previously been declassified, changed the rules for classifying information, and ended the systematic routine declassification of government records older than 30 years.

While ostensibly tightening supposedly lax national-security laws, Reagan's order effectively closed any avenues American citizens had for finding out what their government was up to, not to mention hampering the research efforts of scientists, historians and the media, for whom the flow of information from government sources is vital.

Unfortunately, the restrictions of the flow of information have taken on an increasingly partisan nature in the years since Reagan's edict. Last November, Sen. John Glenn, chairman of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs, released a report titled "Serious Mismanagement Problems at the National Archives and Records Administration."

The report detailed allegations that the National Archives and Records Administration, responsible for care and storage of government documents, had violated statutory requirements for impartiality and confidentiality, had engaged in prohibited activities with other government agencies and had taken supervision from others besides the archivist of the United States, Don Wilson.

Although the position of chief archivist is a non-political position, the Glenn Report suggested that Wilson's conduct be reviewed by the president and that Wilson review the conduct of the National Archives.

The suspicions of inappropriate behavior of the National Archives should provide President Clinton with the perfect opportunity to rescind Reagan's executive order and restore the powers of the Freedom of Information Act, and to remove any hint of politicization from the control of government information. It is time to ditch the pernicious Cold War mentality once and for all and reaffirm the basic freedoms that this country was founded upon.

Union Station to get blues

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

The Union Station in the K-State Union will be the place to go tonight if you have the blues.

The Union Program Council and the Black History Month Committee are sponsoring the band Blue. The band will be performing in celebration of Black History Month.

The rhythm and blues band was discovered by UPC through the connection of Shirlyn Henry-Brown, graduate student in theatre, and is the regular house band for Dr. Love's Blues and Jazz Club.

The band is made up of four members, all from the Manhattan area. They have played in local establishments in Manhattan, as well as Junction City and the Fort Riley area.

The band grew out of what was Hank Ashwood and the jazz disciples, and is influenced predominately by lead guitarist Wayne O'Neil's blues style, William Love, owner of Dr. Love's, said.

O'Neil, has played in different bands over the last eighteen years.

"He's very open minded when playing different styles and that makes him so good," Fran Rookes, O'Neil's girlfriend, said.

"There's gonna be a little something for everyone in the crowd."

O'Neil, as well as the other members of Blue, have played in diverse situations.

"They played in Charlie's, Brothers, and the VFW in Junction City," Henry-Brown said.

"I'm hoping there will be a very diverse crowd."

While most of the music they perform is blues, they have been known to play a variety of other selections.

"They do a mean B.B. King and a dynamic Jimmy Hendrix," Henry-Brown said.

Charla Bailey, Program Advisor for UPC, is hoping for a good turnout.

"The show will take place from 10:00 p.m. to 1:00 a.m. in the Union Station on February 12th," Bailey said.

"Ebony Theatre will precede the main show at 9:00, and admission will be free."

Henry-Brown's feelings on the show were simple.

"Come and celebrate your blues,"she said.

REVIEW

Movie follows slow predictable course

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

It's hard to believe that director Alan J. Pakula, who gave us the taut drama "Presumed Innocent," directed "Consenting Adults," this week's offering from UPC Films.

Directing problems appear soon into the film, which is slow to take off due to the stilted clips illustrating the typical yuppie, suburban life of Richard and Priscilla Parker. The Parkers are played by Kevin Kline and Mary Elizabeth Mastrantonio.

One scene shows them struggling at work to find the right tune for a commercial, then the film cuts to them celebrating their daughter's birthday. There is no natural flow to show what the characters' lives are really like.

It finally becomes evident that the Parkers are plodding along in their uneventful but complacent lives, until their new neighbors, Eddie and Kay Otis, move in. Eddie and Kay represent everything the Parkers aren't. They've made large amounts of money, they're flamboyant and don't hesitate to take chances.

Eddie and Kay enliven the Parkers, and their relationship gains spark as they learn to have more fun with life. The two couples spend a majority of their free time building their friendships. Eddie gives Priscilla money advice to get them out of their debts, and Richard uses his music connections to get Kay, played by Rebecca Miller, started in her music career.

Their friendship is tested, however, when Eddie cons Richard and Priscilla into an insurance scam, illegally giving them extra money. Eddie uses the excuse that the Parkers should not play life so safely, constantly forcing Richard to wonder if he can live without taking risks.

The insurance scam is only the beginning, as Richard and Priscilla put too much trust in Eddie, and their lives are destroyed. Richard is accused of murder and spends the rest of the movie getting back his family and personal honor. Unfortunately the plot is nothing new, as Richard delves into Eddie's past and true identity.

Again, Pakula's direction leaves Kline and Mastrantonio victims, as their talent seems trapped and restrained in this movie. The script doesn't give them much to fall back on, either. It seems their characters do stupid things, such as believe in the untrustworthy couple just to keep the movie going. Both Kline and Mastrantonio have done much better work in their individual careers.

The only break from the predictability is Kevin Spacey in the role of Eddie. His portrayal of the psychologically unstable character makes the viewer think twice about becoming friends with someone who knows so much about money scams.

"Consenting Adults" will be shown today and Saturday at 7 and 9:30 p.m. in Union Forum Hall, and Sunday at 7 p.m., also in Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75.

Well-rested Huskers next test for Wildcats

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Deryl Cunningham, Cat center, reaches for a loose ball against Iowa State's Julius Michalik during the first half of K-State's 68-66 win at Bramlage Coliseum. DC finished with seven points.

Bramlage should be full for just 2nd time

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

For just the second time this season — and the first time in nearly a month — the Wildcats should be playing before a full house at 3 p.m. Saturday at Bramlage Coliseum.

As of noon Thursday, only 150 tickets remained for the weekend contest between the Cats and the Nebraska Cornhuskers. The flipside of that is many of those seats may be colored in a Husker sea of red.

Jack Key, K-State's chief financial officer, said Thursday afternoon 400 tickets had been sold to Nebraska fans. But that doesn't mean just 400 Husker fans will attend the game.

"I think it's safe to say, come game time, there will be more than 400 Nebraska fans here," he said.

But, for the first time all season, the Wildcat fans who have attended the games sparked some critical words from Wildcat coach Dana Altman — specifically the catcalls he said he thought he heard.

"During the timeouts, I usually don't hear that stuff," he said. "But I did hear some things, and it was a little disappointing. There was a lot of time left, and we weren't playing well — I will admit that.

"We didn't give them too much to cheer about. But it was still too early to throw in the towel."

But Altman was also quick to praise the student section and its importance to the Cats.

"We've been very pleased with the students," he said. "The players have commented a number of times how supportive the students are. They keep the atmosphere alive.

"I'd rather dwell on the people that are doing a good job for us than the people that aren't."

Saturday's game is the third this week for the 15-4 Wildcats, 5-2 and in sole possession of second place in the Big Eight. The Huskers, on the other hand, are playing their first game since upsetting third-ranked Kansas 68-64 Sunday.

Last season, Nebraska came to Manhattan after downing second-ranked Oklahoma State. At that time, the Cowboys had been 20-0.

K-State won, 70-66.

How much will that extra practice time help Nebraska?

"I think it would be more of an advantage if we hadn't already played each other," Altman said.

K-State beat the Huskers 66-64 in Lincoln on Jan. 23.

"It just gives them a little extra break," Altman said. "It's probably an advantage at this time of the year but not a big advantage.

"We're at home, and with a day off and a day to get ready, we should be fine."

Cat guard Anthony Beane said he agreed his team will be ready.

"We beat them down there," Beane said. "We'll be happy to play them here."

The Wildcats have to be considered the favorite if the game goes down to the wire. K-State has won all six of its games that have been decided by two points or fewer, and the Cats are 4-0 in overtime games.

And the Wildcats — 65-percent free-throw shooters as a team — have made 68 percent of their freebies in the final three minutes and overtime.

In Wednesday night's win over Iowa State, K-State was seven for eight from the line in that time. Forward Vincent Jackson is a perfect 14 for 14 from the stripe in that time period for the season.

"When we get to that point, we think we have a new life," Altman said.

"We've just been able to concentrate in those periods, dig down a little bit and make something good happen."

But K-State's five conference wins are by an average margin of just 4.4 points — and that number is skewed by the 12-point overtime win over Oklahoma State.

"We're not exactly drilling people," Altman said.

"We're finding a way to get by and finding a way to win games."

COLUMN

Of tiring players and faithless fans

No. 1 Indiana nearly loses to Penn State.

Top-ranked KU loses to Long Beach State, then falls to Nebraska two weeks later.

There are no undefeated NCAA Division I teams.

TROY COVERDALE

Have we finally achieved parity in college basketball?

Nope.

What we have here is a chain of events caused by a number of factors, but to put it simply — and using marathon jargon — the teams are "hitting the wall."

Around the 15- to 20-game mark, college teams begin to wear down. Classes are taking a toll. Practices seem to drag on. And the pressures of a highly competitive league season are wearing on the players.

Kind of explains why four past No. 1 teams have all lost in the last month.

Could this be why, in a week that sees K-State playing three games, the Wildcats looked a little lackluster Monday and Wednesday nights?

You bet.

The shooting percentages are down. Only two players are averaging in double figures. The defense is a step behind.

These are common symptoms of a tired team.

Unfortunately, it could not have happened at a worse time.

Being beaten soundly on Monday night by Missouri, on national TV, was the first clue that the brick wall was near.

(By the way — kudos to ESPN for showing the complete game and not switching to a NordicTrack™ ad.)

Beating Iowa State by a slim margin at home in overtime showed that the wall was upon the Cats.

Good teams fight through it and use it to their advantage at tournament time. Lay odds that K-State will do the same.

Keep it in mind, however, whether you are in attendance, watching on TV or listening on radio tomorrow when the Cats play Nebraska.

Dana Altman was still talking Thursday about hearing the catcalls and boos on Wednesday night, when the Cats hit a tough stretch against the Cyclones. And you know what? I can't blame him.

You expect the boos on the road. But at home?

Figure it out, fans — the Cats played better when you got behind them Wednesday night. It was your screaming and hollering support that helped them get over the hump and win.

But that's only after you spent most of the game bitching and moaning about the way the game was being played.

Keep in mind what this team has done — the first Top 25 ranking since 1988, and a 5-2 Big Eight record at the halfway point.

Then remember the expectations — seventh in the conference, a possible losing record, and most likely no postseason.

Why boo when you are surpassing expectations, even when that wall has been erected?

And let's hope that the Cats bring the "wall" down Saturday against the Huskers.

'Switching problem' cited for Prime missing Cat win

NordicTrack™ received dozens of phone calls from irate basketball fans

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

For those viewers watching the K-State basketball game Wednesday night on Prime Sports Network — the Wildcats won on an Anthony Beane 12-footer at the buzzer.

But Beane's late-game heroics, as well as the final two minutes of overtime, weren't shown on Prime. Instead, viewers were shown a NordicTrack™ infomercial.

"I can't tell you how sorry everybody here is," Kevin Eschenfelder, Prime's general manager of program operations, said Thursday. "If it were me, I would have been livid."

And many Wildcat fans were. Operators at NordicTrack's 800 number — the one that was in the infomercial — reported dozens of phone calls from viewers who wanted to know what was going on.

"I would probably look like a porcupine if I could put a NordicTrack™ every place they told me to stick one," said one operator who chose to remain anonymous. "They were irate.

"I kind of flinched every time the phone rang because I knew I was in for it."

Eschenfelder cited an automatic switching problem as the primary reason for the gaffe. He said the problem has been identified, and Prime has taken steps to avoid a future occurrence.

There were rumors that TCI, the local cable company, was responsible for the mix-up. But the Collegian received calls from as far away as Iowa — well out of TCI's range — from viewers angry that they missed the end of the game.

"That's kind of asinine to think that we would turn it off," Alex Rexrode, TCI's chief technical operator, said. "That's just stupid.

"No, it was entirely Prime. They were at fault and nobody local."

Indeed, Eschenfelder said it was Prime's mistake — not TCI's.

"I'm not trying to skirt the issue," he said. "Mistakes are made that make us look very bad, and that was one of them.

"But that doesn't excuse it, and there's nothing we can do to change it now."

This was the second time a K-State game, televised by Prime, ran into scheduling problems.

On Jan. 23, the Wildcats' win in Lincoln against the Cornhuskers was pre-empted for Denver Nugget basketball.

Eschenfelder said Prime hoped to make up for the recent faux pas by televising the final 30 minutes of the game — at 7:30 last night.

No future tapings of the game are scheduled at this time.

Lady Cats still looking for 1st conference win

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

The Lady Cats will try to break out of the conference cellar this weekend when they take a two-game road trip to Nebraska and Iowa State.

The team will face the No. 23 Lady Huskers at 7 p.m. Friday in Lincoln.

The game against the Cyclones will be broadcast on the Prime Sports Network at 2 p.m. Sunday from Ames.

K-State is 0-9 in Big Eight play this season and has only six games left before the conference tournament in Salina. Despite the record, Lady Cat coach Susan Yow said she is encouraged by the progress her team has made in the past few games.

"I've been pleased with two of the last three games — those being the games against Kansas and Colorado," she said.

"We need to take care of ourselves and get a win, and take one on the road from Oklahoma, Oklahoma State and Kansas before we go to Salina."

K-State dropped a 61-51 decision to then-No. 5 Colorado and lost a closely contested 58-51 game to the Jayhawks.

"Our team was better now than it was a month ago," Yow said. "But we still have way too many turnovers."

Turnovers have been the Achilles' heel of the Lady Cats this season.

The team is averaging 22.3 turnovers a game — including 27 last Sunday against the Lady Buffs.

The biggest challenge for the Lady Cat defense against Nebraska is 6-foot-2-inch Karen Jennings. Jennings was just named a unanimous pick for Big Eight player of the week and was last season's conference Player of the Year.

In last month's game at Bramlage Coliseum, Jennings was held by the K-State defense to 10 points — 11 below her scoring average.

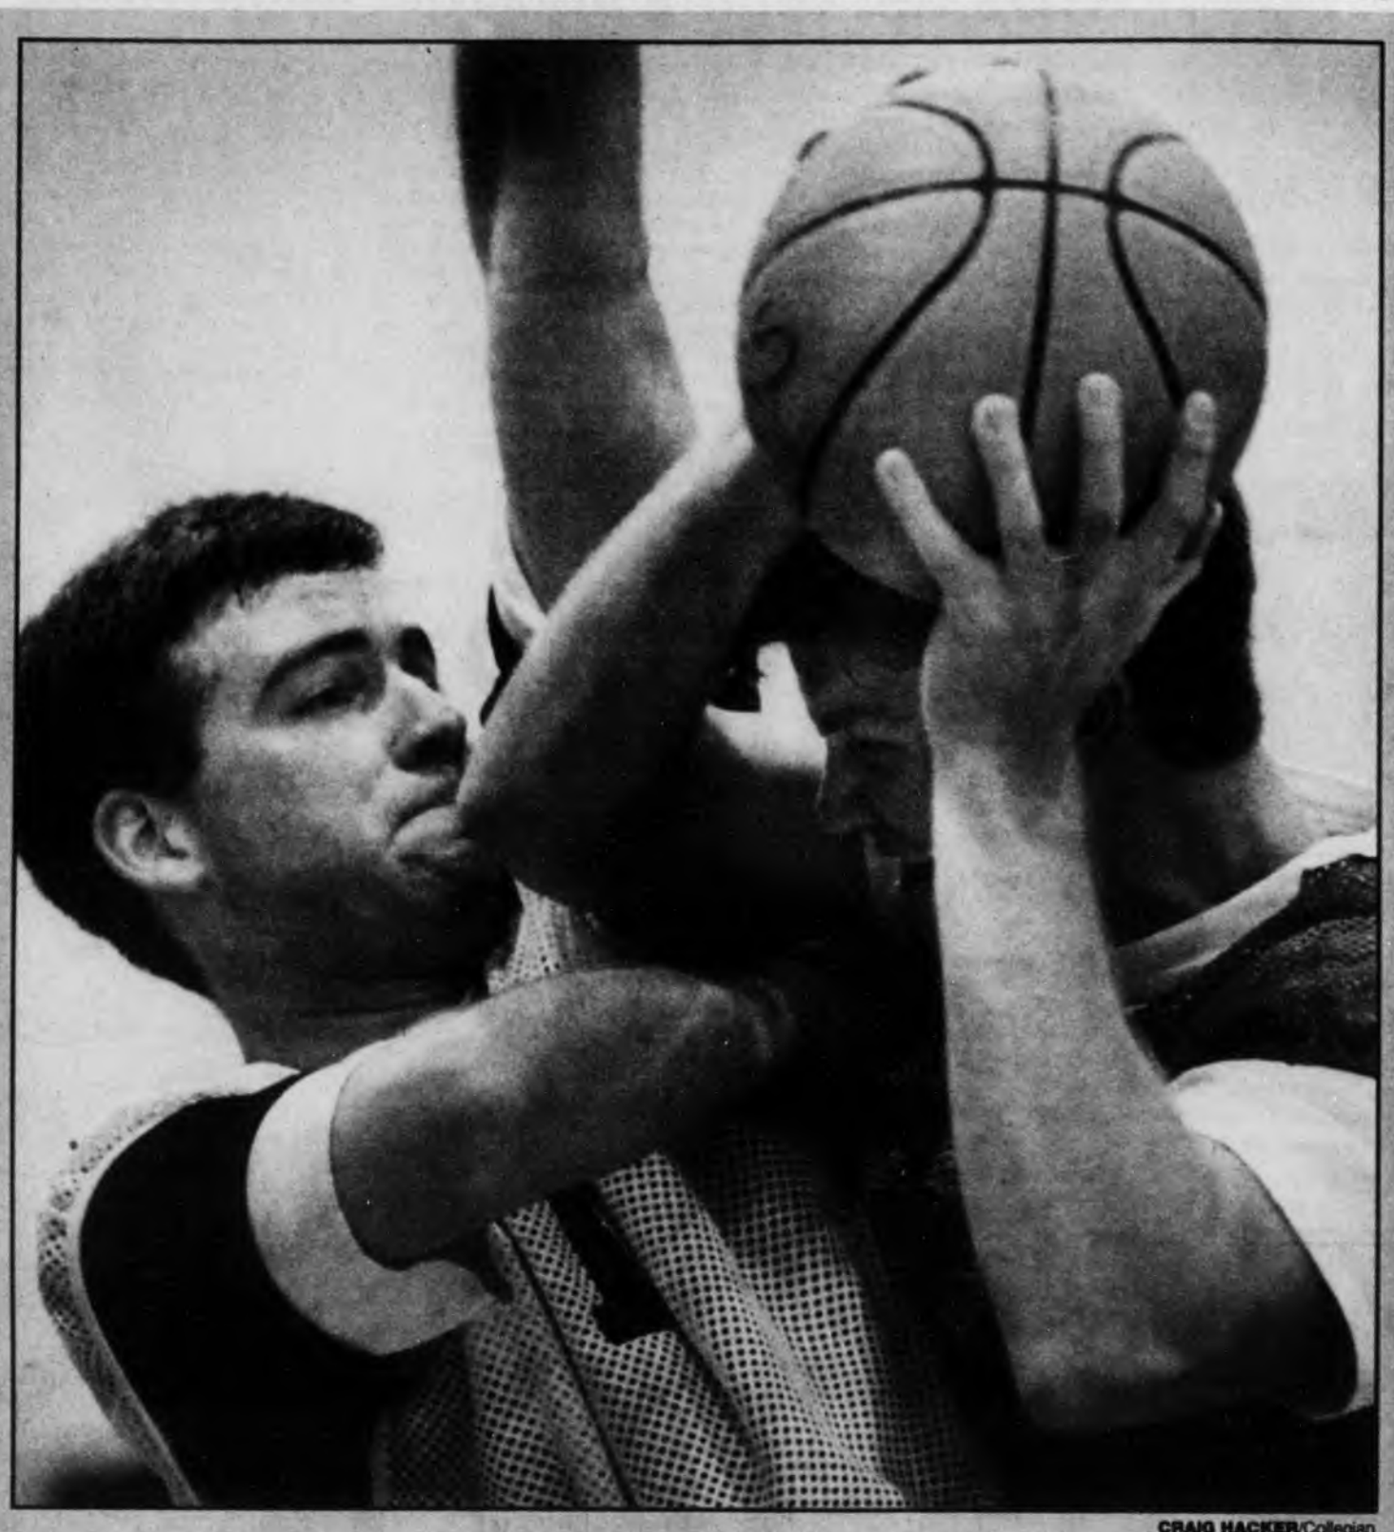
But Nebraska still rolled over the Lady Cats, 74-57, as three other Cornhuskers tallied in double figures.

"It's hard to find a weakness on their team," said Lady Cat guard Kelly Moylan, who is leading K-State in field-goal and 3-point percentage this season.

"We held Jennings to 10 points, but their perimeter players kept stepping up," she said.

"The key to the game will be Jennings. We can't let her score 25 points.

"Our perimeter players need to step up, and we need to limit the number of turnovers."



When the Lady Cats visit Ames Sunday, they will play an Iowa State team that presented them with what Yow called its most devastating loss of the season.

The Lady Cats were 7-4 when they played Iowa State in their home-conference opener. But the 1-13 Cyclones ended up beating a flat K-State team, 67-61.

"We are going there on a mission to play well," Yow said. "It's a game we need back. It was a real disappointing loss last time."

Moylan said Sunday's game is a must-win for the Lady Cats.

"We want to prove we are better than them," she said. "Realistically, we can get three or four more wins this season."

Intramural ranking tabs TKEs No. 1

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

More than halfway into the intramural basketball season, the Tau Kappa Epsilon team continues to hold the top spot in the intramural rankings.

The TKEs, now 3-0, have been the No. 1-ranked team for the duration of the semester.

But don't expect them to brag too much about the top ranking.

"I've never really heard about it," said Dustin Zander, a guard/forward on the team. "It's great that we have it, but it's really not that big of a deal."

The intramural ranking system is still in its first year.

The system was used during the softball and volleyball seasons, but it is in its first season with basketball.

"We usually just rank the undefeated teams," said Bryan Skinner, associate intramural director at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

"But toward the end of the season, we might decide that the 10 best are not undefeated."

Currently, none of the 20 ranked teams has lost. But, Zander said, that doesn't necessarily mean the rankings are entirely accurate.

"We haven't really played well this season," he said. "I don't really consider us to be the best team out there. It kind of surprised me to hear that we're the No.1 team."

Zander said that only one of his team's three games have been blowouts, and that all three of the TKEs games have been close in the first half.

The rankings are done by the public relations staff at the Rec, Skinner and intramural director Steve Martini. Updated rankings are released every Monday.

"We've been getting a lot of positive comments on the ranking system," Skinner said. "People might look at the schedule and say, 'Hey, we play the fourth-ranked team today.'

"Some teams have been ranked all season."

Intramural basketball playoffs will begin on Sunday, Feb. 28.

Netters to face Drake, Arkansas

COLLEGIAN STAFF

K-State's tennis team will travel to Topeka this weekend with matches against Drake on Saturday and Arkansas on Sunday.

The meets will begin at 9 a.m. at the Wood Valley Racquet Club & Fitness Center.

The Wildcats won their season opener against Creighton, 7-2.

K-State tennis coach Steve Bietau said he does not think about the win over Creighton just two weeks ago.

"Our team is very young and very inexperienced," he said. "Creighton seems like a long time ago."

Senior Suzanne Sim said Drake will be tougher than Creighton, but Arkansas, Sunday's opponent, will be the strongest.

"We will have to play well to win both," she said. "It will be nothing like Creighton."

Drake's top player is sophomore and No. 1 singles player Vera Vitale, who is ranked 26th in the nation.

"Drake has one of the top players at singles," Bietau said. "In addition to Vera, they have a solid team — but not an overwhelming one."

Vitale is 1-0 this season. She finished 19-4 last spring, which included a conference championship. She also qualified for the Rolex indoor championship.

"She will be the best girl," Sim said. "She's very tough to beat, and she will be one of the best we'll see all season."

Bietau said there will be good players other than Vitale.

"Everyone's good at No. 1," Bietau said. "Top players will be strong No. 1 singles and doubles — they are not going to be an easy road."

Bietau said he is not familiar with Arkansas.

"Arkansas has a lot of new players," he said. "Historically, they've always had a good team."

Sim said the matches are a chance to gain experience before starting Big Eight play next month.

"These are matches to get more experience for the younger girls," she said. "We are working up to the Big Eight season."

And Bietau said he is more concerned with progress than wins.

"My big concern will be with our team in hopes that we make significant steps forward," he said.

The passing of a legend

Ageless Ryan will retire after this season

ASSOCIATED PRESS

ARLINGTON, Texas — Nolan Ryan, who sometimes seemed like he would fire fastballs forever, finally gave baseball fans the news they never wanted to hear — it's all over after this year.

Ryan told the Texas Rangers on Thursday he would retire at the end of the season. His age, his family and his injuries all played a part in his decision.

"I don't want to stay too long, and I'd rather be premature in leaving baseball than stay too late and have to retire in an awkward position," Ryan said during a news conference at Arlington Stadium.

Ryan, 46 last month, made his announcement a week before players begin reporting for spring training. In doing so, the humble Texan who never dwelled on his amazing accomplishments set up what will surely become one of the most celebrated farewell tours in baseball history.

"Nolan walked in this morning and said, 'I've been thinking about it all winter, and I want this to be my last season,'" president Tom Schieffer said.

"What a class way to do it," Schieffer said. "He's such an unusual person. We won't see his like again."

Ryan, 319-287 lifetime, holds more than 50 major-league records, including two big ones — seven no-hitters and 5,668 strikeouts.

By pitching this year, Ryan will set another mark.

It will be his 27th season, breaking the record he shares with Tommy John and Deacon McGuire.

Ryan said he decided to retire this winter, "while driving down the road one day going to the ranch.

"I wanted to go to spring training without having to deceive anyone.

"I wanted people to have the opportunity to watch me pitch, and I wanted to let them know I was going to retire," he said.

▶SUPER BOWL MVP AIKMAN TO APPEAL $10,000 FINE

IRVING, Texas — Troy Aikman's agent said Thursday he would appeal a $10,000 fine handed to his client for leaving the Pro Bowl before the game was over.

The NFL announced the fine Thursday, a day after Aikman met with league commissioner Paul Tagliabue to discuss why the Super Bowl MVP mysteriously left Aloha Stadium early in the fourth quarter.

Aikman said he left before the game was over because he had an early flight to catch so he could make a Monday morning meeting with his charity.

He publicly apologized at Tuesday's championship parade for the Dallas Cowboys but has been criticized for his early exit and for complaining about the game beforehand.

Aikman was out of town Thursday and unavailable for comment.

He left Aloha Stadium in the third quarter of the AFC's 23-20 overtime victory over the NFC. He told some of the players he was leaving, but he did not inform NFC coach George Seifert.

Steinberg said several NFL employees knew of Aikman's plans and never advised him that what he was doing was wrong.

▶FINNEY BETS SOYBEANS THAT WILDCATS WILL WIN

When K-State and Nebraska played football in Tokyo last December, Gov. Joan Finney and Nebraska Gov. Ben Nelson participated in a friendly wager — one bushel of Kansas soybeans vs. one bushel of Nebraska corn.

Both attended the Huskers' 38-24 win.

Finney has now challenged Nelson to yet another bet — double or nothing — on Saturday's basketball game between the two schools.

According to a press release sent to the Collegian, "Governor Finney is confident that the KSU basketball team will dominate Nebraska as they did in Lincoln earlier this season."

Husker Invitational next for thinclads

DEREK NELSON
Collegian

K-State's track teams take their show on the road this weekend as they travel to Lincoln, Neb. for the Husker Invitational.

This will be the Wildcats' first meet away from Ahearn Field House this season.

The meet begins today at 5 p.m. with finals in most field events and preliminaries in many running events.

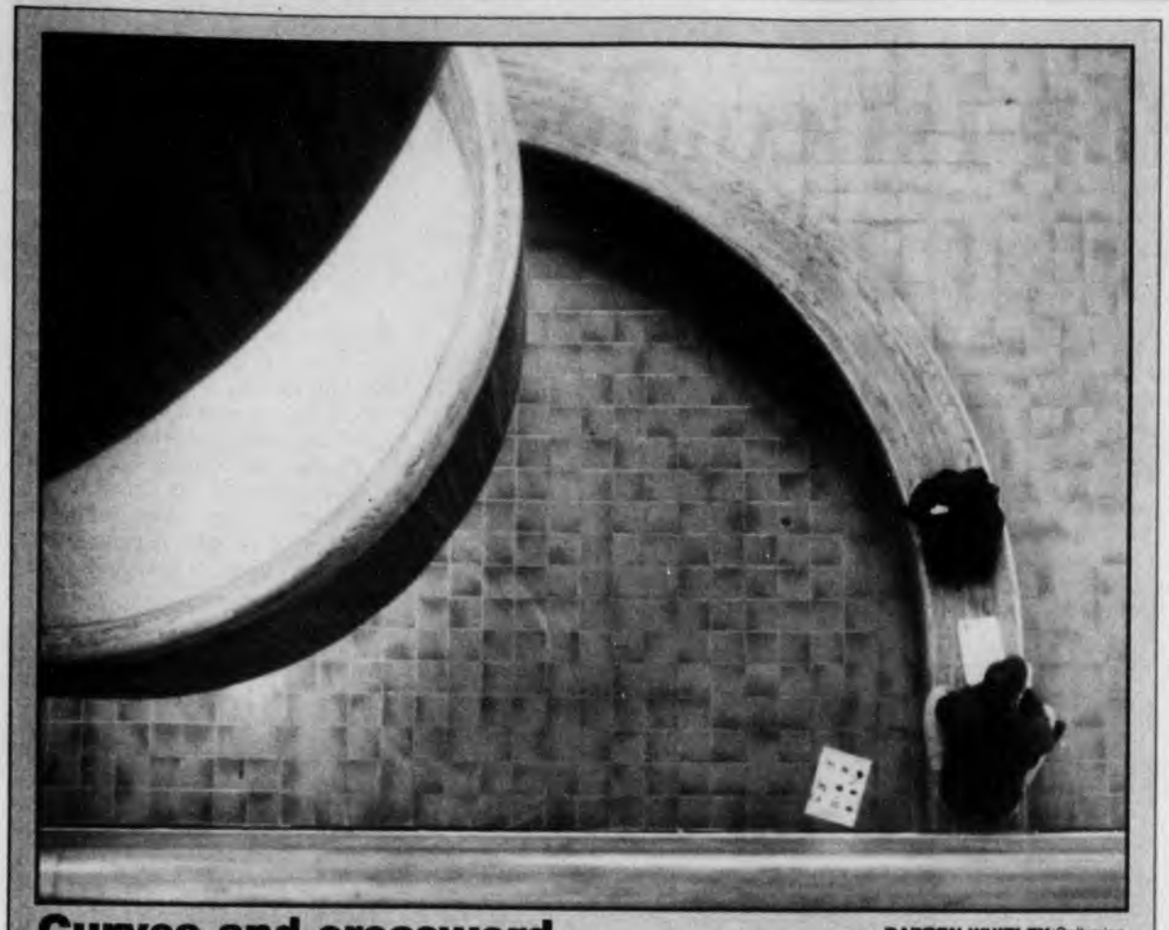
"Traditionally, this meet is the best collegiate indoor invitational meet in the country," K-State interim coach Cliff Rovelto said. "Nebraska has great facilities and does a great job running the meet."

The meet is also the Wildcats' last test before the Big Eight indoor meet.

Leading the way for the Wildcats will be freshman high jumper Itai Margalit. For three successive weeks, he has set and reset the K-State indoor high jump record.

Now it is time to compete on a national level, Margalit said.

Another Wildcat who expects to have a big weekend is Thomas Randolph. Randolph placed second at the Husker Invitational last year. He improved his personal best time already twice this season.



"We have many talented athletes and great teams coming for this year's meet," Mark Kostek, Nebraska assistant coach and meet director, said.

In the men's competition, the field includes four Big Eight teams plus national powers Texas Christian, Pittsburgh, Brigham Young and Eastern Carolina.

The women's events will showcase the Big Eight teams, UNLV, Alabama and Arkansas.

Gwen Wentland, whose best event is the high jump, will compete in this week's event. She took last weekend's Coors Invitational off after setting a new meet record in the high jump in the KSU/MU/KU Triangular.

"At this meet, we will see quality teams and quality performances," Rovelto said. "For the most part, the K-State athletes will be competing in their strongest events, so I hope to see quality performances from them."

The main dilemma stems from the decline of incoming freshmen living in the residence halls, he said.

"We house 44 percent of incoming freshmen who enroll at K-State," Werring said. "With the decline in number of new students that directly affects our budget."

Werring compared K-State's policies to that of the requirement of making freshmen live in the dorms at the University of Missouri and to the increase of 15 percent in resident's fees at the University of Kansas.

"It raised a question — how would they like the 11.4 percent increase? No one wants an increase in the first place," he said. "So, we looked at places we could increase revenue and put the charge on washer and dryer. The decision was made not to go into double-digit increase and instead pass it on to laundry."

Residents questioned the amount of money expected to accumulate from washers and dryers.

"The average college student pays $3.25 per month out of washing machines," H. Gene Wiley, maintenance superintendent, said. "That leaves us with a total of between $90,000 and $100,000 out of laundry."

Another concern was about the pulling money from the meals and redirecting the funds spent on theme dinners and festive meals.

"We spend less than a dollar per student on that," said Alex Delgadillo, department of housing staff assistant. "We try to provide something that goes away from the routine. It's not mundane, and it's something different."

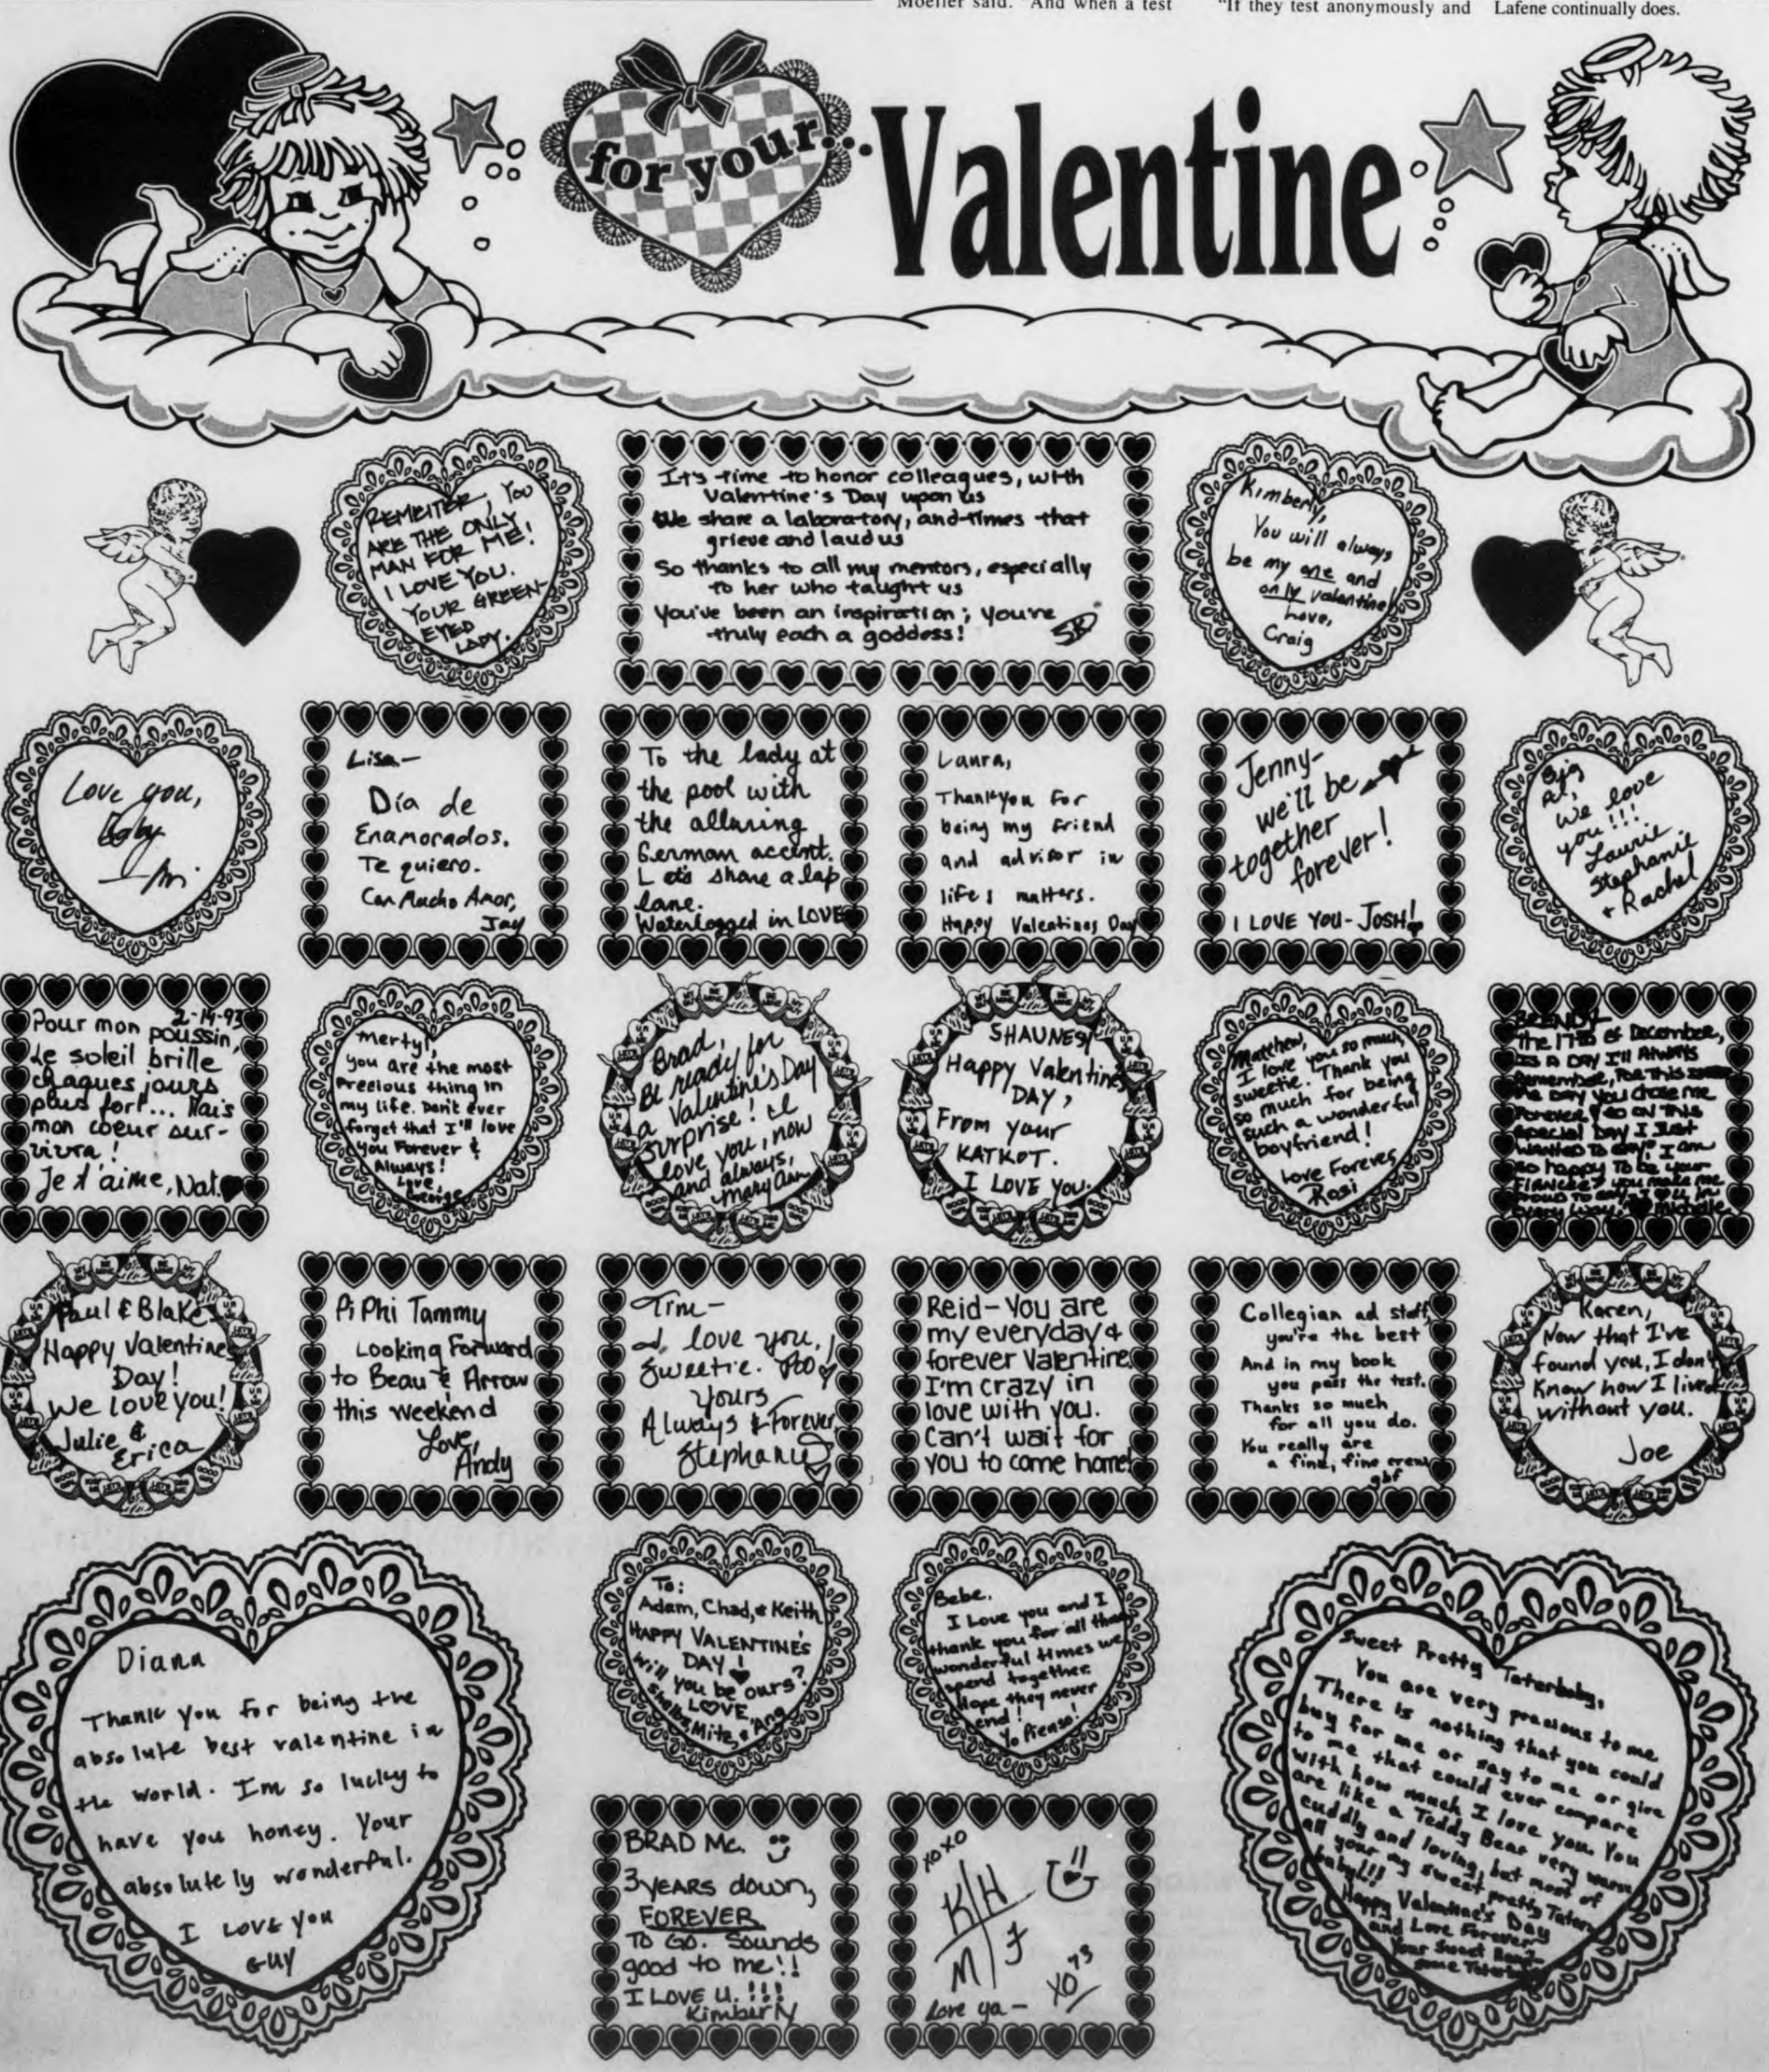
specificity," Dr. Larry Moeller, medical director at Lafene, said. "If you're truly positive, it will show up positive, or truly negative, it will show up negative."

Moeller said patients are counseled before and after tests and made aware of what the results may mean.

"Before testing, we discuss what if it is positive, who I'd want to share this with. I mean, in terms of employability and insurability," Moeller said. "And when a test comes up negative, people are taught not to think they're immune to the virus and can't contract it. That's purely wrong."

Moeller said positive test results mean continued counseling on at-risk behavior and on the consequences of the results. These include not leaving body organs to science, no sexual intercourse, and making people within their lives aware they are patients at risk.



Some students said they felt the responsibility lies with the patient.

"If they test anonymously and then see positive results, they know how far it's spread," Dalton said. "People need to take responsibility for their own actions."

Jeremy Hoppas, junior in electrical engineering, said he agreed.

"You should be the only one to know, because that's personal," Hoppas said. "I believe people can take responsibility for themselves, and we should respect people's right to privacy."

Respecting the students' rights is something Zweimiller thinks Lafene continually does.

Valentine's Day. A time for romance, a time for love and a time for. ...beheadings?

According to the Roman history of martyrs, two Saint Valentines were martyred on February 14 by being beheaded.

This is not the only unsettling history about Valentine's Day.

Cupid, a Roman god of love in Greek mythology, is said to shoot unsuspecting victims with his arrows.

A person shot with one of these arrows is supposed to fall in love.

But, Cupid was described by the ancient Greeks and Romans as having both a cruel and happy nature.

According to the World Almanac and Book of Facts, Cupid's cruelty was shown in the treatment of his wife.

Cupid told his wife, Psyche, if she ever saw him in the light, he would leave her forever.

One night, Psyche lit a lamp and saw Cupid, and he left.

Some students share similar opinions to the origin of Valentine's Day.

Troy Bourbon, graduate student in agricultural technology management, was unsure of its origin.

"Valentine's Day has something to do with St. Valentine, that's all I know," Bourbon said.

Adrienne Hicks, freshman in pre-physical therapy, said she was also unsure how Valentine's Day began.

"I think there was a saint named Valentine. I've heard the story before, but I can't remember it," Hicks said.

Although certain stories surrounding February 14 are less than appealing, there are some resembling the reasons we celebrate Valentine's day today.

According to the World Almanac, English poet, Geoffrey Chaucer, said birds began to pair off on that day.

One story says Valentine was an early Christian who made friends with many children.

The Romans imprisoned him because he refused to worship their gods. The children missed Valentine and threw loving notes between the bars of his cell window.

This may explain the custom of exchanging valentines.

An English custom listed in the World Almanac said it was a practice to write women's names on a piece of paper and put them in jar.

Men would draw out the names and the woman they chose was to be their valentine.

Regardless of where or how Valentine's Day began, its meaning is generally understood among people today.

Sarah Burnham, senior in speech pathology, said Valentine's day was a time to remember the special people in your life.

"We have Valentine's Day to appreciate our friends and loved ones," Burnham said. Everyone remembers the box.

Back in grade school, each child decorated an old shoe box with tin foil or colored paper and waited for Valentine's Day. If your box was full, you could be the love of someone's life. If not, you might as well be a one-eyed leper.

"I was a dork," said Giles Kyle, senior in civil engineering.

"I was pigeon-toed. They never liked me. In grade school, I wrote this girl a really sappy love valentine, and her friend told me she hated my guts. It was really sad."

That's the way guys talk about past Valentine's Days. It's like listening to war veterans talk about a pre-dawn massacre. Wounded pride lies on a bloody battlefield, gasping its last breath.

"In the second grade, I got a Valentine's Day card from a girl I had a crush on," said Eric Benson, senior in exercise science. "Of course, I got one from everyone else in the class."

Nonetheless, Benson said, he kept the card.

Andy Crow, senior in radio-television, said he remembers Marlo, a girl in the fourth grade.

Crow said he bought her a big box of candy and was on his way to give it to her when he saw a friend.

"He told me what a stupid idea it was, then he beat me to it," Crow said.

Of course, women look back on it all with a cool distance. They can juggle rattlesnakes on Valentine's Day.

"They had a Valentine's Day box-decorating contest in the fourth grade," said Carina Givens, senior human development and family studies.

"My sister made one. I don't know if she won, but I liked it."

And then there was candy.

"When you were a little kid, you'd get candy," said Wendy Nicholson, senior in anthropology and Kyle's girlfriend.

"It was like Halloween. We'd all get sick in school."

However, Nicholson said, things have changed over the years.

"It has become more sexual," she said. "Less candy, more sex."

Kyle disagreed.

"It's kind of the same thing," he said. "My sex is candy."

Candy isn't the only thing that has changed, said Rey Silva, sophomore in animal sciences and industry.

"It has become more commercialized," he said. "The girls— they don't appreciate things as much."

The veterans unite.

"It makes me sick to my stomach," Kyle said. "It's another source of guilt for not living up as a boyfriend."

Life in college is also a little busier, and people might not have time to celebrate.

"I don't see it as a holiday, because there's no day off," Kyle said. "That's the importance of Martin Luther King Jr. Day — there's a day off to think about it."

Even though Valentine's Day will be on a Friday, Silva said he doesn't know if he will celebrate.

"It depends on your mood," he said. "You might not give a shit. You might say, 'This is just another day.'"

Everyone seems to want something, though. It's just like grade school again. Despite the pessimism that comes with age, we still put the shoe box on top of the desk and wait for someone to fill it.

Everyone has a wish.

"A rose or something would be nice," Givens said.

Both Kyle and Nicholson agree on what they would like.

Kyle said he would like "sex with my girlfriend and a nice card." Nicholson wants "a couple of hours in bed with my boyfriend."

But we can't forget the meaning behind the day.

"It's not about receiving, but giving," Silva said. "That 's the real joy of life — sharing with other people."

Couples choose fine dining for their favorite Valentine

MICHELLE HAUPT

Special menus are ready, champagne is chilling and tables are set in festive colors of red and pink.

Preparations are being made for the dining pleasure of those struck by Cupid's arrow.

Restaurants in town are swamped with reservations for Valentine's Day, however, students at K-State don't appear to be making these reservations.

Jennifer Schartz, senior in exercise science, said she and her boyfriend weren't doing anything special for Valentine's Day.

"The fact that it's on a Sunday is kind of a downer," Schartz said. "It's a lot more fun if it's on a Friday or Saturday night."

Julie Haynes, owner of Harry's Uptown Supper Club, said Valentine's Day is unusual this year because it is on a Sunday, which creates a three-day weekend for some people.

"We have a lot of out-of-town people reserved for Saturday night," Haynes said. "We still have some tables left, but we're pretty much full."

She said it was evident the reservations made were for couples and small groups.

"Generally, we hold a lot of large groups, but most of the reservations are being made for two," Haynes said.

"Tables that usually hold from 6-18 people have been removed for 'two tops.'"

Michael Waugh, general manager of Giorgio's Italian Restaurant, also said it was like a three-day weekend, and Giorgio's had many reservations for Valentine's Day.

"People may not want to go out Sunday, instead they may go out Friday and Saturday night," Waugh said.

Brian Pine, senior in agribusiness, said he had not yet made plans for him and his girlfriend.

"I'm not quite that efficient," Pine said. "I imagine I'll take her out to dinner some place nice."

Rod Compton, manager of the Plum Tree Restaurant, located in the Holidome, said he had some reservations made, but not too many. Compton said he isn't worried about the small number of reservations.

"Most of the reservations come within that last 2 or 3 days."

K-State students and faculty will have the opportunity to purchase an affordable gift for that special Valentine today and help a student organization in the process.

Retail Floriculture Club will hold their fourth annual rose and carnation sale in Waters Hall lobby today.

The club sells either one rose or three carnations arranged in a vase with baby's breath and greenery for $5.

Although the sale is the club's only money maker, that's not the only reason they do it.

"The faculty really like it, and students like to have an affordable gift," Mary Reed, flower sale coordinator, said.

"Flowers are tied to Valentine's Day. I read the other day that flowers are still number one for Valentine's Day, over candy and other things," said Kent Kimmins, professor of horticulture and Retail Floriculture Club adviser.

Kimmins said the sale is open to anyone but most sales are to faculty and students.

Previously, the club sold 300 vases in a two-day sale, but since Valentine's Day is on Sunday, they are selling 200 vases on Friday only.

He hopes flower sales will not be adversely affected because the holiday falls on a weekend.

In the past, Kimmins said, they have sold out in six to eight hours, a lot less time than it takes to prepare for the event.

Flowers must be ordered several weeks ahead of time and bows are

Wedding traditions changing to match new generation

Couples share more bills, responsibilities

STEPHANIE HOELZEL

Something old, something new, something borrowed, something blue.

This is a common phrase for brides and bridegrooms to hear.

Some couples decide to use traditions as a guideline in planning their weddings.

"There are some traditions that I'm following, but then there are also some things that I want that aren't traditional," Monica Miller, senior in English, said.

"I decided not to wear a white dress, and that is still considered traditional," she said.

Miller said she consulted some books on tradition.

"There is one tradition not many people know about, and that is for the bride to put a penny, from the year she was born, into her shoe. This is a symbol of good luck," she said.

Chad Fagerberg, senior in radio and television, and his fiancé, Jana Cruce, senior in psychology, decided to plan their wedding to their own tastes and not be governed by tradition.

"Our wedding will be an ATO wedding. We're using white roses and red ties and cummerbunds which are associated with the house," Cruce said.

The tradition of throwing rice isn't seen as often anymore. Many couples choose to use birdseed or wheat instead.

"Throwing rice was meant to bring the couple fertility. Now, throwing anything means fertility. We'll probably use wheat or birdseed because these are the preferred alternatives," Fagerberg said.

The rose is the flower most commonly associated with marriage.

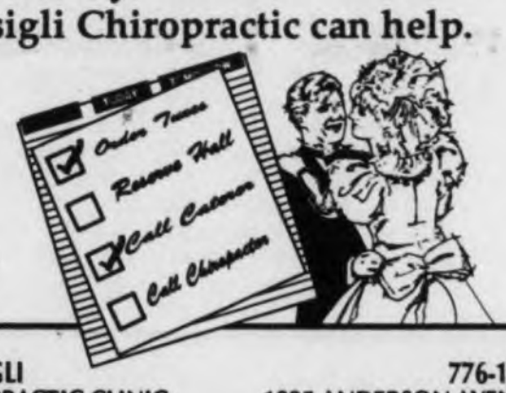
"I chose tulips instead of roses. I think they're pretty so I decided to have them instead of roses," Miller said.

Deciding who pays for what is one of the problems that arise with wedding.

"We're following pretty closely to the paying traditions. I'll pay for the wedding, the open bar and the invitations. My fiancé will pay for the rehearsal dinner, tuxedos for the groomsmen, and the boutonnieres. He's also paying for part of the invitations because his family invited a lot of people," Miller said.

Cruce and Fagerberg have adjusted the common traditions to meet their own needs.

"Jana's family will pay for the wedding, and my family will pay for the rehearsal dinner, boutonnieres, tuxes and the open bar bill. I'll have a lot of my friends at the wedding, and they will drink up a pretty high bill," Fagerberg said.



Traditions come and go with each new generation. Now, couples choose to create the wedding they want instead of following traditions.

LOCAL FLORISTS HAVE HEYDAY

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Susan Doughty, manager of Steve's Floral in Aggieville, and her staff work on a white rose arrangement for the up and coming Valentine's Day onslaught of customers. Floral retailers around the nation have been stockpiling flowers and arrangements for the past week in preparation for the holiday.

"People like to send flowers to the office to show their honey that they're truly in love,"
JAN MILLER
OWNER OF STEVE'S FLORAL

DAVE OLSON
Collegian

Valentine's Day is a busy time for Manhattan florists.

Five local florists said they expect to make hundreds of deliveries for the holiday.

Between 10,000 and 20,000 roses will change hands Sunday in Manhattan, they estimated.

"We put in a lot of hours," said Connie Lee, owner of Kistner's Flowers and Greenhouses.

While Valentine's Day is always the busiest time of the year for florists, this year will be a little different, Karen Medlin, owner of Westloop Floral, said.

"Because it falls on a weekend, deliveries will be more spread out than usual," she said.

Medlin said today will be a big day for deliveries because people like to have flowers sent to the workplace.

Jan Miller, owner of Steve's Floral, said she agrees.

"People like to send flowers to the office to show their honey that they're truly in love," Miller said.

While roses are by far the most popular Valentine's gift, many options are available, said Nancy Saathoff, salesperson at Dillons floral department.

"A lot of people do balloons and flowers," Saathoff said.

Medlin said that flower arrangements in keepsake containers are also very popular.

Many florists offer arrangements with names such as "You Send Me," "Cherished Expressions" or "Mugs and Kisses."

The less expensive arrangements, starting at about $30, typically feature daisies and carnations, Miller said.

For $50, more exotic arrangements are available, such as groupings of stargazer lilies and alstroemeria.

While prices naturally vary, most florists have to charge a little more during the holiday, especially for roses.

"It's not an inexpensive time to buy roses," Miller said.

Medlin said the cost increase can be attributed to supply and demand. Growers charge more around Valentine's Day, and some of this is passed on to the consumer.

"We try to absorb most of the price increase ourselves," Medlin said.

Bill Patzell, owner of Manhattan Floral Co., said that the supply of roses can't keep up with the high demand.

"The growers can't grow roses all year long," he said, "and you just can't put them in a freezer for six months like you would a steak."

Shower the bride with fun, games

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

When a couple announces its engagement, it's time to start planning a bridal shower.

Maids of honor, bridesmaids, relatives, close friends or co-workers are usually host to showers, according to Beverly Clark's book, "Showers."

More recently, it has become an accepted norm for the immediate family to have the shower at its home.

While keeping in mind the budget and amount of space available, the first task of the hosts is to invite guests.

It is helpful to consult with the bride regarding the guest list or, if it's a surprise, to contact the bride's mother and fiancé to compile a list.

Invitations should be sent no later than three to four weeks in advance, said Clark in her book.

Included in the invitation should be the name of the host, the name of the person the shower is honoring, the date and time of the shower, address of the shower with specific travel directions, RSVP with the telephone number and the shower theme.

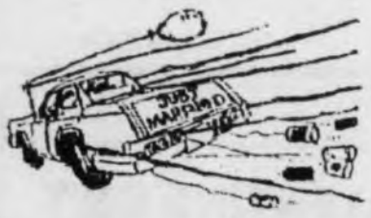
Some original shower themes from Clark's book include a miscellaneous shower (for co-ed parties), gift basket showers (where guests bring a basket, box or container filled with goods for a designated area of the house), or kitchen, hobby, recipe, entertaining, lingerie or honeymoon shower.

Whatever the theme, guests should be notified of theme-related requirements or of hints the couple has provided.

To reduce costs, Clark suggests having the shower at home or in a friend's backyard.

She also suggests buying food and liquor at a wholesale outlet, eliminating alcohol in exchange for exotic fruit drinks, creating floral arrangements of one's own and using balloons for color.

Pat Leikam, manager of Mr. P's Party Outlet, said people should consider using the same colors at the wedding and matching the wedding design.



"You can find a lot of inexpensive decorations if you plan the occasion yourself and don't get too fancy," Leikam said.

Garland, streamers and honeycomb bells are commonly used.

Showers usually include socializing, opening gifts and games.

Clark suggests designing the bride's gown from toilet paper or using wrapping paper from the gift.

Themes revolve around more than the wedding style

If you're invited to a lot of weddings this year plan to see larger, more formal affairs, and some that revolve around themes.

Area retailers said although wedding gowns are simpler than in past few years, sizes and formality of weddings are increasing.

Melinda Bauer, Swan's Formal Wear store manager, said the brides she has worked with recently have chosen dresses with less beads and straighter skirts.

She said the size of the average wedding party is approximately four attendants.

"We saw a decrease in the number of bridesmaids in the last year, but the numbers are starting to increase again," Bauer said.

Brides have also started planning their weddings around common themes.

Bauer said she has worked with brides who used Victorian and Renaissance themes.

Holly Campbell, senior in animal sciences and industry, said she doesn't necessarily consider it a theme, but she is planning a formal wedding in July.

"We wanted to do something formal and nice, and carry it through the whole ceremony," she said.

Karen Medlin, owner of Westloop Floral, said she hasn't worked with a lot of theme weddings, but she has seen the trend in flowers move toward brighter and bigger.

Brides used to use all white flowers, Medlin said, but lately she has made larger bouquets with more color, especially several different shades of one color.

Fresh flowers are more common than in the past.

Medlin said because flowers can be flown in from all over the world, brides don't have to worry about what flowers are in season.

"Just about anything anyone wants we can get in for them," she said.

One place where themes are popping up is in cakes.

Janice Hill, owner of Vern's Donuts and Cakes said the most popular themes are English.

English-style cakes are made with a smooth, satiny icing and delicate icing lattice work.

Hill said foreign cake styles are a big change from cakes of the past that were made with a lot of icing and big borders.

One of the more interesting theme wedding cakes she made was a guitar and banjo cake for a Western wedding.

Brides are also spending more time picking out their cakes than in the past, Hill said.

"People used to order their cakes by phone and not really care what you did with it.

"People are spending more time with their cakes than they used to," she said. "They want to be different."

Another way a bride can be different is in her selection of a China pattern.

Betty Campbell, owner of Campbell's Gifts, said more brides have been interested in having China this year than in recent years.

"Many girls have had an apartment while in college and have informal things, so they want China, crystal and flatware," Betty Campbell said.

Popular styles no longer have large designs, she said. Instead, they have delicate designs, quite often in gold, around the edges.

Bright colors are especially popular for casual dinner wear.

She said jewel tones are being selected by a lot of brides.

Whatever the design, Betty Campbell said brides are paying more attention to coordinating a whole look.

Holly Campbell said the dinner wear she has in mind is a simple ivory or white pattern with a small design on the edges.

"You can dress it up with table cloths and napkins, but you can still use it for things other than really special occasions," she said.

Brides can have their cake and eat it too

"I try to get the couple excited about the cake beforehand, but they seem really excited when it all comes together."

JANICE HILL
OWNER OF VERN'S DONUTS & CAKES

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

As a bride-to-be, you're bound to be faced with a lot of questions when choosing a cake.

Laurie Paul, manager and decorator at Vern's Donuts & Cakes, said brides should be prepared to provide adequate information about the wedding when beginning the search for the perfect cake.

The wedding date, approximate number of guests, colors of the wedding and where the wedding is needed in cake selection.

Janice Hill, owner and head decorator at Vern's, said she recommends taking the time to look over the many options available when making a decision.

She encourages her customers to make an appointment with her so the brides can study pictures as she studies their responses.

By watching the brides, she said she can get a feel for what they like and dislike and can help narrow the many possibilities.

Cake prices are usually determined by the number of guests it will serve.

Paul said a wedding cake for 250 guests would cost approximately $350. Additional costs include flowers, ribbon or top pieces.

Karla Lesslie, owner of Karla's Cakes & Balloons in Topeka, said cakes with a fountain are very popular, but because there are so many varieties of cakes, it's hard to tell what's the most common overall.

Lesslie said approximately 50 percent of brides choose to have a special cake for the groom. These are usually chocolate and often sculptured cakes.

One cake trend is to relate it to the groom's last name. For example, someone by the last name of Castle would have a castle-shaped cake.

Hill said it's wise to get with the decorators at least six months in advance. There are times when she has had overnight notice, but she said this can be hard on the bride.

"Girls who plan ahead and have professionals decorate the cake are probably the most happily married because they don't have the burden," Hill said.

"I try to get the couple excited about the cake beforehand, but they seem really excited when it all comes together."

There have been times where Hill has received hugs, bouquets and thank you cards for her work.

"My wedding was very special to me, so I try to do the same for my customers because it's something they'll remember for the rest of their life," Hill said.

Diamonds are always a girl's best friend

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

KRISTI HUMSTON
Collegian

The right ring involves more than the right fit.

Charles Elliott, of Reed & Elliott Jewelers, said choosing jewelry is no easy task, and when you're dealing with diamonds, it's important to see a certified gemologist.

"Getting a bargain in diamonds is like stopping a clock to save time," Elliott said.

"Diamonds are never on sale — ever — because they are not a perishable product. The price is the same worldwide," he said.

Elliott said individuals should know about the business they are buying from and look for a person who has gone to school and learned about the field.

As for diamonds, he suggests asking to see the gem under a binocular microscope because there is more to a diamond than what meets the untrained eye.

"The four C's of diamonds — cut, color, clarity and carat weight are important factors, " Elliot said.

He also said to investigate other variables. Find out if the diamond was heat treated, dyed or enhanced. If there are differences, have these explained by someone who is qualified.

Rob Briman, manager of Briman's Leading Jewelers in Topeka, said jewelry isn't trendy like the clothing industry, and styles do not drastically change from year to year.

Popular styles, however, still exist.

Elliott said yellow gold, the marquis cut and 3/8 to 1/2 carat weight stones, not necessarily in this combination, remain top choices.

Briman said it's important to provide many suggestions for new customers and show a wide selection of designs to narrow the field.

The finer details, such as quality and size, are concentrated on at a later time when individuals have an idea of what look they want.

As far as who should choose the engagement ring, Elliott said he feels this is a matter of personal preference.

"It's nice if the woman has some choice, but the cost is the gentleman's decision," he said.

The advantage of choosing a ring together is that both can get what they want.

Elliott suggested the couple communicate before setting out to shop so they know what the other has in mind.

"We are involved with the happiness business," he said. "We are working with nature's rarest and most precious treasures, which can become heritage items."

Love & Marriage

For some students, the tasks of studying for tests, working a part-time job and managing money is just a portion of their lives.

These students have decided to add marriage to the mix.

"Anytime you set up a household, there is an extra stress," Betsy Bergen, associate professor of human development and family studies, said.

Bergen said a married student has much of the same problems of a single student, except the problems can be intensified when two people are involved.

Mike and Michelle Smith got married five years ago while they were in the military.

Michelle Smith, sophomore in political science, said although taking one's spouse into consideration can increase stress, the advantages far outweigh any disadvantages.

"You can't just do the things you want to do, you have to check with your partner. It can be both good and bad," she said.

"I went out a lot more when I was single," Mike Smith, junior in nuclear engineering, said.

"I study more now. My priorities have changed," he said.

Bergen said being considerate of one's partner is a responsibility married students must assume.

"Sometimes one of us will be in the mood to study and the other will be like, 'What do you want to do?'" Michelle Smith said.

She said it is possible tell a roommate to shut up, but people can't say that to their partners.

"When you're married you can't think about just one person anymore," she said.

Getting used to being with someone and realizing there's someone else to think about is the main difference between single life and being married, Mike Cline, graduate student in geography, said.

Juggling schedules can also be frustrating to married students, Bergen said.

"It's hard to go to school and be married at the same time," Amy Cline, senior in English, said.

"I feel he should be my first priority, but school demands a lot of my time," she said.

Bergen said married students usually want to be financially independent of their parents.

Single students can easily ask for assistance from a parent when dealing with an unexpected expense, Bergen said.

If something goes wrong while single, there is always that safety net of going home to parents, Michelle Smith said.

"You don't have that when your married," she said.

"Generally money is a stress," Bergen said.

She said most married students feel guilty when they are unable to support themselves.

◀ Mike and Amy Cline must balance their lives as students with their married life. Mike is a graduate student in geography, and Amy is a senior in English. They have been married just more than a year and are both from Snyder, Texas.

Mike and Amy Cline have been married for one year. Now that they are married, Mike said he feels they should be more responsible with their finances.

"My parents are still helping out. They do anytime we need it. We don't ask for it, but it's kind of nice," Amy said.

"Being married, at least I feel, you don't have that option to pick up and go back to your parents," Michelle Smith said.

She said both of their parents would be there for them but would check to see if they had exhausted all other avenues.

Working together on household chores is one way to eliminate stress, she said.

"We don't have a set pattern of who does what, it is usually just whoever falls into the rhythm of it," Michelle Smith said.

They share the responsibility of meal-making, Mike Smith said.

"Sometimes she calls and sometimes I call," he said.

Living with someone can be difficult for people who were used to live by themselves.

Before they got married, they both lived alone, Amy Cline said. She said when she wanted to leave her house messy she could. Now she has to be considerate of Mike.

"After a few months, I realized cleaning day was Saturday," Mike Cline said. "We share the other duties."

Although married life includes a list of new concerns and problems, none of the couples find the single life alluring, they said.

"I don't have to worry about finding a date for a special event," Mike Cline said. "It's a good experience to be married to someone who's your best friend. I'm just as happy as can be."

"My single friends can get away with things, I can't," Mike Smith said.

The other facets of single life are not as appealing, he said.

"I feel like I've gotten my life together, and I'm moving on," he said. "Some of my single friends are still looking for the answer."

"All I need is one wife, a house and 2.3 kids," Mike Smith said. "I'm in search of a simple life."

He said he can have all that with Michelle. There is no doubt of where he wants to go, he said.

Proposals becoming creative, memorable

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

As he dropped to one knee he drew her closer. "Will you marry me?" he whispered breathlessly.

This may seem like the perfect storybook proposal.

Today's proposals are leaning toward the creative side. Men are inventing unique ways to make their proposals memorable.

Proposals have been announced via the scoreboard at a K-State home football game. Another proposal was aired through Manhattan Cable Ads on the local cable station.

Wes Timm, senior in landscape architecture, recently proposed to his girlfriend, Lisa Leuthold, senior in music performance, during a slide show at a banquet for the K-State Marching Band.

Timm said he chose to propose at the banquet because he knew it would be special to Leuthold.

The slide show ended with Timm hiding behind a sign that said, "Would you marry me?" and the next slide showed him holding a sign that said,"Please Lees."

"I knew it would make the evening special to her," he said. "She was a little stunned."

Others choose not to pop the question in front of a large crowd.

Julie Burke, senior in elementary education, was proposed to at a restaurant on the Plaza in Kansas City, Mo.

At the restaurant she was embarrassed when her husband-to-be, Leroy Burke Jr., asked the waitress to move them to a different table three times.

He wanted to create the perfect atmosphere, Leroy Burke said.

He then excused himself from the table, and when he returned, the waiter brought Burke a silver tray covered by a silver dome.

Under the dome she found a ring box.

As she opened it, he asked, "What's the answer?"

She said, "What's the question?"

Then he asked,"Will you marry me?"

He said he chose the restaurant because it was a place a person could remember forever. He said she was so excited she couldn't finish her lunch.

Haley Minton, senior in speech pathology, said her proposal was not very shocking.

Minton said the surprise came when she returned from a two-week trip to the Netherlands, and her boyfriend, John Pringle, mentioned marriage.

"We had talked about it, and we had picked out a ring," Minton said. "Him asking was almost a formality."

Pringle asked her when they were hanging around his apartment.

Minton said the proposal was sweet, but it was not an unexpected surprise.

"Everybody should concentrate on their marriages, not their weddings," she said.

And as for the storybook proposal. ... She looked deep into his eyes and said "yes."

tied about one week early, Reed said.

Kimmins orders the flowers from Kansas City-area wholesalers.

Because the club takes fewer flowers from the wholesalers than florists do, they do not always know which colors they will receive.

"We always get red roses, but with the carnations we get what we get," Reed said.

Once the flowers arrive, Reed said, it takes 15 to 20 club members three hours or more to arrange all of the vases.

Kimmins said he expects this year to be another sell-out.

Bachelor, bachelorette parties remain a tradition

MELISSA PRENGER
Collegian

Men, beer and strippers.

Male-bonding of this nature can be defined as bachelor party entertainment, and strippers are still a main source of entertainment.

Blake Logan, senior in accounting and management, said he attended a bachelor party in December that included strippers.

Logan said the party consisted of about 30 men going to a strip bar.

"We taped 40 to 50 one-dollar bills all over his (the fiance's) body and the strippers took them off as seductively as possible," Logan said.

Logan said the bride was okay with the idea of her fiance having a bachelor party and even going to a strip bar, but he wasn't sure if she knew about the one-dollar bills taped to his body.

Kelly Thompson, senior in landscape architecture, said he played cards, barbecued and drank beer at his friend's bachelor party.

"It was just a bunch of guys getting together to have a party. We didn't have any strippers," Thompson said.

Thompson said they didn't have strippers at the party because they didn't want to upset the bride.

Sometimes the best man doesn't consult the bridegroom before planning the party.

"I planned a surprise bachelor party when I was the best man. He didn't know there were going to be strippers or even a party at all," Brad Bell, senior in landscape architecture, said.

It's true that the unexpected can and sometimes does happen at bachelor parties.

"We shaving-creamed the groom's legs and shaved them the night before his wedding," Dean Frost, specialist U.S. Army, said.

A lot of brides accept the idea of a bachelor party.

"It's common for the bride to have her own bachelorette party," Michelle Swim, senior in social sciences, said.

"I think it's one of the last times you get together with high-school and college friends to have a good time before you make a lifetime commitment," Swim said.

Swim said the bachelorette party she attended was first a bridal shower and then a bachelorette party.

"The bride opened her shower gifts and then we went to Aggieville. We got her drunk, made guys kiss her and buy her roses," Swim said.

Nickie Peacher, senior in elementary education, said she thinks that couples have to really trust each other to allow bachelor and bachelorette parties to take place.

Peacher said her cousin (bride) and her cousin's fiance decided to have their bachelorette and bachelor parties on the same night.

She said the couple agreed to discuss their parties afterwards, but not before, because they didn't want to make each other feel guilty.

Peacher said the couple agreed to include strippers in both parties.

"I think having strippers at bachelor and bachelorette parties is okay," Peacher said.

Whether there is bonding or beer for the occasion, strippers and bars are popular sources of entertainment for bachelor and bachelorette parties.

Smatterings

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

Happy Valentine's Day, you slimy sleazeball

Any woman looking for that special mate would do well to hop the next 747 to Italy or France, where the men have been bestowed a gracious title, indeed.

Harlequin, the publisher of those high-brow romance epics, surveyed more than 5,000 women in 14 countries in an attempt to find out which country harbored the most romantic men. The mushy results are in, and those darn Europeans ran away with the prize again.

Well, most of them, anyway.

While the French and Italian fellows wept with joy at the honor, the men of Germany, Japan and Poland had their egos chewed up and spit back out by most of the responders.

Finishing 12th, 13th and 14th, respectively, these poor guys couldn't cut the proverbial Dijon mustard in such categories as charm, sexiness, remembering their first date with their partner, and the all-important remembering their partner's underwear size (which 54 percent of Australian men did).

American men finished up somewhere in the middle of the list, charting a respectable 7th in the sexiness area, but an embarrassing 11th in charm.

That's OK, though, because we're firing our coach.

What people do in Alaska to pass the time

While some are obsessed with tracking down Big Foot, and others believe in the Abominable Snowman, a group of small newspapers in Alaska are searching for the Hairy Man.

The Hairy Man is a creature of Alaskan folklore, gone berserk ever since last month, when three schoolteachers stomped around the snow with big plywood feet. Apparently, they had no more homework to grade and got antsy.

The next thing you know, the police of the remote town of Quinhagak are getting worried calls from parents. The teachers broke down under brutal interrogation and apologized, but days later parents were still asking for police escorts as their children went house to house.

The newspapers fanned the flames by asking readers to send in stories about Hairy Man.

"People here really do believe it, and I respect that," said James MacPherson, editor of a local newspaper, the Tundra Drums.

When checking into this, we made several remarkable discoveries of some lesser known Alaskan legends, including Short Man, Handsome Man, Considerate Man, Good Driving Record Man and the terrifying Small-Bladder Man.

'I especially like the use of the Crayolas on this particular work'

Every year the Manchester Academy of Fine Art in Great Britain must choose 150 works of art, out of more than 1,000 submissions, to display in their annual six-week show at the City Art Gallery in Manchester.

This year, an abstract work called "Rhythm of the Trees" by artist Carly Johnson made the final cut. It was described by the academy's seven judges as evoking "a certain quality of color, balance, composition and technical skill."

Everyone was thrilled. Until it became known that the artist was 4 years old.

"It proves anybody can do modern art," said Helen Johnson, Carly's mother and freelance artist.

Academy president, Glenys Latham, said she isn't embarrassed.

"Remember that the art of children often has an innocence, an unplotted quality, which adults often strive to gain."

Oh yes, we forgot about that.

The amusing thing here is that someone in Ireland bought "Rhythm of the Trees" for $420 last Wednesday.

MO' MOVIES

"Marquis" will shock some and leave others laughing at 7 p.m. tonight in the Union Little Theater. Admission is $1.75.

Thriving On Thrift

Suede clothe jacket by Glenbrooke, four dollars. Striped polyester vest by Re-N Knits, fifty cents. White blouse by Shapely, one dollar and fifty cents. Black leather shoes by the Army, four dollars. Model– Julie Khan, senior in English.

As I walked in the door, the dank smell enveloped me, bringing me further and further into the spell of a shop decorated with the priceless pieces of memorabilia left-over from someone else's life.

Thrift stores are becoming more popular these days. The old and young come together in a place where their ages and incomes aren't a concern anymore.

Roger Andres, part-owner of Grandma's Trunk Thrift Shop, said many types come to the shop.

"Everybody, from really old to really young, comes here to shop or just to browse. We get people from all walks of life — military, students, older people, the poor, the better off — the list goes on," Andres said.

"People aren't as embarrassed to be caught shopping in thrift stores anymore. That's why there is such a variety of people here."

Chad Swiercinsky, sophomore in architectural engineering, said he looks for the most outrageous clothes to buy.

"I buy anything that is fully ugly or really groovin'. No undies or socks. That's disgusting. It's cheaper when you know you're just going to be cutting the clothes up," he said.

Some shop for special occasion clothes.

"I came here to look for some disco-type clothes. Our fraternity is having a party, and I need something to wear," Brian Griffith, sophomore in hotel and restaurant management, said.

Julee Nelson, senior in pre-nursing and Bridget Mahoney, senior in interior design, had the same idea at a different store. They were at Unicorn Treasure Chest Thrift Shop.

"We're going to a party tonight, and we need some disco-polyester clothes," Nelson said, as Mahoney pulled a red jumper off the rack for a look of approval.

"I think that this store has the best selection of costume clothes. I usually come here first," Nelson said.

Melody Smith and her husband opened the Unicorn four years ago.

"We used to live in Texas, and I owned a shop there. When we moved up here, we opened this one," Smith said.

As it turns out, Smith and Andres are brother and sister.

"At about the same time I opened a store in Texas, my parents opened Grandma's Trunk. It was an idea my mom had had for a long time.," Smith said. "We'd always talked about opening a thrift shop, and then we both did it around the same time, almost unknowingly."

Both stores accept donations.

"We usually don't buy clothes from people. We do, however, buy pots, pans, furniture, appliances and knickknacks. Most of the time we don't have room for anything else because all of our space is filled. What we don't use we donate to the Topeka Rescue Mission. They pick stuff up once every four to six weeks," Andres said.

Smith has 4,000 square feet of basement filled mainly with clothing.

"Being on Poyntz, we can't have the shop looking cluttered and messy. So, much of what we can't put out is stored in the basement. I go through it all the time to keep a good selection in the store," she said.

Another shop that opened last August is Aggies New To You, owned by Leo and Tok Henderson.

The Hendersons decided to open the store to get rid of some stuff they had in storage.

"My mother had passed away, and I had all of her things in storage. One day we decided to open a shop and sell the items that we didn't want anymore," Leo said.

"We don't have many donations — we buy a lot of our stuff from dealers and auctions," Tok said.

Aggies New To You is more streamlined than the other two.

"We sell mainly Levi's, army fatigues, army boots and baby clothes. We don't have the space to stock everything," Leo said.

Ayhn Moxley, senior in apparel design, said she shops at thrift stores a lot.

"I look for little knickknacks and stuff that you don't need. Sometimes if I need a crock pot or a pan, I'll look at thrift stores because I can't justify spending the money on something that I won't use much," she said.

Students can buy appliances and furniture cheaply at the stores.

"I've been checking out furniture for when I move into a house or an apartment. I haven't bought anything yet, but it doesn't hurt to look," Griffith said.

Many shoppers go to the stores just to browse.

"I wander through and see if I can find any good deals on things that I can use. Generally, I look for things I can use in the house," Adam Samenfeld, sophomore in engineering, said.

The wander-through method is popular with regulars.

"Most of our customers browse around. They don't come here looking for anything in particular," Kayte Gilligan, Unicorn Treasure Chest employee, said.

Owning a thrift store is more a passion than a money-maker.

"I started picking through allies and trash cans when I was younger. Now look where it got me. It's kind of a disease. You've got to like it to do it because it's too damn much work," Smith said.

Ripped up chair from Kansas City area thrift store, twenty dollars. Lamp from Grandma's Trunk, Manhattan, two dollars and fifty cents. Cat Valentine from beneath the chair, priceless.

Classes resume in KU buildings after chemical leak

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE — Classes resumed in five University of Kansas buildings that were evacuated and closed after a chemical leak, but officials said Thursday they still don't know what caused the leak or where it started.

Mike Russell, environmental health and safety officer for the university's Environmental Health and Safety Service, said the chemical involved Wednesday was a mercaptan compound, a smelly substance added to odorless gases to make them detectable.

Marvin, Lindley, Malott and Wescoe halls, and the Art and Design Building were evacuated late Wednesday morning after students reported an odor at Lindley Hall.

A handful of students and a Lawrence firefighter, Capt. Don Beckner, suffered headaches, nausea and dizziness after being exposed to fumes from the chemical. Beckner was taken to Lawrence Memorial Hospital, where he was treated and released.

Russell said the highest concentration of mercaptan was found in a vacant laboratory at Malott Hall. There was no solid evidence to show the substance had leaked, and there was no proof it was spilled, he said.

Another mystery, Russell said, was why a high concentration of the chemical was found in Lindley Hall, located northwest of Malott.

Russell said he couldn't think of any reason the chemical would have been used at Lindley. It's possible the chemical fumes got into the sewage system or into steam tunnels that connect several buildings on campus, he said.

Mercaptan is often used in the university's laboratories, Russell said.

VALENTINE'S DAY

Special day brings dancing and dining

Many greek houses plan formals, out-of-town trips to celebrate special day

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

As Valentine's Day rolls around, some greeks will be dressing up for a night of dancing and dinner throughout the weekend.

Pi Beta Phi's annual semi-formal, "Beau and Arrow," begins with dinner at 7 p.m. Saturday at the Manhattan Holidome.

"Beau and Arrow is a special tradition for us because all Pi Phi chapters have it as either a formal or semi-formal every year," said Alicia Miller, junior in speech pathology and audiology and social chairwoman for the sorority.

Alpha Gamma Rho will have its "Pink Rose Formal" Saturday at Wichita's Red Coach Inn.

"We will start the day off by going to the dog tracks at 1:30, and then we'll have dinner and a dance afterwards," said Adam Weigand, junior in animal science and president of the fraternity.

"The whole thing started with the idea of having an out-of-house retreat and taking it out-of-town," he said.

"We wanted to get everyone away from Manhattan for awhile and do some relaxing," Weigand said.

The Chi Omega's "White Carnation Ball" will be tonight at the Wareham Opera House.

"We have a formal every year but it's usually not a Valentine's Day party, it just happened to fall on this weekend," said Stephanie Schmutz, sophomore in sociology and social chairwoman of the sorority.

Delta Upsilon will be having a date party Saturday night at BJ's Catering. The theme is "Shot Through the Heart."

"It's just a casual dress party, but I am trying to get everyone to at least wear red," said Eric Laune, sophomore in marketing and social chairman for the fraternity.

Kappa Sigma will be having its annual spring formal from 8 p.m. to 12 a.m. Saturday at the Wareham Opera House.

"We usually have an alumni dinner, which includes a pig roast, but dinner won't be provided this year." said Len Pelzel, junior in finance and treasurer for the fraternity.

Valentine's will be a weekend filled with many greeks dining and dancing with Cupid's arrow.

Looking for a way to WIN

◀Susan Yow and Jan Chance her assistant coach notice a mistake and contemplate how to eliminate it before their next game.

It all started with an ad in the Collegian on Jan. 22.

The ad wanted two male practice players to scrimmage against the Lady Cat basketball team on a regular basis.

K-State coach Susan Yow said she never expected the response she received.

"We had a tremendous response to the ad," she said. "We took the first eight players that called. Then, we had over 15 calls the next day."

Since then, both the team and the coach have been pleased with the eight men who have come to play, with the ultimate goal of improving the team.

"These guys are great," Yow said. "They are a very special group of people. They are just perfect.

"They keep their egos intact. They never let up."

Having men practice with the women's squad is not new to Yow.

"I did it when I was at East Tennessee State about six years ago," she said. "The NCAA banned it until last year when the NCAA passed legislation to allow guys practice again."

The players, too, said they enjoy having the men at the practices.

"The competition we receive is great," Kelly Moylan said. "They are aggressive and play quicker. To go against their pressure and quickness is great. Their quickness and talent has made us play better.

"They are some pretty special guys to go scrimmage against us."

Yow said her staff is happy with the men's performance in practice.

"The coaching staff has been more than pleased with their efforts," she said. "They do a good job of being the opponent.

"They are more physical and quicker than most Big Eight teams."

For the men, it's a chance to display their basketball talents — and they said they aren't afraid to give it their best.

"It's not good for the team if we don't go all out," Verne Claussen, junior in business administration, said. "But we play sportsmanlike so we don't hurt any players.

"I think they're improving steadily," said Claussen, who started at Alma-Wabaunsee. "They have been gaining confidence since the Kansas game."

Dana Pollock looks to avoid being trapped by the opposing defense of Greg Dyer, a graduate student in english and Verne Claussen.

All eight of the men played in high school.

"We try to give them the best competition possible," Grant Janke, junior in finance, said.

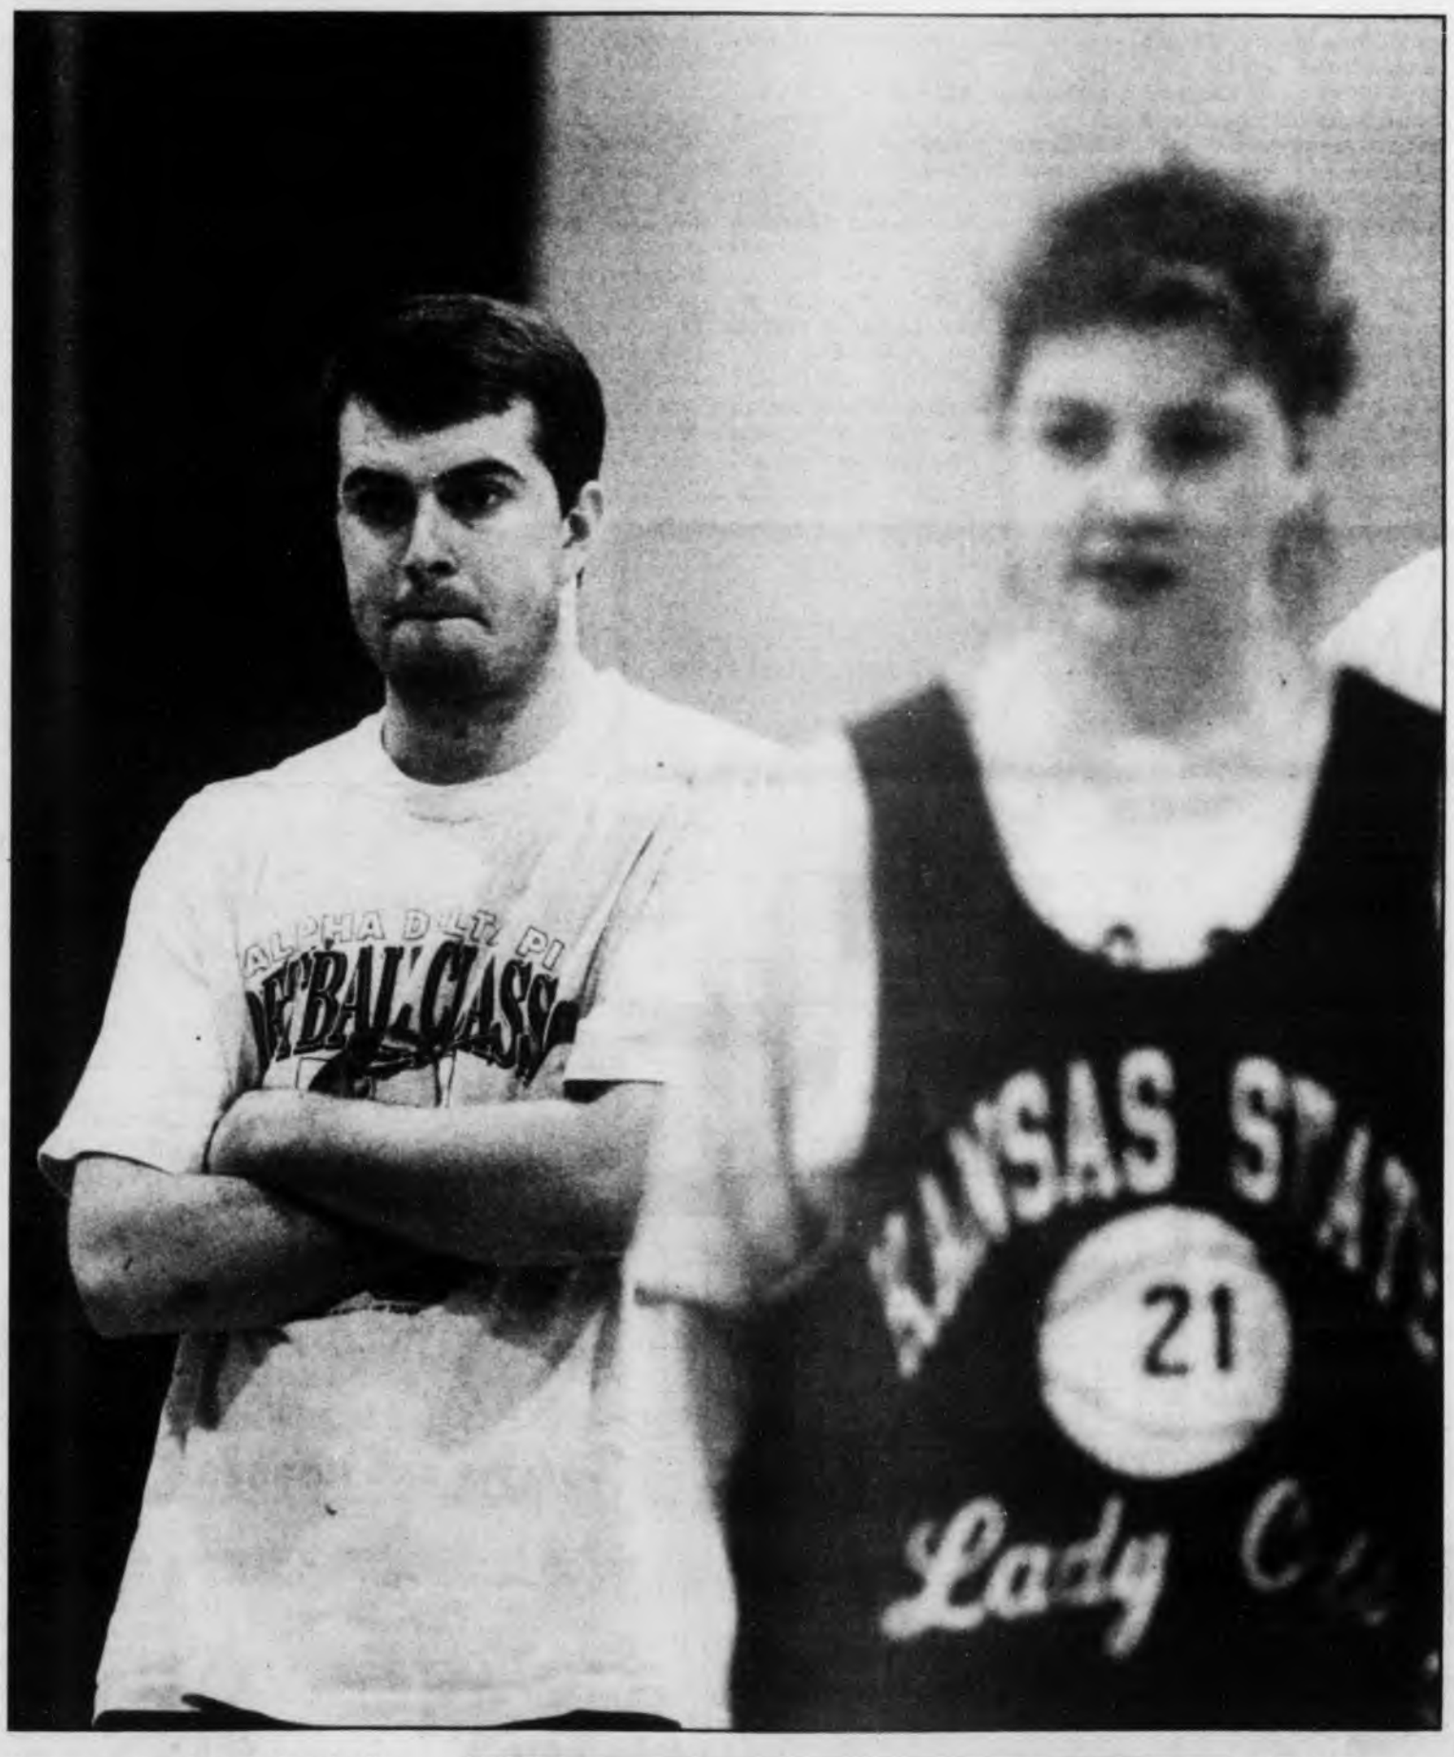
"They are having a lot easier time scoring," said Janke, a two-year high school starter who was recruited by Baker and Bethany Colleges. "They are working the ball better."

Both the men and the team said they have made several, new relationships since they got together.

"I think the neatest thing is that we're developing friendships," Moylan said. "Some of them came out and watched us play."

And Janke said the new relationships makes it more fun to watch the Lady Cats.

"They're fun to watch," he said. "It's great to watch them play since I have gotten to know them."



Yow said she hopes the practices turn into victories.

"If we continue to practice against them, we should get some wins," she said.

Brian Gates, sophomore in agricultural economics, said he has seen improvement.

"They are one step from being competitive in the Big Eight," he said.

The other males who scrimmage against the Lady Cats are Mark Cook, senior in education; Greg Dyer, graduate student in English; Dale Silvius, junior in business management; Dale Sixbury, senior in computer science; and David Palmer, junior in hotel and restaurant management.

◀Dale Silvius, a junior in hotel and restaurant management and accounting. Looks and listens while the team receives instrucitons from the coaches. Due to an unusually small squad the Lady Cats placed an advertisement in the Collegian for men to practice with them two to three times a week.

Suspect in murder of CIA employees remains at large

ASSOCIATED PRESS

QUETTA, Pakistan — A 28-year-old Pakistani wanted by the United States quietly slipped back into the country, then disappeared just before he was accused of murdering two CIA employees in Virginia, relatives said Thursday.

The Pakistani government promised to track down the suspect, Mir Aimal Kansi, and extradite him to the United States for trial. But family members and friends insisted he was innocent.

Kansi was charged Tuesday with capital murder in the Jan. 25 deaths of Lansing Bennett, 66, and Frank Darling, 28, both CIA employees. Two other agency employees and a third man were wounded when a gunman shot point-blank into cars waiting at a stoplight to turn into the agency's headquarters.

Fairfax County Police Chief Michael Young said there was no known motive for the shootings at CIA headquarters in McLean, Va.

Kansi had been living in the United States since early 1991 and last worked as a courier for the son of a former high-ranking CIA agent who became an outspoken critic of the agency. The courier service made deliveries to CIA headquarters, but Kansi was not cleared to enter the CIA compound.

He was implicated in the attack after a man with the surname Kansi bought an airline ticket from Washington to Pakistan the day after the shootings. A Chinese-made AK-47 assault rifle found Monday in his Reston, Va., apartment was identified as the murder weapon, and fingerprints found on shell casings at the shooting scene matched those in his immigration files, officials said.

Family members said he came back about two-and-a-half weeks ago to Quetta, his hometown in the southwestern province of Baluchistan, but left on Sunday, saying he was going back to the United States, family sources said.

Pakistani intelligence and other law enforcement officers suspect he may have slipped across the border into Afghanistan or Iran.

An FBI team was expected in Pakistan next week to coordinate the search with the government, Interior Minister Shujaat Hussein said.

Hussein said Pakistan was prepared to turn Kansi over to U.S. authorities, and in Washington, State Department spokesman Richard Boucher said an extradition treaty with Pakistan would apply to this case.

Hussein and others denied any connection between Kansi and a Pakistani politician with the same last name killed in 1984. They said Gul Hasan Kansi, a member of the martial law government of former dictator Gen. Mohammed Zia ul-Haq, was killed by a nephew in a land dispute.

Pakistan's English- and Urdu-language newspapers carried short front-page stories about the search for Kansi. But the stories have generated little interest in Pakistan, where the CIA is often blamed for all the country's ills.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Reader's rude friends have worn out their welcome

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I've often pondered whether your letters from readers are for real — or just the result of an over-sexed (or perhaps under-sexed), restless, creative and bored MALE journalist.

Vibrators, threesomes, sex, lies and unknown videotaping? Come on! It sounds more like the Geraldo show than northeast Kansas.

I doubt all these poor souls with these deep-seeded sexual and emotional problems would take time out from their mental breakdowns to write to an anonymous self-proclaimed expert on everything from parking lot prostitutes to two lesbians begging to have sex with their male roommate.

The word on the street is that the Collegian staff gets a little delirious around the 4 a.m. deadline and laughs all the way to the presses. The huddled masses foolishly believe these sexual, psychotic trysts are genuine. This breeds suspicion and distrust among the ranks of K-Staters as everyone scans the Union Stateroom for the culprit of the latest scandal.

Cassie, I beg of you, dear sister in "womanhood," shake off your shackles of deceit and come clean for the good of the campus. Those anonymous cryptic scribblings fester in the souls of all true and honest Wildcats.

Go forth, and discover not only your true identity, but some real problems as well.

Amethyst and Co.

DEAR AMETHYST AND CO.,

Let's talk, sister.

I have never, ever made up a letter. I know some of them seem difficult to believe, but I receive about five letters every day.

Obviously, some of the letters are fakes sent in by accounting students hell-bent on having a wild time.

But don't be naive. Just because we live in northeast Kansas doesn't mean people here don't have the same problems, sexual escapades and parking difficulties that other Americans have.

My identity? What fun would the column be if you knew? I'll give you a few hints though — I am a junior, have brown hair, brown eyes and am every bit a woman.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a dilemma. I have some friends who are wearing out their welcome — fast. I really like these people and enjoy their company occasionally, but they don't know when enough is enough.

They come to my house about every night, enter without knocking and make themselves at home. They eat and drink my food and drinks, change the TV channels while I'm watching a program and listen to my stereo whenever they feel like it.

My roommate and I can't get our homework done because of all the people coming in and out. How can we tell them to please respect our privacy, knock before they enter and to bring their own damn snacks when they come over — without hurting their feelings?

We are at our wits end. We really like them but feel like we have to leave our own house to be alone. If they would call before coming over, we could tell them we are busy and don't want company, but they don't call first.

Wanting to be left alone

DEAR PUSHOVER,

These rude friends are driving you nuts because you allow it. It's your home, and you make the rules — not them.

Be assertive and honest. The next time they come over lay down the law. Explain that you value your privacy and do not appreciate people dropping in, eating your food and making themselves at home. Tell them that you enjoy their company and friendship, but in the future they will call before coming over, or you will invite them.

Don't worry about hurting their feelings or trying to use velvet gloves. The only way people this rude will get the message is if you spell it out to them. They might be upset for a few days, but they'll get over it.

Just because we are college students does not mean we can ignore common courtesy. Most of us are willing to tolerate drop-ins and other "intrusions" that would likely drive our parents crazy — but hospitality is not without its bounds.

Whenever I feel the need to hear your voice, I pick up the phone dial your number and pray that you are home. That short talk on the phone is all I need from you to know that I'm still loved by "blue". I Love You, Blue.

HEATHER, KAREN, Shelby, and Jami- Violets are blue, Roses are thorny, We know we'll have fun in Wichita, cause we're so happy. Love Ya, Doug, Mickey, Nester, Arnie.

HONEY: JUST wanted to let you know how much I care about you, and take this time to tell you Happy Valentine's Day. J.T.C.

JMB- I couldn't see the beautiful ring in the dark. When you asked me to marry you in the snowy park. On May 20th I'll say "I do," but you've already made all my wishes come true!! I love you, Bummypants

KARA, THANKS for a great one and one-half years! I'm looking forward for more to come. Happy V-Day. Love, Chris.

KAT: I love you. This is the first of many to follow. Hug the kids for me. Love P.

PAT- HAPPY Valentine's from your soon to be Mrs. G! Hugs and kisses and lots of love! Forever yours! Paulette

PAUL- YOU are my sunshine! Happy Valentine's Day! I love you! Forever, Tracie.

PIKES are the best! Happy Valentine's Day. Love, Mom.

SS: WORDS can not express the happiness you have given me these last two months. Give me a chance and I will give you the world. Forever be my Valentine. Love always M.B.

STEPHANIE, WE have both been involved in this relationship for five years now. We have shared the good times and the bad times together, so let's not give up now. We still have a life time to share with each other. Love always, Tim.

STERLING and SHARNEE'- I would be ever so happy to have you two be my Valentines. Love Momee.

THRISH- OOPS! I did it again! I may not be able to spell your name, but I can spell this: I love you! Happy Valentine's Day Sweetie! Chris.

UNCLE GARY; Would you be my Valentine? It won't cost much to feed me, how about dinner? Love Sharnee'.

YOUR ROYAL Highness. I might not be perfect. I never claimed to be. I would settle to be just your friend. Valentine would you do that for me? Rumppus Pumppus

A need for LEADERS

Cleaver calls for minority leadership, end to issue of skin color

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

Emanuel Cleaver, mayor of Kansas City, Mo., said in his speech Saturday at K-State's Multicultural Student Leadership Conference there is a need for new leaders in the areas of multiculturalism.

"The greatest challenge to Americans is to get the ridiculous and stupid issues of skin color behind us," Cleaver said.

Americans have dealt with this issue since 1619, when people from Europe came to America and noticed the difference in the color of the people already there, he said.

It is a problem today around the world, Cleaver said. He gave South Africa as an example.

"Even today, 20 million black South Africans, who have lived there since the dawn of creation, still cannot vote," he said.

There are many reasons for the misunderstandings of race, Cleaver said. He said people should take a long look at who they are and their heritage.

"We all want to be ahead of someone else. We are not satisfied unless we are ahead," he said. "Who we are and where we came from plays a major role."

He urged students to provide voices of leadership. He emphasized that without this kind of minority leadership, the future for the United States looks bleak.

"If the voices of leadership are not present, this nation is headed for trouble," he said. "The issue is to see people different and have it not matter."

Cleaver said most people today claim not to be racist. However, he said, it is important for everyone to be willing to make a change.

"No one is willing to admit it," he said. "We need people who reflect the beauty of America and not the beast. You can be an ordinary person for those extraordinary, difficult times."

Dawn Spivey, senior in sociology and member of the Multicultural Student Leadership Conference Planning Committee, said the conference helped promote minority leadership on campus.

"The purpose of the conference is to promote leadership and emphasize the importance of diversity," she said.

Spivey said about 200 people attended the conference, which included lunch and five multicultural workshops.

Students living in the residence halls next year will need a roll of quarters in addition to laundry detergent when visiting the laundry room.

Starting next fall, it will cost 75 cents for a wash and 25 cents for a dry in residence hall laundry rooms.

The main reason for the change was to balance short- and long-term goals, Chuck Werring, director of the Department of Housing and Dining Services, said.

"There is the long-term benefit of keeping rental rates lower over the long haul," Werring said.

The department is an independent agency. The only money it receives is from student rental fees. To combat shrinking numbers of students in the residence halls, rates are increasing.

In the past, laundry fees were budgeted into the residence hall fees. By removing the fee, rates will increase by 9.8 percent instead of 11.4 percent, and users of the laundry machines are responsible for the costs.

K-State is the only school in Kansas and the Big Eight Conference to offer free laundry services. About 2 percent of schools in the United States do not charge for laundry on a per-use basis. Most are private schools, Werring said.

The existing units can be used because they are already equipped with coin adapters. Revenue generated could be used to add machines in areas where there is a need.

Additional revenue can be used to fund other projects.

"We plan to do some things in the buildings such as add more computer rooms. This will help with the funding for those projects," Werring said.

By making the users more responsible for the service, abuses of the machines should be minimized. Abuses include underloading and usage by people off campus, Werring said.

Derek Jackson, Haymaker Hall director, said he has not heard any complaints from residents.

"They are just questioning why the change is being made and what the differences were that caused the change," Jackson said.

Other residents are also questioning the change.

"We pay so much money here already, and we don't really see where it goes," said Karen McEachen, freshman in occupational therapy and Ford Hall resident.

Some residents question whether the change will generate any additional money.

"I would definitely take my laundry home so I wouldn't have to pay here," said Tammy Macy, freshman in sociology and international studies and West Hall resident.

Mortar Board celebrates 75 years

Adult literacy, guest speaker highlights of week

B. CLAY MOORE
Collegian

The Mortar Board National Honor Society is celebrating its 75th anniversary this week.

The national organization was founded in 1918, and the K-State chapter was founded 10 years later. Mortar Board is celebrating by emphasizing literacy awareness as well as promoting interest in the society.

Mortar Board Vice President Dianne Pratt, senior in interior design, said the organization will have a table set up Wednesday in the K-State Union. She said members will be passing out brochures to make students aware of opportunities for volunteer work in adult literacy. Two short videos also will be displayed on literacy, she said.

"One of the videos is a condensed version of a film about a man who is grown," Pratt said. "He's in his late 40s and has gotten through life without reading. The film tells how he learned to read. I think people like that are incredibly talented in other ways."

The group passed fliers out last weekend in areas that may have high numbers of illiterate adults, Pratt said. The fliers announced the availability of tutorial services in the community.

Mortar Board was founded by the women of Swarthmore, Cornell, Ohio State and Michigan colleges. In 1928, a K-State organization known as XIX affiliated itself with Mortar Board.

Tammy Shearer, senior in accounting, is a historian for Mortar Board. She said men were accepted into the society during the 1976-77 school year. K-State's chapter now is almost 50 percent men, Shearer said.

"We emphasize scholarship, leadership and service," she said. "Our membership fluctuates from year to year, and this year we have around 33 members."

The society is in the process of accepting membership applications, which are available in the Union Activities Center. Applications for Mortar Board are due by 3 p.m. Feb. 26. New members will be announced on March 7.

Qualifications for membership in Mortar Board included a 3.3 cumulative G.P.A., junior standing and participation in service activities in the areas of scholarship and leadership.

This year, the society has sponsored environmental, as well as literacy projects, was host to President Wefald's guests at home football games, ushered at Convocation and Landon lectures, and coordinated K-State's first time as host of Kansas Academic Decathlon. The decathlon is a series of academic competitions for high-school students.

The society is also having a social gathering for members this week that will feature Kim Harms, a speaker on leadership.

Technical Center to celebrate at open house

Event will mark 25th anniversary with demonstrations, programs

NEIL ANDERSON
Collegian

The Manhattan Area Technical Center will have its annual open house tomorrow, marking the 25th Anniversary of the center.

The open house coincides with National Vocational Education Week. The event will take place from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m.

Pat Dunaway, information coordinator for the center, said with the computer world being such a large part of today's society, more and more people are interested in vocational education.

Vocational education teaches students to operate, maintain and repair the modern equipment, she said.

"They're not re-educating themselves, but updating," Dunaway said.

Dunaway said students and instructors will be involved in the open house. Students from different classes will put on demonstrations and greet guests at each program entrance. Instructors will be available to talk with guests during the day's activities.

Tables with applications for enrollment and financial aid, and other general information will be available for guests.

The center will have a radio remote from WIBW-FM 97.3 during the event. Other radio and television interviews were scheduled last week, Dunaway said.

Job statistics deceiving to grads

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

Deceiving statistics appear to be painting a pretty picture for some college graduates on the job-hunting scene.

According to the U.S. Department of Labor Bureau of Statistics, employment is supposed to increase 20 percent from what it was in 1990 by the year 2005. Tying in with that, the jobless rate declined to 7.1 percent in January.

So, what's the catch?

The Bureau's Occupational Outlook Handbook for 1992-93 shows the increase will occur in the jobs where prior experience and in-depth training are expected, leaving fewer openings for college graduates right out of school.

Now, those involved in health and business services can breathe a little easier.

Health-care majors are providing the most entry-level hiring, according to the handbook. Home health-care services, such as those of nursing homes and health practitioners, have projected the highest increases. Local want ads are a direct reflection of this, with several editions of the Kansas City Star covering three pages with unfilled nursing jobs.

The handbook also showed business services on the rise. Jobs are available in management information systems, especially for those who teach others how to use computers.

With the nation continuing its environmental focus, more openings have bloomed in the areas of engineers, geologists, biologists and chemists.

"We see a lot of business and engineering students," said Mercedes Downing, junior in secondary education and Career Planning and Placement Center employee. "We get the least amount of demand for students in the areas of human ecology."

Education, both private and public, is to add 2.3 million jobs to the 9.4 million created in 1990. Teaching jobs as well as aides, counselors, and administrative staffs are projected to increase.

"A lot of education majors come in," Downing said. "We send out credentials. We send out the individual's file to any school district they want to."

'Unprofessional' memo critical of Washburn

KU dean upset with funding, attacks law school

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

The sting Rex Walters felt as the coin smacked his face was nothing compared to the friction some fellow Lawrence residents are feeling this week.

In a memo addressed to University of Kansas Vice Chancellor Del Brinkman, Law School Dean Robert Jerry criticized the Washburn University law program, its professors and students.

The memo stated Jerry's disgruntlement about state funding of the Washburn Law School and the lack of funding for KU.

"This state support, when combined with the tuition dollars that the Washburn Law School gets to retain, has created a situation I never thought I would witness: Washburn Law School's resource base exceeding that of the KU School of Law," Jerry wrote.

"The state has assisted in the advance of a low-quality law school, with a faculty whose credentials cannot even compare to ours and with a student body of significantly lower quality."

Jerry continues by writing that there is room in Kansas for two law schools, as long as the KU School of Law is the only public one.

He said he thinks the state funding currently going to Washburn should be transferred to KU's budget, and Washburn should become a privately-funded law school.

"This would mean that high-quality Kansas residents would receive a state-subsidized education at KU; lower-quality Kansas residents would still have an option to get an education in Kansas (i.e. at Washburn)."

Dan Biles, a 1974 K-State graduate and 1977 Washburn Law School graduate, is the attorney for the Kansas Board of Education. He said Jerry's memo has been the biggest joke around the Statehouse but isn't being taken seriously.

"It has been a principal of discussion, but not during any of the official meetings. Sure, we have been talking about it between sessions, but we just laugh at how stupid he was to put his thoughts into print," Biles said.

There is speculation that the memo was released from within the KU Law School, Biles said. Tensions have been high in the law department following the sexual harassment allegations filed against a law professor.

The feuding in the KU Law School has sparked tempers, and some people at the Statehouse are speculating. However, there is no evidence to support the allegations at this time, he said.

Biles received a fax of the memo at his office in Overland Park but said he has no idea where it came from.

"I don't have any idea who sent it, but you can tell it has been copied quite a few times," he said.

Most of the hype has been about Jerry's assertion that Washburn doesn't contribute to the well-being of the state, he said.

Sen. Robert Dole, R-Kan., would probably beg to differ. He graduated from the Washburn Law School.

Out of seven Kansas Supreme Court justices, five graduated from Washburn Law School, but only one graduated from KU Law School.

"Several of the key politicians in Topeka say the memo will get passed around when it comes time to determine the budget," Biles said.

"I think it would be a shame, though, to penalize KU or the KU Law School because of something so stupid."

There is no room in any profession for that "we're better than you" attitude, he said.

"Professional integrity tells us that we don't put one university down over another," said Lin Huff-Corzine, assistant professor of criminology and pre-law advisor at K-State.

Each university has a different law program. The pre-law program at K-State, for instance, stresses the liberal arts background. KU and Washburn may be different from each other, but that's because of the difference in law students, Huff-Corzine said.

"If I were KU, I would be concerned about what was said," she said.

Karen Anderson, senior in human development and family studies who is planning to attend law school, said she thought the issue just made KU look bad.

Jerry shouldn't have made statements of that nature without realizing the consequences involved, Anderson said.

"People should realize that it wasn't an official statement from the KU Law School. It was just one person's opinion, however stupid it may have been," Anderson said.

"He took the chance of putting his ideas into writing, and he'll have to face what comes next."

REVIEW

Reviewer angered by misled 'Kiss' cast

DAVID-MICHAEL ALLEN
Collegian

Let me propose a supposition: The purpose of academic theater is to educate inexperienced actors and technicians. Such training frequently involves working with faculty members on productions, so students benefit from the experience of these adult leaders.

Keep this supposition in mind.

Saturday, I attended the K-State theater department's production of Craig Lucas' "Prelude to a Kiss." I went with the almost naive desire to be engaged, entertained and challenged.

More than two long hours later, I left the theater angry, with an anger fueled by the growing realization that the student cast had been misled by its faculty leaders, Kate Anderson and John Uthoff.

Lucas offered us an adult fairy tale, intimate and introspective — a thinking person's fable. The K-State performers consistently struggled against a director's vision and a scenic design that detracted from any intimacy and introspection.

The movement of the play must be sustained by Peter, who confronts and allows the audience into his mind and heart. The language employed by Peter must be quiet, literate and honest, indicating it must be handled deftly.

Anderson chose to cast Scooter Nelson in the role of Peter. Nelson is not a bad actor, but he was the wrong actor for this role.

Nelson is a visceral and dangerous actor. His style is that of a Brando or a Dean, not of a Fonda or a Hutton. The character of Peter is literate and introspective — a thinker. Nelson struggled with the language, mispronouncing words and misplacing the emphasis between emotion and thought.

We, the audience, might have overlooked this, especially since Nelson brought a sincerity to his efforts. However, Anderson's direction subverted Nelson's attempts at developing an intimacy and trust with us.

Every time Peter attempted to share with us, a noisy cart was rolled on stage, a piece of furniture was moved, or a schmaltzy squeezebox was played over the speakers.

Certainly Nichols Theatre is a poorly designed performance space, but there must be a way for the director and the designer to orchestrate scene changes so they seem less like an effort at traffic control.

The design concept by Uthoff is not intimate and unobtrusive but boring and ineffectual.

Returning to the supposition, there is one consolation: A previous theater adviser of mine once remarked that a good student can still learn from a bad teacher.

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

Anonymity is no hiding place

THE ISSUE

Some of the accusations against Sen. Bob Packwood have been leveled by unknown sources.

WE SUGGEST

Everyone has the right to face their accuser, no matter what the circumstances.

Allegations of sexual harassment are mounting against Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., but the anonymity of some of his accusers sets a dangerous precedent.

Packwood, elected to his fifth term in November, is under fire from the Senate Ethics Committee, which will investigate charges that the senator made sexual advances toward women employees, prospective employees and lobbyists between 1969 and 1990.

The accusations come from 23 women who told the Washington Post about Packwood's alleged actions. Yet, only 13 of the 23 women have been named.

Disregarding everything else in this case, the right of the accused to face his or her accuser is a firm stake that exists to prevent the abuse of the powerful weapon of blame.

If every citizen were allowed to fire off serious accusations from behind the safety of the wall of namelessness, the legal system would become a three-ring circus of vendettas, jealousies and grudges.

It is often intimidating to accuse those who are bigger and stronger than you are, and the fear of retaliation is usually enough to keep most people quiet about severe wrongdoings. Yet, it is a matter of personal courage and integrity that must be invoked to set those wrongs to right.

As it stands, granting credible weight to "phantom accusers," no matter what the circumstances, will only serve to open a Pandora's Box of trouble.

ED SKOOG

DIZZY

The first time Dizzy Gillespie died was 1973.

He was playing at the Village Vanguard and his heart stopped beating.

Piano player Mike Longo remembers the night in Dizzy's autobiography, "To BE or not to ... BOP":

"I looked over at him and he was wobbling. So, I got up from the piano and went over to the side.

"All of a sudden he collapsed. Dropped his horn down on the floor and fell out, you know.

"The people all left the club except Dizzy and I and this guy named Noble, and Noble told me, 'This guy gave Dizzy something, and Dizzy didn't know what it was. And he's a dirty so-and-so.

"Noble and I carried Dizzy up, and I went back down to get his horn and his coat. When I came back upstairs, Dizzy was gone, and way down the street were these two guys that gave him this shit, and they were walking off with Dizzy.

"'Where you think you're going, man?' I said."

"'He said, 'We're taking him to the Greenwich Village Hospital.'"

"I said, 'You ain't taking Dizzy Gillespie in some funky-ass hospital, and the next thing you know it's in the papers.'"

"So I took him him back to the club, and those guys split."

He borrowed a car and took Dizzy home to Lorraine, Dizzy's wife. Some time that morning Lorraine called the ambulance anyway.

She recounts, "His heart had stopped, and when we got him to the hospital, they had to bring him back to life on the machines.

"He's getting confusing here recently (1978). Heh, heh ... He puts it on religion, but I think he's tired. Better late than never. He's kinda changed a little bit now."

Dizzy wrote that he remembered standing on the bandstand and then lying in the hospital.

"After, I looked around and saw how all these musicians had gotten wasted — Charlie Parker, John Coltrane — and it suddenly occurred to me that I was 57 years old, and I said, 'Wait a minute, brother!'

"Now, I work out twice a day, eat the proper foods, stay free from alcohol and drugs. I live like a married man should.

"I hope to live to be about 160 so I can get some of that money back that I give these jive people for my social security. I hope I can just worry them, wondering, 'Say, when is he going to die?' I intend to just hang on, brother."

I was camping at Fancy Creek when I heard Dizzy Gillespie had died.

It was a few days before the semester began. It was cold and snowing lightly. After the WIBW 580 noon farm report, a woman's voice announced Dizzy's death the night before from diabetic complications.

"The jazz great died last night in his bedroom in Englewood, New Jersey.

"Lorraine Gillespie, the balloon-cheeked trumpeter's widow, said that Gillespie died while listening to a cassette tape of 'Dizzy's Dream,' a be-bop composition by 'The Dizz.'

"John Birks Gillespie was 75 years old."

Gillespie was a Baha'i, a believer in Baha'u'llah. Growing up, I had a couple of Baha'i friends. Dizzy was their most famous popular figure.

Baha'i is called a cult by some people. Legitimacy in our culture is established by fame. It made my friends less freakish in Silver Lake, when people knew that Dizzy Gillespie was a Baha'i.

Gillespie was Nigerian American. The woman on the radio said, "In press releases, black leaders have called Gillespie a hero to many black Americans."

Gillespie knew this. In his autobiography he wrote about his status as a hero.

"To be a 'hero' in the black community, all you have to do is make the white folks look up to you and recognize the fact that you've contributed to something worthwhile. Laugh, but it's the truth."

Of Freud and laundry detergent

JOHN HAWKS

I took a psychology class a couple of semesters ago, and I was surprised to find out that no one believes in Freud anymore. It disappointed me, perhaps because Freud's theories were an integral part of what I perceived as college wit. But I think it was more than that.

You see, I'm an English major, and in English, people just aren't paying attention to what the psychologists have decided. With some amount of experience, I think it's safe to say that no one can study English without coming to terms with our good friend Sig-mund. Freud is the patron saint of English de-grees, and it's becoming increasingly clear to me that most of my professors have the B.S.

Why should we hold such high esteem for the theories of Freud? You've got to admit, they sound really hokey. I mean really, I'm supposed to feel carnal desire for my mother? Yeah, right.

But Freud makes everything simple. He gets all those subconscious desires out on the table where we can talk about them. He supplies motive where we didn't think there was one. That's something that is important when you're analyzing a literary work. It makes the job of understanding something much easier. Or, if you don't accept Freud's explanation, at least it shows you different ways to think about issues in a work.

But works of literature aren't written in a vacuum. They inevitably reflect the culture they come from. So, you might well ask yourself, if Freud can make it easy for some undergraduate in English to get an A on a term paper, how hard could it be to analyze you?

The answer is, not hard at all. Advertisers play off of your subconscious all the time. Commercials are subconscious attempts to make us do something.

One of my favorites is a commercial for All-Temperature Cheer: A short man in a tuxedo walks onto an all black and white set, carrying a handkerchief stained with lipstick. He puts the hanky into a drink shaker with ice and All-Temperature Cheer and shakes, as tango music plays in the background. He shakes. He then pulls out the miraculously clean handkerchief and tangos off the screen, clamping a red rose in his teeth.

Sure, this ad is an interesting diversion, full of subtle humor. But ask yourself, what made you sit through it the hundred times you've undoubtedly seen it. Was it sheer unwillingness to put forth the effort to move? Or was it something more — some subconscious grip that the commercial holds on you?

If you guessed the former, let me educate you on the dirty feelings that you are repressing. This unattractive little man is dancing in a tuxedo. He is a picture of a better lifestyle — a rich lifestyle — that you want. Your awareness of this comes only from television. He is part of a fantasy world that you want to be a part of. Everything is black and white. Everything, that is, except for the violent crimson of the lipstick on the handkerchief. It glares at you like the stain of sex. But with All-Temperature Cheer, he cools off his passion in the icy wash and cleanses himself of his sin. After he has done so, he returns to his passion, biting the red rose of his libido.

In this fantasy world, the results of his actions don't matter — he is above any reproach — because any ill effects will be washed away. You want to be a part of that world, and you sit there, wistfully watching him, calling, "Come back, Shane, come back," as he tangos stage left.

But do you think of this when you watch the commercial? No! It's all in your subconscious. Fortunately for you, the laugh is on the advertisers. Being subconsciously trapped by the television doesn't make someone go out to buy All-Temperature Cheer. (Have you ever woken up in a motel room in Virginia not knowing how you got there, holding a box of Cheer?)

However, the power to make millions of people into mindless idiots for 30 seconds seems like it would appeal to one entity — the government. The very possibility that some government agency and Madison Avenue could make the entire American voting public apathetic to anything that policymakers do terrifies me. Oh my God, it's happening!

Could Americans really be that simple underneath their conscious minds? The psychologists don't think so, but we in English know better. And if it weren't really that way, no one would laugh at all those stupid phallic jokes, would they? As for me, I think I'll spend a semester doing independent research on the symbolism in seven-second sound bites. There's got to be something there.

Conformity, not individualism, is key

Editor,

This is in regard to Kelly Klawonn's article Feb. 10 in the Collegian. Her article, titled "Queer Geometry," states that gays and lesbians should wear pink triangles to be proud of who they are. If Kelly were in the military, would she be willing and proud to have a pink triangle on her uniform? I don't think she should be strutting around, wearing triangles to show her sexual preference.

If people like her do not want to be singled out, why not act "normal" and try to fit in? I am very proud of who I am, but I would not wear objects on my clothing to show the public my heterosexuality.

▶ RESPONSE

Symbols can mean more than one thing

Editor,

In Kelly Klawonn's recent column, she seems to be saying that anyone who associates themselves with a particular symbol has a particular lifestyle. That is, if you wear a pink triangle or have one on your car, you are homosexual or bisexual.

I think the most you can assume is that the person with the pink triangle probably won't be a homophobe, but then you may not be safe with that assumption.

My pink triangle has the following on it: "First they came for the Jews, and I did not speak out because I was not a Jew. Then they came for the communists, and I did not speak out because I was not a communist. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I did not speak out because I was not a trade unionist. Then they came for me — and there was no one left to speak out for me." — Pastor Martin Niemoller (victim of Nazis).

My pink triangle says I'm speaking out. My sexuality is a very important part of my personal identity, and many people will agree it is a private part of your identity. I feel I can openly support the homosexual community without advertising my sexual preferences.

I am heterosexual. I am only stating my sexual preference to dispel the stereotype of pink triangle wearers (but then I may be lying to make a point).

I also attend Bisexual, Gay and Lesbian meetings. Why would a straight man attend such a meeting? It may surprise some to learn that I feel as if I am around my kind of people there. Not gay or straight people but people who believe in freedom from persecution and freedom to be what you are.

If you are one of these people, I encourage you to attend the next meeting. Although some people are very open about their personal sexuality, no one will require you to reveal yours.

Health center staff is competent, qualified

Editor,

Neil Anderson is promoting an unfounded and incorrect view of Lafene Health Center.

In the Feb. 11 Collegian, Anderson interviewed two students from a 20,000-plus University. From this information, a story was printed that questioned the abilities of Lafene's medical staff.

It makes me sad to hear students on this campus voice doubts about the competence of our doctors. They are as qualified as any physician with a private practice. The difference is in their loyalty. Our doctors work at Lafene because they are dedicated to the students at K-State.

I have worked with these individuals for more than two years. I have the highest respect and admiration for the Lafene staff. They work tirelessly to provide the best possible services for all of us.

Please give them the respect they deserve.

Free tutoring helps students interact

Program helps improve grades, develop good communication skills

"It's very rewarding. I get to watch students who have trouble begin to do well."

SARAH CALDWELL
JUNIOR IN ENGLISH

SYLVESTOR CHRISTIE
Collegian

Free tutoring is available in Leasure Hall in a wide variety of courses for all K-State students.

Cassandra Nicholson, graduate student in student counseling and personnel services and supervisor of the tutoring center in Leasure 201, said the students who receive tutoring at the center are both traditional and non-traditional.

"The program exists for every student at K-State — we are not limited to any particular student," she said.

Nicholson said the tutoring center is a student-funded facility sponsored by the Academic Assistance Center. The money comes from the Equal Opportunity Fund, which is part of the tuition fees paid by students, she said.

She said some of the courses offered this semester include mathematics, physics, chemistry, statistics, economics, accounting and English.

"Physics, mathematics and chemistry are the areas with the highest demand," she said.

Nicholson said each department as well as all academic advisers know about the tutoring program.

"The tutoring center existed for a long time," she said.

Sarah Caldwell, junior in English, said she is tutoring for the second semester and finds it a rewarding experience.

"It's very rewarding. I get to watch students who have trouble begin to do well," she said.

Caldwell said her job is to help students organize their thoughts and ideas and to edit their work, not necessarily teaching.

"The tutor is not teaching — he is only assisting in the learning of the material," Nicholson said.

She said the center starts with 20 to 30 tutors for the semester and increases as the demand dictates to as many as 40.

Funds are available to all the tutors as needed, Nicholson said.

"We don't turn students away — we try to find a tutor for them," she said.

She said recruiting of tutors is done through advertising or by direct contact with department heads.

Tutors are both graduates and undergraduates, and are selected on the basis of an overall GPA of 3.0, an A or B in the subject to be tutored and good communication skills, Nicholson said.

She said good communication skills are important at the center because they enhance effective interaction between tutors and students.

Nicholson said the program has been progressing because there is an increase in the turnout, and the program is being referred to other students by their friends.

She said it is important for the program to be progressing in order to remain funded.

Brady Yust, freshman in construction science, said he found the program helpful with his trigonometry course.

"It helps me with the problems I can't understand," he said.

Yust said he told some of his friends about the center in case they needed help.

"You've got to get help before you flunk out," he said.

Nicholson said each tutor has a group of five students who are allowed to meet three sessions per week for 50 minutes per session.

She said applications are available the first day of fee payment. Processing takes three to five days, and tutors are assigned after the first day of classes.

"We match the free time of the student with the free time of the tutor to avoid conflict," she said.

Nicholson said the center is used by students who are doing well, and want to continue doing well, and also those who are having trouble.

Funded projects require justification

ASSOCIATED PRESS

■ K-State is one of 50 universities being asked to justify research projects funded by last-minute provisions tucked into legislation without debate.

BOSTON — The chairman of the House science committee has written to 50 universities demanding they justify research projects funded by last-minute provisions tucked into legislation without congressional debate.

The largest of the grants was $42 million for a climate-change research center at Saginaw Valley State University in Michigan, a small teaching school with 6,500 students and no research program.

The center, which has space on the Saginaw Valley State campus but isn't run by the school, is in the congressional district of former Rep. Robert Traxler, a Democrat who was head of a congressional appropriations subcommittee until he left Congress in January.

Despite its size, the grant was not formally authorized by Congress. There were no hearings to consider its merit.

"It was nursed from its inception by Mr. Traxler," House Science Committee Chairman George E. Brown, D-Calif., said Saturday. "It comes out of the NASA budget, but nobody at NASA knows about it."

Traxler had tried to delete funding for NASA's space station, so the agency did not object when the appropriation was tucked into its budget, Brown said.

Traxler did not immediately return a telephone message left at his Bay City, Mich. home Saturday.

But Gary Bachula, a vice president of the consortium that runs the climate-change research center, said the grant was perfectly appropriate and legal.

He said the money will be used to build new headquarters off the Saginaw Valley campus for the Consortium for International Earth Science Information Network. Members of the consortium include Saginaw Valley, Michigan and Maryland universities, University of California at Santa Barbara and others.

Brown said such university research grants cost the nation $707 million last year.

Cats struggling on both ends of court

"They were throwing the ball wherever they wanted to."

ANTHONY BEANE

Defense allows
Big 8's worst shooters connect on 52 percent

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Defensive intensity has been the glue that has held K-State together this season.

More than halfway through Big Eight play, the Wildcats stand in second place, a testament to their tenacious scoring defense that has allowed opponents an average of only 65.4 points a game — the conference low.

But when that defensive pressure disappeared Saturday afternoon against the Nebraska Cornhuskers — the conference's worst-shooting team coming into the game — K-State fell apart.

"We just weren't aggressive on defense," guard Anthony Beane said. "They were throwing the ball wherever they wanted to. Usually that isn't something other teams do to us.

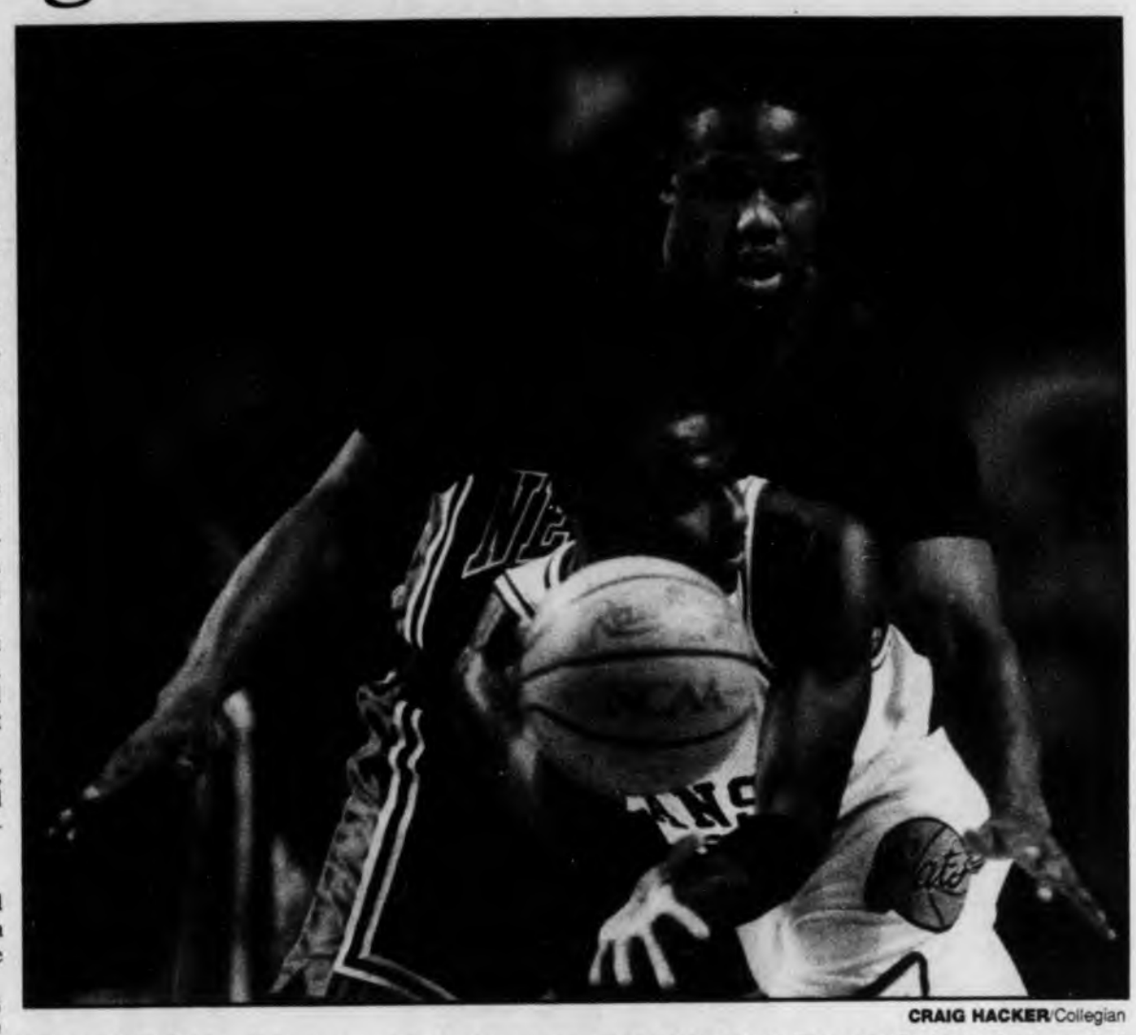
"Usually we're out-defending them, making them turn it over and catch it where they don't want to — where they're not a threat to score."

Not Saturday.

Nebraska hit 52 percent of its field goal attempts, marking only the fifth time this season the Huskers have shot 50 percent from the field.

In Big Eight play, the Huskers came into the game hitting 42.9 percent of their field goal attempts — the league low — but managed to scorch the Cat defense for six lay-ins and two dunks in their 21-point win.

"That was as well as we've played this year, in every aspect of the game," Nebraska coach Danny Nee said. "Passing the ball, free-throw shooting, handling K-State's pressure — it was a real quality win.



"We executed and passed the ball extremely well, but I think fatigue was also a factor."

K-State's game against Nebraska was the team's third in six days. Each game has seen the opponents' turnover numbers drop, while the Cats have been forcing fewer turnovers of their own.

Nebraska had only six turnovers, 13 less than the K-State defense has been forcing opponents into. The Cats also collected only three steals, one more than their previous season-low.

Assistant coach Pete Herrmann said that while K-State's 26.8-percent shooting from the field didn't help matters, it wasn't the main reason for the Cats' defensive troubles.

"We didn't shoot the ball well," he said. "But if we give them open shots at point-blank range, that's because of their transition offense.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Vincent Jackson, K-State guard, looks for a pass around Nebraska's Terrance Badgett. Jackson had three fouls early in the first half and couldn't help the Wildcat defense contain Nebraska.

"We were caught five-on-three, five-on-four. They were making the extra pass, and they executed what they like to do much better than we defended them," Herrmann said.

The Huskers' 80-point win was the most an opponent has scored against the Wildcats since Nevada-Reno hit for 81 last December. Nebraska also outrebounded the Cats 33-19 on the defensive boards.

And the 21-point Big Eight road win was the Huskers' biggest since 1933.

Forward Vincent Jackson, who has been the Cats' leading defensive player this season, said K-State's intensity is a big concern.

"We're not doing the things we're normally doing," he said of K-State's poor defensive execution.

"We need to get back to the things we do best, and that's defending aggressively. We did in certain spots, but we didn't do it for the whole game."

Offense sputters for 3rd consecutive game

K-State shooting 33 percent in last 3 games

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

At halftime of K-State's 80-59 loss to Nebraska Saturday afternoon, Wildcat coach Dana Altman wasn't too concerned about the Huskers' nine-point lead, he said.

After all, his team had shot just 30 percent from the field in the first half — a number that was bound to go up in the final 20 minutes.

"I thought we were in OK shape because we shot the ball so poorly," he said. "I thought we would come out, somebody would get a little streak going and get a couple of jumpers down.

"I thought we'd be able to get something going, but we just could not hit a shot," Altman said.

Indeed, the Cats' shooting percentage actually went down in the final stanza, as K-State connected on just nine of 37 second-half shots, a 24 percent clip.

Perhaps K-State's worst offensive output of the season was best expressed when, with less than four minutes to play, Askia Jones and Vincent Jackson threw up back-to-back air balls.

But the loss to Nebraska was just the latest in a string of sub-par shooting performances for the Wildcats. For the third time in as many games, K-State failed to shoot 40 percent from the floor.

"This week's been very tough as far as shooting the basketball," Altman said.

In Monday night's nationally televised loss at Missouri, K-State shot a then-season-low 31.6 percent. Wednesday night, K-State escaped with a win over Iowa State, despite shooting 39.7 percent.

SHOOTING WOES

OPPONENT	FG-A	%	3FG-A	%
Missouri	18-57	31.5	4-16	25.0
Iowa State	27-68	39.7	4-14	28.5
Nebraska	19-71	26.7	2-23	8.7
TOTALS	64-196	32.6	10-53	18.9

Then the Cats hit rock bottom with Saturday's loss to Nebraska.

In front of a packed house, K-State missed 21 of its 23 shots from beyond the three-point arc. And although Brian Henson highlighted the fury by missing all nine of his treys, he wasn't the only Wildcat shooting bricks.

Jones was three for 13. Anthony Beane was two for 12. The list goes on — and has been since the Cats shot 48 percent in beating Oklahoma Feb. 3.

Since that time, Beane has made just eight of his 32 shots, a 25-percent clip. From three-point range, his is 2 for 15. And the Cats' leading scorer, Jackson, is 14 for 43, or 33 percent, from the field.

In fact, the team is mired in a 32.6 shooting slump for the last three games.

"It's all in game preparation," Beane said. "You have to get yourself prepared for every game mentally. And that's something we all need to work on, both as a team and individually."

Against Nebraska, Altman said, that didn't happen.

"We did not prepare ourselves for this game well enough to play, either physically or mentally," he said. "And it showed."

Henson is just three for 33 from three-point range in his last seven games — a dismal 9 percent.

"I've got to get over this," he said. "I think about it all the time. But when you think about it, you're going to start missing it.

"It really bothers me. A major part of my game is being able to shoot, and that's why I'm playing here," Henson said.

"It's just psychological. I have to get my mind back."

So, what can the Cats do to find the confidence that enabled them to thwart last season's 43-percent field-goal shooting — last in the Big Eight — to shoot 47.6 percent through 17 games?

"You just have to forget all about it," Beane said. "When you have an open shot the next game, you have to take it. You can't think, hey — I'm in a slump.

"This is one of the worst games we've had when it comes to effort. We had no effort, and that's the biggest thing right now.

Lady Cats snap conference losing skid

K-State's win over Iowa State snaps 21-game slump

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The drought has ended for the Lady Cats.

K-State ended its 21-game, Big Eight losing streak Sunday afternoon as the Lady Cats beat Iowa State, 67-43, in the James H. Hilton Coliseum in Ames.

But before the victory, the Lady Cats lost to Nebraska, 69-50, Friday night in the Bob Devaney Sports Center in Lincoln, Neb.

The Lady Cats' last conference win came against the Cyclones on Jan. 25, 1992, and this win was the team's first Big Eight road victory since getting by the Oklahoma Sooners on Jan. 14 of last year.

K-State, 9-13 and 1-10 in the conference, ran away from Iowa State by shooting 50 percent from the field in the second half and holding the Cyclones to 27 percent.

Coach Susan Yow said she wanted her team to work harder in the second 20 minutes.

"In the second half, we asked the team to pick up the tempo," Yow said. "That led to us shooting better in the second half. We felt we played into their tempo in the first half."

Iowa State, 2-21 and 1-10 in the league, could not keep up with K-State after being tied, 20-20, at halftime. The Lady Cats went on a 15-6 run in the first seven minutes of the second half to build its lead.

Shanele Stires contributed to the K-State effort in the second half by scoring 13 of her 17 points in the game. Stires said she also felt the first-half play was on Iowa State's terms.

"We were tight in the first half because the tempo didn't suit our style," she said. "Coach always tells us that defense would win ballgames for us. We got out of Iowa State's tempo with our defense."

The K-State defense forced 23 turnovers — the second-most by a Lady Cat opponent — and held the Cyclones to just 28 percent from the field, the lowest percentage by any K-State foe.

Offensively, the 11 turnovers by the Lady Cats was the lowest total this year, and K-State had four players in double-figure scoring. Tying Stires in scoring was Kelly Moylan with 17 points, including three of seven from 3-point range.

Andrea O'Neal had 14 points, and Leah Honeycutt added 12 points to go with her 14 rebounds. The double-double by Honeycutt was the 13th of her career, and her 14 rebounds vaulted her into ninth place on the career rebound chart with 542 boards.

Friday night, Nebraska's all-America candidate Karen Jennings scored 26 points to help the Huskers beat K-State.

The No. 23 Huskers, 17-5 and 7-3 in the Big Eight, took an 18-6 lead in the first six minutes of the game, but Honeycutt got the Lady Cats to within five points, 28-33, at halftime by scoring 12 points in the first half.

K-State couldn't score on the Nebraska defense. The Lady Cats put in 22 points on 33 percent field-goal shooting in the second half after hitting 40 percent in the first half.

Honeycutt finished with 14 points for the Lady Cats, and Stires collected her seventh double-double of the season with a 13-point, 11-rebound performance. Lynn Holzman came off the bench for a season-high eight points.

Netters drop 2 matches

K-State's tennis team dropped a pair of matches this weekend in Topeka. The team was defeated by Drake, 6-3, on Saturday and in a close match against Arkansas, 5-4, on Sunday.

"I thought both teams were better going into the weekend," K-State coach Steve Bietau said. "Our players had good efforts."

K-State's Suzanne Sim, at No. 3 singles, won both of her singles matches. She defeated Stacy Janikowski of Drake, 6-1, 6-4, and Arkansas' Beth Richardson, 7-5, 7-5.

In No. 1 singles, Susana Labrador defeated Melinda Mones of Arkansas, 7-5, 4-6, 6-3. K-State's No. 6 singles player, Maria Uson, defeated Heather Hale of Arkansas, 6-3, 6-2.

No. 2 doubles Sim and Linda Neethling lost both of their matches against Drake's Susan Hall and Janikowski, and Richardson and Claire Santiago of Arkansas.

Bietau said Sim played well, and her experience showed through in both of her performances.

"Suzanne had another solid performance," he said. "She has never beaten Richardson, and in doubles, she and Linda had several opportunities to quit, but they never stopped fighting.

"This was an indicator of an experienced senior, and she does a lot of right things on the court."

Sim said she, too, was happy with her performance.

"They were both good wins," Sim said. "I could have lost, but I finally put it all together."

"She (Richardson) was always ranked higher in than me in juniors — so it was an exciting win," Sim said.

In other doubles matches, K-State's No. 1 doubles team of Labrador and Amelia Van Der Merwe defeated Drake's Vera Vitels and Nikki Uelze, 6-1, 4-6, 7-6, (7-3). The No. 3 doubles team of Martine Shrubsole and Uson beat Drake's Stephanie Dewald and Kara Larson and Arkansas' Robin Juels and Heather Hale 6-0, 6-1.

"We're making progress because of these matches," Bietau said. "Arkansas was a tough one to lose because we were right in it."

Sim said she was pleased with the team's performance, and she said she thinks the younger girls will improve with time.

"This is a good starting point and these matches are going to help when we play the Big Eight teams," she said.

K-State high jumpers continue to break own records

DEREK NELSON
Collegian

K-State freshman Itai Margalit kept his streak alive this weekend by again breaking the K-State indoor high jump record.

Margalit jumped 7 feet, 5 inches at the Husker Invitational in Lincoln, Neb. He has now set and reset the record for the fourth consecutive weekend.

"Itai is jumping exceptionally well right now. He even had a couple of very close attempts at 7'6". I don't know of anyone who is jumping as high as he is consistently," K-State interim coach Cliff Rovelto said.

"He's getting to the point, though, that he won't be able to improve this much week after week," he said. "There aren't many people in the world who jump at those heights on a regular basis. It's really on another level."

Margalit said he was pleased with his performance — which tied a meet record — but hopes to keep improving.

"Actually, it feels great," he said. "As an athlete, I work to get better results, and I'm doing that right now. In the second attempt, I almost cleared 7'6". I feel like I can do it."

On his final attempt, Margalit twisted his ankle, but he said he expects to be fine for the Big Eight meet in two weeks.

Margalit was not the only Wildcat to win events at one of the top indoor meets in the country.

Gwen Wentland won the women's high jump with an effort of 6'2-1/4". This ties a K-State record. Her jump also made her an automatic qualifier for the NCAA indoor meet.

"Now that Gwen has cleared the bar at that height, I think she's capable of jumping even higher," Rovelto said.

K-State's Randy Helling, Anthony Williams, Jared Storm and Francis O'Neill teamed up to win the 3,200-meter relay. Their time made them provisional qualifiers for the NCAA meet.

"Randy Helling running first and Francis O'Neill running anchor both ran exceptionally well," Rovelto said. "Then to come back in their individual races and perform well again is impressive."

Helling won the 1,000-meter run, and O'Neill finished third in the mile. O'Neill's time made him a provisional qualifier for the NCAA.

K-State now returns home to play host to the KSU Open. On Feb. 26-27, the team will travel to Ames, Iowa for the Big Eight indoor meet. Rovelto said he is looking for big things.

"There are only a couple of teams which have a legitimate chance of winning the conference championship. I think both of our teams are in that situation."

Other states stiffen DUI penalties

"We want to tell them: If you get arrested you'll lose your license. If you're convicted, you'll lose your license plates. And if you're convicted again, you'll lose your car."

SEN. ADAM SMITH
WASHINGTON

Lowering of blood-alcohol level sought despite objections

ASSOCIATED PRESS

Many state legislators are pondering social arithmetic in the latest round of legislative assaults on an old menace, the drunken driver.

Bills introduced this year in 31 states reflect a push for more deterrents and stricter punishment for intoxicated drivers.

The most common proposal is lowering the intoxication level from 0.10 percent blood-alcohol to 0.08 percent — about a one-drink difference. Another popular proposal is tighter penalties on young drunken drivers.

"It's reached a point where most of the states have sanctions they consider reasonable and effective," said Jeanne Mejeur, a policy analyst at the National Conference of State Legislatures in Denver.

"They're saying 'We've done what we can without impinging on people's rights. Now what can we do to get the problem drinker off the road?'" she said.

State criminal code books are filled with fairly new anti-drunken driving laws, enacted at a clip of about 150 a year between 1982 and 1990.

The years of new legislation, combined with education programs, have changed attitudes and driving behavior to help cut the carnage blamed on alcohol.

In 1982, alcohol accounted for 57.2 percent of the 43,945 traffic fatalities. Last year, drinking played a part in 46 percent of the 39,500 road deaths, according to National Highway Traffic Safety Administration estimates.

Washington state Sen. Adam Smith has proposed a bill to let drivers who drink know that drunken driving doesn't merit any second chances.

"We want to tell them: 'If you get arrested you'll lose your license. If you're convicted, you'll lose your license plates,'" he said. "'And if you're convicted again, you'll lose your car.'"

The 0.10 blood-alcohol standard for legal intoxication in 45 states, translates into five drinks within an hour on an empty stomach for a 160-pound man.

More than a dozen states may lower the legal definition of drunkenness — Pennsylvania from 0.10 blood-alcohol to 0.07 and 13 others from 0.10 to 0.08. Among the five states already set at 0.08 is Oregon, where a bill proposes lowering it to 0.04.

Although body size, metabolism and alcohol tolerance make it misleading to say how many drinks produce a 0.08 blood-alcohol level, research shows that level impairs anyone's judgment and reflexes, said Jim Fell, a science adviser at the federal highway safety agency in Washington.

Taking another tack, bills in six states target drinking drivers under 21, threatening year-long license suspension and community service if their blood-alcohol is 0.02 — which results from about one drink — or, in Indiana, 0.01.

Ignition interlock devices, which keep a car from starting if drivers have alcohol on their breath, are proposed as part of punishment plans in seven states.

The drunken driver's debt to society would be added up in real dollars under bills in Arizona, New Jersey and Pennsylvania that would charge drunken drivers for the cost of police and medical rescuers.

So, who would argue with curbing drunken drivers?

Some believe enough already has been done to combat highway intoxication. South Dakota already heard a few complaints this session — a bill to require drunken drivers to perform community service died under the weight of complaints it would burden the bureaucracy.

And a bill to lower the blood-alcohol limit to 0.08 was thrown out for being unfair to responsible drinkers.

"You're not catching the seriously impaired, stumbling, falling-down drunk driver," said Curt Mortenson, lobbyist for the American Civil Liberties Union. "You come after people who are honestly trying to obey the law."

Mothers Against Drunk Driving, which led the grass-roots war that inspired the first round of new legislation, isn't satisfied.

"This is the most solvable crime," said Milo Kirk, national president of Irving, Texas-based MADD. "Legislators can't become complacent."

Gang summit plans on target

Meeting expected to be cordial, polite

ASSOCIATED PRESS

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — The announcement of a national peace conference for street gangs has drawn inquiries from several gangs that want to be included, an organizer said Sunday.

Meanwhile, plans for the summit were "on target for what we're trying to achieve," Carl Upchurch, the summit's chief organizer, said, after a weekend planning session in Kansas City. Upchurch is director of the Council for Urban Peace and Justice in Granville, Ohio.

Gang leaders from Boston, Chicago, Los Angeles and Minneapolis met earlier this month in Washington, D.C., to pledge peace and to announce the national gathering for April 30-May 2 in Kansas City.

News of the summit was greeted with skepticism by police, who said they doubted organizers could overcome the hatred that exists between many of the gangs.

Organizers have been meeting with gang leaders from several cities who wanted to talk about joining the summit, Upchurch said. Representatives from other gangs are welcome, he said, "if they want to come to the table, absolutely."

He did not specify which other gangs were interested in attending the conference. He also did not say which groups took part in the weekend planning session.

The criminal records of the gangs represented at the Washington press conference — Crips, Bloods, Different Nation, Vice Lords and Disciples of Soul — were enough to make Kansas City police and city officials wary of the conference.

But Upchurch said organizers will address any safety concerns at an open forum for citizens when the conference opens.

Upchurch said planners spent Friday and Saturday outlining conference events and suggesting potential speakers on the issue of economic discrimination.

The atmosphere was "nice, cordial, polite," with no friction between members of different gangs, he said.

Clinton administration proposes energy tax

Opponents say tax would affect middle-class, businesses hardest

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton appeared Sunday to be moving toward a broad energy tax based on how much heat a particular fuel produces, a levy that will increase the cost of electricity, heating oil and gasoline.

The tax would be calculated according to how much heat is produced by a particular type of fuel. It would have the biggest effect on the cost of coal, heating oil and natural gas.

Virtually all Americans would be affected in some way by additional costs.

Some Republican lawmakers called the proposal an across-the-board tax on middle-class Americans and of businesses trying to emerge from the recession. They predicted it would not easily be accepted by Congress.

A direct gasoline tax has been ruled out in favor of a much broader and less visible tax on all energy sources in order to spread the effect, said an administration official, who spoke on condition of anonymity.

It was unclear how much of a tax levy is being envisioned or whether some specific environmentally friendly fuels — such as solar or wind power — might be exempted or given compensating tax credits, as environmentalists have urged.

Analysts have estimated that a 12-cent tax per million British thermal units (Btu), across the board could generate about $10 billion in tax revenue. A Btu is a measure of the amount of energy needed to raise the temperature of one pound of water by 1 degree Fahrenheit.

Such a tax would fall most heavily on coal as well as natural gas and to a lesser extent oil, nuclear and hydroelectric power, according to Adam Sieminski, an energy analyst for NatWest Securities Corp.

The energy tax proposal will be announced this week as part of Clinton's overall economic package. Clinton was expected immediately to launch a national effort to sell the package, including the new energy taxes.

House Speaker Tom Foley, D-Wash., said while he personally favors a direct gasoline tax, he is optimistic that a broad-based tax pegged to energy content, or Btu, could win congressional approval.

But while the "Btu tax" does not have the same kinds of regional opposition as a direct gasoline tax or a fee on oil imports, it has a wide range of detractors, including both business leaders and environmentalists.

Because such a tax would have more of an effect on the price of coal and natural gas, compared to oil, critics fear it could heighten the country's dependence on foreign oil.

Environmentalists have been cool toward a Btu tax because it would cover renewable energy sources such as wind power and perhaps inhibit their development.

They favor a so-called "carbon tax" that would be an excise tax of fossil fuels based on carbon content.

Various business groups, including the electric power industry, which relies heavily on coal and nuclear, said any broad-based energy tax would slow economic growth and cost jobs.

Some consumer groups also have raised concern about an energy tax, saying it could have the most severe consequences on the poor.

"Low-income families shouldn't have to pay higher taxes to deal with a deficit problem that they didn't create in the first place," said Robert McIntyre, director of the Washington-based Citizens for Tax Justice.

Legislature to view mental health, gaming

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Legislature this week will address two of the most pressing issues lawmakers face this year: closing one of three mental health hospitals in the state and Indian gambling.

Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee and the Senate Judiciary Committee will have joint hearings Tuesday and Wednesday on a bill on Indian gaming compacts.

Oleen, chairwoman of the Federal and State Affairs Committee, said the bill could be sent to the Senate floor for debate as early as Thursday.

The Indian gambling debate will occur in the shadow of a lawsuit filed by two tribes — the Kickapoo and the Prairie Band Potawatomi — against the state for an alleged failure to negotiate gaming compacts in good faith.

The bill would create an 11-person committee to approve compacts negotiated by three of its members. The committee would consist of five House and five Senate members and one person appointed by the governor.

Under federal law, any state that regulates some forms of gambling, such as parimutuel racing, must negotiate a compact with Indian tribes so they can build casinos on reservation land.

A House Appropriations subcommittee will have public hearings on a proposal to close one of the three state hospitals for mental retardation. The hospitals are the Winfield State Hospital and Training Center, the Parsons State Hospital and Training Center, and the Kansas Neurological Institute in Topeka.

The subcommittee, which took a tour of the three hospitals last week, will hear testimony Thursday from Parsons residents and Friday from Winfield residents.

Rep. Jim Lowther, R-Emporia, chairman of the subcommittee, said it may visit more programs.

Lawmakers have heard from hundreds of mentally retarded patients who are waiting for space to open up in community programs.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.
Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.
Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Research grants to be investigated

That's roughly what taxpayers spent on the superconducting supercollider, one of the nation's costliest and most debated science projects.

The difference is the $707 million in university grants was awarded in secret, without debate, by legislators currying favor with constituents, congressional sources said.

Last September, the Congressional Research Service reported that such grants have cost taxpayers $2.5 billion since 1980. The practice is growing. Nearly half of the $2.5 billion was distributed in 1991 and 1992, according to the report.

Among the 50 appropriations being investigated by Brown are multimillion-dollar grants to Columbia University, Tufts, the University of Michigan, Hahnemann University in Philadelphia and other academic institutions.

The hidden appropriations were arranged by congressmen and senators on appropriations committees. They are in a position to alter bills at the last minute to bring federal dollars into their states or districts without formal debate by Congress, Brown said.

These legislators are referred to in Washington as "the cardinals," because they act together in secret, just as Roman Catholic cardinals do in electing the pope.

Legislators not on the appropriations committees do not have the same opportunity to dole money out to constituents, Brown said.

"Many of these projects are meritorious," Brown said at a meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. "I am not convinced, however, that this is a legitimate way of financing these projects."

"Congressional pork-barreling threatens many of the science and technology initiatives of the new administration," Brown said. "Money that is diverted by Congress ... comes out of the hide of other programs — publicly debated, peer-reviewed, carefully scrutinized programs."

One congressional aide who spoke on condition of anonymity wanted to be sure the legislator she worked for was credited for arranging one such project.

"We're proud of our pork," the aide said.

The 50 projects Brown is investigating are costing the country $225 million in the current fiscal year, Brown said. These grants cannot be rescinded, but Brown is investigating them to determine whether to continue funding them next year.

Oregon bill calls for everyone to own gun

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SALEM, Ore. — State Rep. Liz Van Leeuwen says one way to fight crime in Oregon is to make everyone armed and dangerous.

The veteran legislator is sponsoring a bill requiring each home to have at least one firearm and ammunition on hand. No one would be penalized for failing to have a gun, but Van Leeuwen said outlaws would get the message anyway.

"Criminals have learned now that crime does pay. They're long gone when the police get there," she says. "They're not as likely to do it if there's a threat of deadly force."

Van Leeuwen, 67, introduced the bill Jan. 29 at the urging of a gun dealer. Patterned after a city ordinance passed 12 years ago in Kennesaw, Ga., it requires gun safety training and exempts those who oppose gun possession.

As word of the state bill spread, talk shows from around the country came calling. Van Leeuwen, a Republican who has served in the Legislature since 1981, said she's astonished at the controversy it has generated.

The national media "seem surprised that regular folks can come up with new ideas," she said in her weekly newsletter. She concedes it isn't likely to pass but said it is worth public debate.

Although Van Leeuwen admits there's a remote chance increasing the number of guns in homes could lead to more domestic violence, Jim Ricke, the gun store owner who requested it, insists it would not.

Those making that claim "are people who don't know which end of a gun to hold onto," he said.

The city gun ordinance passed in Kennesaw, Ga., in 1981. Burglaries initially dropped by 65 percent, to 19 in 1982, but then began climbing and totaled 74 in 1990.

Van Leeuwen doesn't carry a gun but keeps some at home on the family grass seed farm near Halsey, an agricultural town about 100 miles south of Portland, where armed neighbors have scared off would-be thieves.

Statistics can mislead graduates in job search

as those offered at the Career Planning Placement Center were applauded in "U.S. News & World Report 1993 Career Guide," which also suggested college graduates take some initiative while seeking out small firms in order to reap positive resume results.

"Once every two weeks we send out information on government jobs and information on companies through our job pamphlets," Downing said. "We also offer interviews on campus with companies. You sign up for an interview, and the companies choose who to interview."

It's these on-campus interviewing and recruitment procedures that have dropped 11.3 percent in visiting practices, according to a survey of 316 companies by the College Placement Council. The same survey showed an increase in the cuts of recruitment costs.

Using one's own initiative is the underlying factor in the job search.

"We assist you in helping you build for graduate material," Downing said. "But you are the one who ultimately has to place yourself."

Wintry weather strikes Kansas

Manhattan firefighters open the hood of a burning Ford Galaxy Monday at the corner of College Heights Road and Quivera Drive. The car caught fire when owner, Darrell Hontz, Manhattan, tried to restart it after it stalled. Officers were letting the smoke billow out. Icy streets slowed emergency vehicles' response to the fire.

Kansans were buffeted by a pair of wintry assaults Monday, as one storm dumped about a foot of snow and an arctic blast that followed piled snow into drifts and sent temperatures plummeting.

Blizzard-like conditions with winds gusting to 35 mph caused widespread drifting in northeast Kansas. Visibility was less than 100 feet at times.

By 2:30 p.m., the Kansas Highway Patrol closed Interstate 70 from Colby west to the Colorado border. Troopers spent the day responding to numerous accidents and reports of cars that had slid off roads.

"The patrol has been out there continuously since 7:30 this morning. They're not getting any breaks," said Donita Ellegood, a dispatcher for the Gove County Sheriff's Department, which was asked to help direct traffic.

"People aren't slowing down around accidents."

Manhattan had its share of snow-related accidents as well.

Riley County Police Department dispatcher Barbara Stewart said there were about 90 accidents by 7:30 p.m.

While officers would usually respond immediately to an accident, during the snow storm, some accidents took precedent over others.

"We are treating them according to how severe they are," Stewart said.

If it was an injury accident or an accident involving at least $500 in damages, officers were responding to them, she said.

Those involved in minor accidents were told to exchange insurance information and report the accident within the next 48 hours.

An officer with the Kansas Highway Patrol in Topeka said there was an increase in number of accidents on I-70 also. He said very few of them, however, were injury-related.

The officer said he received a large number of callers asking about the weather, but he couldn't give them weather information.

"We give road reports, but they usually ask about the weather conditions," he said. "We refer them to the weather bureau."

The road conditions on state highways were continuously being worked on as nine Kansas Department of Transportation trucks sanded and salted the roads in the Manhattan and Wamego areas.

An office assistant with the transportation department said crews had been out since 8 a.m. on Monday and would continue until the roads were cleared off.

Drivers encountered snow drifts 3 feet to 4 feet high around highway overpasses, officials said. Still, some motorists barreled ahead.

"It's typical," said a patrol dispatcher in Emporia. "People just don't know how to drive on this stuff."

The highway patrol reported no serious traffic injuries. Sheriff's departments around the state said ditches and highway medians were littered with vehicles that had skidded off the road.

The snow was wet and heavy as it fell, but became hard-packed and icy under the weight of vehicles.

Forecasters said accumulations were expected to reach 8 inches to a foot in the southwest, 6-10 inches in the southeast and 1 inch to 3 inches in the northeast corner of the state. Light snow should continue in the northeast but should taper off elsewhere Tuesday.

School districts in several western and south-central counties canceled classes in advance of the winter storm.

The snowfall began in the western and southern counties before dawn and continued into the evening as the storm system crept northeastward at about 20 mph.

Clinton seeks tax support

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton issued an economic "call to arms" Monday night, asking Americans in a televised address to accept a painful package of tax increases and spending cuts as the price for rebuilding the nation's economy.

The president lambasted the 12 years of Republican economics and said the stakes are high as he readies his own program.

"Change this fundamental will not be easy, nor will it be quick," he said. "But at stake is the control of our economic destiny.

"More Americans must contribute today so that all Americans can do better tomorrow," the president said in his first prime-time speech from the Oval Office.

Clinton's economic program — to be unveiled in a speech to a joint meeting of Congress Wednesday night — will be a far cry from the middle-class tax cuts he advocated during his campaign.

During his 11-minute preview, Clinton said he had hoped to improve education, reform health care and create jobs "without asking more of you." However, he said, "I cannot — because the deficit has increased so much, beyond my earlier estimates, beyond even the worst estimates from last year."

Promising to spread the pain among all, Clinton said 70 percent of the taxes he would propose "fall on the shoulders of those who make more than $100,000 a year." An administration official said Clinton meant seven out of 10 of the higher taxes would affect the wealthy — not that they would pay 70 percent of the additional burden.

The payoff from his plan, Clinton promised, will be "millions of long-term, good-paying jobs, including a program to jump-start our economy with another 500,000 jobs in 1993 and 1994."

Senate Republican Leader Bob Dole delivered a crisp response to Clinton's address, expressing skepticism that the administration was cutting spending far enough before asking for more taxes.

"We've both heard lots of speeches about 'sacrifice,' but we'll be working with you to make certain that sacrifice isn't just a presidential code word for more taxes, more spending and more mandates from Washington," Dole said. "That's the kind of sacrifice that will break the back of middle-class America and lead us right into economic ruin."

Clinton's plan envisions roughly $500 billion in tax increases and spending reductions on many popular programs over four years to cut the deficit. Big corporations and wealthy Americans face significant boosts in their income tax rates.

One part that will affect all Americans is a broad-based energy tax, based on the heat content of fuels, including electricity, coal, oil, natural gas and gasoline. Clinton has said the heat-content approach would be more progressive than a tax based strictly on sales.

The Oval Office appearance was part of a public relations blitz to overcome resistance in Congress and among the public. GOP leaders were sharpening their opposition in advance. Sen. Phil Gramm, R-Texas, said that "when Democrats say 'sacrifice,' they really mean 'taxes.'"

Warning that special interests will try to kill his plan, Clinton said, "Those who have profited from the status quo will oppose changes we make, every step of the way. They've already lined the corridors of power with high-priced lobbyists. They are the defenders of decline, but we are the architects of the future."

Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell said he hoped people wouldn't rush to judgment on Clinton's program.

"I emphasized that while it's not likely that any one of us will agree with every single point in his economic program, it has to be viewed as a whole," he told reporters at an AFL-CIO meeting in Florida.

Clinton's speech amounted to a lecture on the nation's economic problems and a hint of the solutions he proposes to fix them. Using charts and graphs — much as Ross Perot did last year — Clinton blamed the woes on the policies of Ronald Reagan and George Bush.

"My message to you is clear: the price of doing the same old thing is far higher than the price of change. That's why you sent me here — not to keep this seat warm, but to work for fundamental change."

Over the past 12 years, Clinton said, "the federal deficit roared out of control."

"Look at this," he said, referring to one graph. "The big tax cuts for the wealthy, the growth in government spending and soaring health care costs — all caused the federal deficit to explode.

Jardine resolves complaints of unfair housing

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Three cases in which residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments complained of unfair housing have been resolved, said Chuck Werring, director of the Department of Housing and Services.

"To my understanding, everyone that's been involved with this thing has come forward to meet with Susanne Tunstall," he said. "To our knowledge, everyone that's involved has been satisfied."

Charles Walters, mayor of Jardine, said one case was resolved after the resident met with Susanne Tunstall, family housing coordinator for the housing department.

Tunstall said she had no knowledge of the other two cases.

The names of those who complained have not been revealed, even to the Jardine Mayor's Council, said Judy Brown, junior in political science and member of the Jardine mayor's council.

The mayor's council is sponsoring a work session at 8 p.m. Feb. 23 at the Thomas J. Frith Community Center at Jardine for residents to discuss their concerns on this or any other matter, Walters said.

Work sessions are planned occasionally as part of the council meetings, Walters said. The mayor's council meets every other Tuesday.

The meetings of the mayor's council on Feb. 16 and Feb. 23 will be open to resident's general concerns, but Walters said specific concerns should be taken to Susanne Tunstall and the housing department.

"In some respects it (the work session) can be a healing process," he said. "It not only allows for the residents to talk, but it's also for the community after the stress it's endured these past two weeks."

At this point there is no official plan to investigate the complaints any further, Walters said.

"There is no need for a commission to pursue something that has never been suggested to exist," he said.

At a meeting of the mayor's council Feb. 9, Walters said a consensus was reached concerning how residents are assigned housing at Jardine.

The official position of the mayor's council states, "We, in having met with the family housing coordinator and the director of housing, have determined that applicants for residence in Jardine Terrace have requested to be situated with like applicants of like groups.

"The willingness of the housing staff to accommodate these residents has led to the consolidation of like peoples. The housing staff has assured the council that it will be their goal to place residents on a strictly first come, first serve basis,

▶K-STATE LOBBY DAY SCHEDULED FOR WEDNESDAY

RANCE AMES
Collegian

K-State Lobby Day, a day when students speak with Kansas legislators, will be Wednesday in Topeka.

An information session is planned for 9 p.m. Tuesday at the Student Government office in the K-State Union for any students interested in participating.

"Everyone is encouraged to attend," said Jim Persinger, senior in marketing and chief of staff for Student Body President Jackie McClaskey.

"K-State Lobby Day is a good opportunity for students to speak with Kansas legislators," he said.

The goal is to promote higher education and encourage support for K-State, he said.

"The information meeting on Tuesday will be informal," said Mary Farmer, junior in history and legislative affairs committee chair for Student Senate.

Everyone who is going to lobby day will meet at 7 a.m. Wednesday in front of the Union, Persinger said.

▶DOCTOR ASSISTS DEATH

ROSEVILLE, Mich. (AP) — Dr. Jack Kevorkian helped a 70-year-old invalid kill himself Monday by inhaling carbon monoxide. He was Kevorkian's 13th assisted suicide.

Hugh Gale, a former security guard, had been disabled more than 10 years with emphysema and congestive heart disease.

"He was in terrible pain," said Michael Schwartz, one of Kevorkian's attorneys. "He was on oxygen 100 percent of the time."

Lafene installs computer system

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

Lafene Health Center is preparing for the 21st century.

After three years of planning, the first pieces of a new computer system for Lafene have been installed. It is expected to take another six to eight months before the entire system is installed and all the bugs are worked out, Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said.

The new system is designed to end the traditional paper chase and help Lafene run more efficiently.

"It is designed to be more efficient, to cut down on time and cut down on the volume of paper produced," Zweimiller said.

The old manual system was not able to keep up with more than 300 daily visitors and increasing regulations.

Eventually, the physicians will have computer terminals in their offices. They will be able to order items such as lab tests electronically. When the test is completed, the results will be sent back via computers. Accounts receivable and statistics will be updated in the process.

The electronic process replaces the former method of written requests for lab work. This eliminates the need to have papers traversing from floor to floor that could pose confidentiality problems. Several levels of clearance and security block-outs help secure confidentiality with the new computer system, Zweimiller said.

Most of the changes will be internal.

"Students may never see the changes. What they may see is quicker check in and quicker pharmacy services," he said.

Card readers have been installed at the main registration desk and the pharmacy. These readers utilize the magnetic strips on the back of student identification cards to check on student status. All students who have paid fees are listed in the computer.

The new computer system was funded through reserves budgeted from the fiscal 1993 year, Zweimiller said.

To cut down on costs, University Counseling Services helped purchase the system.

"They will be using the same main computer. There will be a lot of sharing of hardware and software," Zweimiller said.

The system will be shared, but there will be two separate files, he said.

Like Lafene, Counseling Services is still in the process of implementing all of the applications. Right now, the office is capable of scheduling appointments, sending electronic messages, word processing and accounting.

"We still have other goals including record keeping and electronic access to all information systems," Fred Newton, director of counseling services, said.

"We are not there yet, and there will be a few bugs to work out."

Russians visit 'Land of Oz'

The Kansas weather was imitating the stereotypical Russian weather when Gen. Col. Vladimir Semenov and touring party stopped at K-State.

Semenov, chief of staff of the Russian army, was accompanied by his wife, Inna, and six other officers, including Gen. Col. Mayev, deputy commander of Armaments, and Gen. Col. Dukhov, commander of Air Defense and Artillery.

Also accompanying Semenov and his staff were Gen. Gordon Sullivan, chief of staff of the U. S. Army, and members of his staff.

Semenov and Sullivan started their tour of the United States in Alaska, then moved to California. Monday, they arrived in Kansas where they are touring K-State, Fort Riley and Fort Leavenworth. They will stop in Kentucky and end their trip at the Pentagon in Washington, D.C.

Maj. Bill McCormick, Public Affairs officer at Fort Riley, said the purpose of Semenov's visits was to observe routine military operations and training, and to improve the military and military relations. He also said relationships with Russia continue to play a critical role in the world.

K-State is the only university and ROTC program the general and his staff will have seen on their tour of the United States, McCormick said.

President Jon Wefald, Ruth Wefald, Bikram Gill, professor of plant pathology, and John Daly, assistant professor of history, greeted Semenov and his staff in Throckmorton Hall.

Wefald presented the general and his wife with K-State sweatshirts and coffee mugs. They gave the rest of the general's staff solar-powered calculators with the K-State logo.

Gill gave a presentation to the group on Kansas agriculture and then gave a tour of the fourth floor labs of Throckmorton. He showed them the latest technology in the field of wheat genetics.

The general's party moved to the Military Science Hall for a meeting with K-State Army and Air Force ROTC cadre and eight cadets.

Semenov sips coffee from an U. S. Air Force mug while waiting for a program about K-State ROTC to begin.

Lt. Col. William Cook gave a presentation to the generals about the ROTC program at K-State and training of officers in American universities. Cook told the generals the history, workings and phases of ROTC programs in the United States.

He also showed the number of successful officers who had gone through ROTC programs, one of whom was Sullivan. After hearing the translation, Semenov congratulated him.

K-State, KU competition draws blood

Years-long showdown benefits drive; Wildcats have current record

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

K-State and the University of Kansas will be squaring off again.

The universities will be competing to save lives in the Red Cross blood drive.

"The Red Cross visits both K-State and KU campuses every spring and fall semester, and the two schools have competed in the past to see which could collect the most volunteer blood donations," Jeff Sneed, Red Cross regional representative, said.

The intrastate competition has been going on informally for years, said Kalen Larson, director of communication for the Central Plains Region of America Red Cross Blood Service.

K-State holds the regional record for the most units collected at one drive. The record was reached during the October 1983 visit in which K-State students donated 1,747 units of blood.

The goal of the K-State blood drive is 1,000 units of blood as it has been in past drives. KU has had lower goals in the past, possibly because their drive has lasted only three days. This semester's drive for KU is scheduled for four days, and the goal also has been set at 1,000 units of blood.

"In the past few years, donations from both universities have dropped off," Larson said.

This competition is an effort to get university students to realize the need for blood, she said.

Larson uses examples to get students to understand how vital donating blood is.

"What if your little brother gets in an accident at home tonight? He may be many miles away, and he needs blood. It is important for the blood to be on the shelf, in the hospital where he is," she said.

People need to understand that blood must be donated now so it can be tested and processed in advance of an emergency, Larson said.

Nationwide statistics show 57 percent of the population is qualified to donate blood, Larson said. The statistics also show less than 6 percent donate.

Andrea Forbes, sophomore in biology, is part of that 6 percent.

"I give every time they come to the Union," she said.

Forbes has been giving blood since she was a senior in high school. She donates blood because she might need blood someday, she said.

Another student, Kara Flinchbaugh, senior in interior design, also said she feels it is important to donate blood.

BLOOD DRIVE

Blood can be donated from 10 a.m. until 4 p.m. Tuesday - Friday on the third floor of the K-State Union.

Flinchbaugh's husband, David, died in April 1991 from an auto-immune disease. While he was in the hospital, Flinchbaugh was receiving at least one-to-two pints of blood a day.

It is rare for young people in college to have experienced the necessity for blood donation, she said. If he had not have had access to a blood bank, he probably would have died within the first week of being hospitalized.

"Unless you've experienced first-hand someone who needs blood, you really don't realize how important it is," Flinchbaugh said.

Donors must be at least 17 years old, weigh at least 110 pounds and be in general good health. In addition, a donor must not have had hepatitis and can not be in the AIDS at-risk behavior group.

The blood drive will be from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Feb. 16-19 on the third floor of the Union.

Dutch may have the answer

THE ISSUE

Mercy killing may soon be allowed in the Netherlands under strict guidelines.

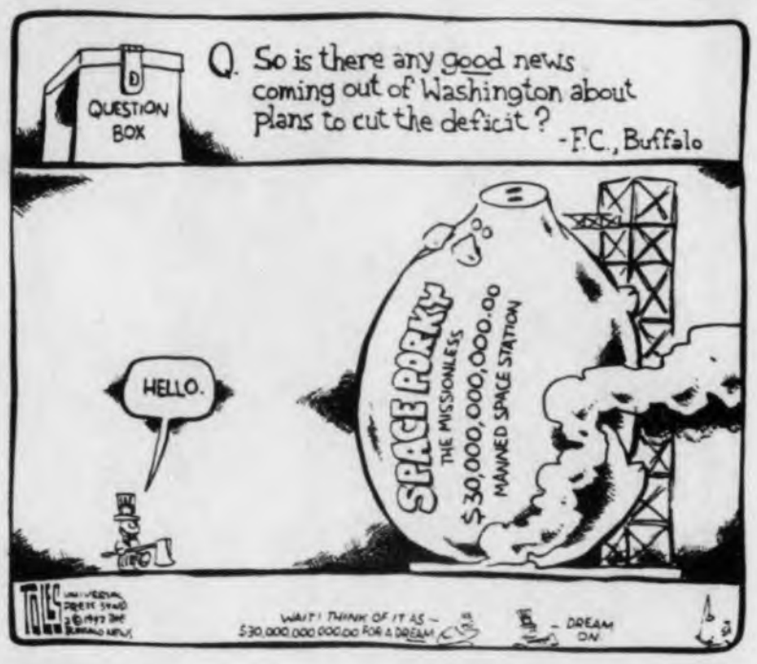
WE SUGGEST

The United States should examine the validity of euthanasia under certain circumstances.

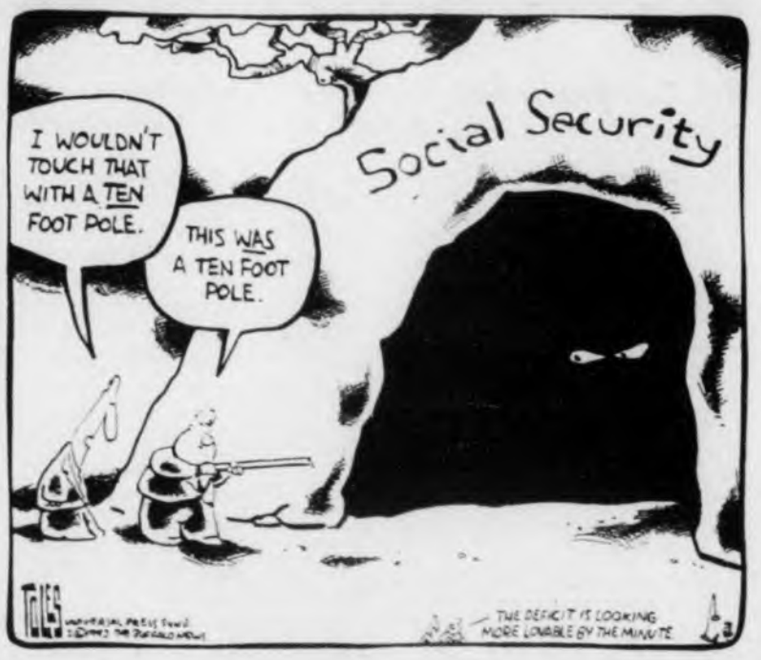
While laws legalizing or abolishing mercy killings are being debated in some countries, others are trying to find the elusive yet promising middle ground.

In the Netherlands, the lower house of Parliament has passed legislation that makes physicians immune from prosecution if they follow strict guidelines in mercy killings. The upper house's approval and the crown seal are expected to follow soon.

Meanwhile, Dr. Jack Kevorkian, a retired pathologist turned mercy killer, has announced he will defy a Michigan law that makes assisting a suicide a felony.



Kevorkian did his 13th assisted suicide Monday for a man who had been disabled with emphysema and congestive heart disease for more than 10 years.



The right to die has been argued for some time. Some say such laws as the Dutch proposal can be considered a way of legalizing murder if you follow strict guidelines. Others maintain euthanasia is more humane than watching a loved one die a drawn-out, excruciating death.

Americans need to be careful and watchful of legislatures confronting the issue, but it is becoming clear that a possible answer lies somewhere between the two extremes.

Euthanasia can mean painless, peaceful death. Consider the family's response to a relative's decision to die after the fact. Consider the physician who believes they are doing the right thing. Consider the person who doesn't want to face another day.

Readers should think for themselves

Editor,

I'm writing because I found Brad Seabourn's column on Feb. 11 rather offensive. I know I'm not the first to write these words.

I would imagine that the editor has come to expect angry responses from Christians the day after Brad writes a column dealing with religion. In my past three years at this school, I've read many of Brad's columns and then read angry words from disgruntled believers.

Many letters have stated that Brad and the rest of our campus don't understand who God is. Some have sounded like they were written from the paradigm of brother Jed who was in front of the K-State Union last semester calling people dirty, little queers and condemning them to hell.

Unlike those who have gone before me, I don't wish to debate Mr. Seabourn, even though I feel I'd do pretty well. I don't want to quote scripture or throw around Christian cliches. I want to encourage the students of this University and anyone else reading Brad's columns to investigate God and the Bible for themselves.

It is dangerous to believe someone just because the newspaper lets them voice his opinions. Students should not settle for a malicious, negative God just because Brad Seabourn tells them that's who He is.

It is foolish to believe someone just because they have a title such as columnist, even pastor. I believe if people seek and investigate honestly, they will find God to be amazingly different than Brad has found Him to be.

Seabourn preaches a ministry of hatred

Editor,

Because Brad Seabourn's commentary in the Collegian seems generally designed to provoke heated response, I have refrained from providing any in the past. It seems to me that nothing would satisfy his ego more than to get responses attacking his ideas and positions. However, after his Feb. 11 column, I am persuaded to question his intent and consequently the validity of his position and that of the Collegian.

If Seabourn's intent is to question accepted tenets of our society and so to foster academic debate on the subject, that is one thing. It is then quite appropriate, and even welcome, for only by questioning do we understand society and ourselves.

However, I maintain that in order to participate in a debate, one must possess a relatively open mind. Seabourn has never shown himself to possess such a mind.

Seabourn preaches a religion of hatred. This not only renders his argument against the love of Christian teaching invalid, but may also weaken his legal position. My impression is that the courts may not extend the constitutional protection of freedom of speech to those who preach such pure hatred — at least, not in the context of a state university.

The world has enough hatred in it without Seabourn adding his own. Despite his opinion to the contrary, historians generally agree Jesus of Nazareth gave the world the most ethical teachings it has yet seen, and that he not only was a legitimate figure of history, but he was one of the single most important figures in all of history. He died for love.

▶ LAFENE

Health center much maligned in article

Editor,

I was extremely appalled by the irresponsible reporting or editing shown by the Collegian article Feb. 11, "Bad experiences keep some from using Lafene."

Apparently my spending of nearly two hours of time with the reporter, Mr. Anderson, explaining the policies and procedures of Lafene, or any healthcare facility, the intricate and comprehensive quality assurance program to which Lafene adheres and responds to consumer complaints and concerns (when we know about them), the professional recognition and accreditation we are given and the quality and deeply caring attitude of our staff might as well have been spent in more productive pursuits as those points were certainly not well addressed.

I can only say again, all members of our staff at Lafene are highly qualified professionals, no matter in which department they work, and I know they also work very hard to care for the students. The article did, at least, have one thing correct: "I'm highly confident in all the staff at Lafene."

And, oh yes, we will all continue to maintain quality health care for the K-State students — and grant interviews to Collegian staff and the many students who need information and assistance for their classroom work.

We are a part of this K-State community.

Morality is not relative to individuals

JOHN HART

One out of four UCLA freshman males said they would commit rape if they knew they could get away with it, this according to a survey of 288 students conducted by a UCLA psychologist.

A recent survey of 150 K-State students conducted by a public relations firm found that 67.4 percent of those surveyed cheat.

These are two of many statistics that signify a gap in the ethical standards within our society.

The problem with ethics or morality in America is that the notion of objective standards has been replaced with the subjective philosophy of moral relativism. This is the belief that moral standards are to be defined by each individual according to their preferences and that the standards of one person should not be used to judge the actions of another person.

Universities play a key role in the promulgation of moral relativism. I would assume that anyone who has taken a class in the humanities or especially the social sciences has encountered this teaching, which often goes something like this.

"Every culture has its own unique standard of morality. Therefore, we can't judge other people or cultures by our own culturally defined standard of morality. For example, family structures and sexual behaviors that seem weird to us are normal to another culture. There is no absolute truth. Truth and standards are relative to culture."

Supporters of this teaching do offer cogent arguments for their position, yet their claims are based on a limited view of reality.

Social scientists, and anthropologists in particular, like to stress the differences in cultural moralities. However, if you compare the moral teachings of every culture and civilization in history, you will be struck by the similarity of their standards. The differences would, for the most part, be negligible.

For example, the Chinese, ancient Greeks and Cherokee developed their moralities independently of one another. Yet, they share many basic values such as a respect for the elderly, an esteem for bravery, a disdain for thievery and an intolerance for murder.

C. S. Lewis suggested a totally different cultural morality, one consistent with relativistic teachings, calling for a country where people were honored for running away in battle or where a man felt good about about betraying his closest friends.

He writes, "Selfishness has never been admired. Men have differed as to whether you should have one wife or four. But they have always agreed that you must not simply have any woman you liked."

Subscribers of moral relativism like to wear the halo of "tolerance," since they believe individual morality should never be labeled as wrong. They believe such individual morality should be tolerated as an individual lifestyle choice.

Today, "tolerance" is not the treating of people as equals because they are human beings and worthy of respect, rather it is the accepting of every personal moral option as viable.

To disagree with this narrow position results in being labeled intolerant. In 10, 20 or 30 years, this thinking may very possibly lead our society to extend "tolerance" toward pedophiliacs. After all, isn't a sexual orientation toward children just another individual lifestyle choice?

Issues such as gay rights and abortion are supported by the framework of moral relativism. Several years ago, during a debate at my high school, I asked Dick Kurtenbach of the American Civil Liberties Union to explain to me what a fetus was if it wasn't a person. He responded evasively and with relativistic flavor, "I'm not going to impose my values on you, and you're not going to impose your values on me."

The problem with his response was that he was, and still is, imposing his values on me. For the past 20 years, the pro-choice movement has imposed its values on society. Now, the gay-rights movement is seeking to impose its values on many parts of society from the military to public education.

Reality demonstrates that the question should not be, "Is it proper to impose your values on society?" but, "Whose values are going to be imposed on society?"

The bottom line is that moral relativism is a subtle assault on traditional values and ethics grounded in the Judeo-Christian tradition. Contrary to the dogma of liberal academia, culture is not an omnipotent force driving, shaping and controlling every aspect of our lives. Culture is a force but not The Force.

People throughout history have shared a common conscience and a common ethical standard derived from a common source that transcends culture. That common source is an objective, absolute standard of morality that, in part, has been written into our consciences by our creator. The goal here is not to outline a legalistic ethical standard that everyone should live by, but to demonstrate the existence of an objective, absolute ethical standard that is not for us to write or define on an individual, relative level, but to discover.

Cats head to Boulder to face 0-8 Buffaloes

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Tonight's contest against the Colorado Buffaloes at the Coors Events Center in Boulder, Colo., could be the biggest game of the season for the Wildcats.

K-State, at one time 4-1 in the Big Eight — with a couple of road victories to boot — is now 15-5 overall and 5-3 in the conference. The Wildcats were in sole possession of second place less than two weeks ago, upsetting the likes of No. 16 Oklahoma and getting ranked for the first time in five years.

Things are different now.

True, the Cats are still in sole possession of second place in the Big Eight. And yes, K-State is still off to its best start since the 1981-82 season.

But K-State is also just a game-and-a-half away from being the seventh-place team in the Big Eight. The Cats are struggling offensively and defensively, shooting just 33 percent from the field in the last three games while allowing their opponents to shoot 51 percent.

And this game is the first of a three-game swing that includes stops in both Lawrence and Norman, Okla.

"This is a big stretch," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said.

"It's a very tough stretch, a very demanding stretch. It'll be interesting to see how our team responds."

Colorado, which has lost 13 of its last 14 Big Eight games dating back to last season — and all eight this season — is hungry for a win.

"If you hadn't slept for two weeks, wouldn't you want to sleep?" Buffalo coach Joe Harrington said. "Of course we're hungry for a win."

And Harrington may have some added incentive to post a home victory.

During the Buffaloes' 85-61 home loss to Oklahoma State on Feb. 3, he had to endure chants of "Joe must go" from the Colorado student section. Colorado is losing its conference games by an average of 18 points a contest.

"Obviously, when you haven't won in two weeks, you want to win," Harrington said.

Actually, the Buffaloes haven't posted a win since a Jan. 20, victory over the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

In Manhattan, Colorado forced K-State into overtime before the Wildcats pulled out an 83-78 win.

"They're really dangerous," Altman said. "This is a game that, because of our close game here, they're really going to concentrate on.

"They're going to be playing awfully loose because they have nothing to lose. And we're struggling right now. So, I'm sure this is a game they think they could definitely get."

For the Wildcats, tonight's game marks the fourth in nine days.

But Altman is quick to dispel rumors that fatigue is playing a role in the Cats' struggles, particularly Saturday's loss to Nebraska.

"I guess that would be a convenient excuse to use," he said. "But we had a day off Thursday and a light practice Friday. So, we should have been ready."

A loss to Colorado would put a damper on the Cats' once-shiny NCAA tournament hopes.

An 18-win season — which would all but assure a share in the festivities of March Madness — would be hard to come by with the remainder of the schedule. Following tonight's game, the Cats play at Kansas and then Oklahoma.

K-State then returns home to play a pair of home games to third-place Oklahoma State and Missouri — who pounded the Wildcats in Columbia.

The season is wrapped up at Iowa State, where the Cyclones are the only Big Eight team with a spotless home record (12-0). Iowa State is 26-2 at home during the last two seasons.

Despite the tough upcoming schedule — and the recent drought — the Wildcats said K-State belongs in the second-place slot of the conference.

"We're fighters," Anthony Beane said. "And there's still no doubt in our minds that we're still one of the top teams in the Big Eight."

Tipoff is at 8 p.m., and the game is scheduled to be televised by Prime.

Wildcat baseball to endure one of nation's toughest schedules

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Adam Green, freshman outfielder, flips a ball for Chris Hess, freshman outfielder, to hit into a net during baseball practice Monday afternoon at the Brandenberry Indoor Complex. Falling temperatures and snow forced the team to practice indoors. The Cats' first series of the season is on the road against Arkansas this weekend.

But Coach Clark says he is happy with opponents

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

In its 92 years of existence, the Wildcat baseball team has never been to the NCAA tournament.

Cat coach Mike Clark said he has taken the first step in changing that — a tough non-conference schedule.

With the likes of Arkansas, Wichita State, Minnesota and Arizona on K-State's 1993 agenda, the Cats are in a position to have one of the toughest schedules in the nation.

Just like Clark said he wants it.

"If you're going to be great, you have to play the great teams," he said. "We may get our noses bloodied a couple of times, but if we funnel that in the right direction, by the time we get to the Big Eight, we're going to be a pretty salty ball club."

But isn't Clark worried that his team — 28-28 last year and in fifth place of the Big Eight with an 8-16 record — could suffer some shattered confidence during the non-conference season?

"Is playing a weak schedule and getting all of these wins and not being competitive in the Big Eight better than being tough and maybe going through some tough times and learning from it?" Clark said.

"If you win a ballgame and yet your team doesn't learn and get any better — that's not what it's all about. I want this team to be competitive."

And being competitive simply during the conference schedule may not be enough.

"We finished second in the Big Eight three years ago and didn't even get a sniff from the NCAA," Clark said. "What's it going to take for us to go to a regional? It's going to take us knocking off an Arizona, knocking off a Wichita State a couple of times, beating a Washington.

"People are asking me questions — it's almost like they want me to apologize for having a great schedule. I'm not going to apologize."

Some people who won't be asking for apologies from Clark are his players — both returners and newcomers.

"The schedule is going to help us in the Big Eight," returning pitcher Dan Driskill said. "In past years, we've played teams like NAIA teams, and that doesn't help any.

"If we beat these teams, it's going to make us look that much better."

And junior Brian Morrow, a transfer first baseman, said the Cats' tough schedule is the right move for K-State.

"This is the toughest schedule I've ever seen," he said. "But if you want to move up, an easier schedule is not the way to go."

Morrow should know a thing or two about tough schedules — he transferred from Wichita State, a perennial baseball powerhouse.

Clark said only two of the teams that fall on the Wildcats' schedule are Division II schools.

"Even those are strong Division II schools."

Major league baseball has some serious problems

BRIAN ANDERSON

Less than five weeks from now, the season of spring begins.

Temperatures will be warmer, trees will be showing new leaves, flowers will begin to bloom, and another season of professional baseball will start.

Ugh, not another baseball season!

And, believe it or not, spring training starts later this week.

UUUUUgggggghhhhh!

OK, Anderson, calm down. Maybe this can be a great season. There might be a new commissioner who will bring back prosperity and that good old feeling of long ago.

Maybe, just maybe, Marge Schott won't sue the team owners for banning her for a year. Maybe Steve Howe won't get caught with drugs on him — or in him. Maybe there is a player out there who doesn't want a pay raise after hitting .200 with one home run, or a pitcher asking for $2 million whose ERA is less than 5.00 and has three wins.

Maybe the Kansas City Royals can return to their glory days with the new players contributing with the familiar Royal players. Maybe Manager Hal McRae can prove he can put a team together to contend in the wide-open American League West race.

Yea, right.

I guess I'm asking for the world. But it's not like I'm wishing for the Seattle Mariners to win the division or for the Chicago Cubs to go to the World Series.

There could be a silver lining in this dark cloud. Let's take one problem at a time. First, the next commissioner of major league baseball.

■ The next commish needs to be somewhat popular — such as Los Angeles Olympic organizer Peter Ueberroth and someone who cares for the game — a person like Fay Vincent would be good.

Add to the mix a person who played and has been in some type of management position in the majors and can get more minorities into baseball, like Hank Aaron. He would bring credibility to baseball.

■ Next is Marge Schott. Sure, some type of punishment should be given, but she is like every other owner — only she got caught. I don't believe there is an owner who has never made a racially-slurred comment.

The only sure way to stop the comments are to have minorities own teams. With the price of team's increasing and the few number of filthy-rich minorities, I probably won't see a minority-owned team in my lifetime.

■ If Steve Howe were a cat, he would be on the last of his nine lives. He ought to give it up now.

■ A player should be paid by performance. I would like to see players receive huge bonuses when they win awards. If a player is injured for more than a certain amount of time, the player should receive the same paycheck as the previous year.

■ As for the Royals, they look good on paper. With the Oakland Athletics losing players to trades and the Chicago White Sox adapting to new players, the top team in the West is the Minnesota Twins.

It seems Kansas City could get third — if they don't start 1-15.

Yea, I'm asking for too much. Ugh!

SPORTS DIGEST

▶ROYALS SIGN MONTGOMERY

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Relief pitcher Jeff Montgomery agreed Monday to a three-year contract worth $11 million with the Kansas City Royals.

He had 39 saves for the Royals last season. The contract also includes an option year.

Montgomery, 31, received $2.46 million last season. He had asked for $4.3 million a year, and the Royals had offered $3.25 million. He was the last Kansas City player to settle with the club.

He recorded 39 saves in 46 opportunities with a 2.18 ERA last year. His 39 saves were the third highest in club history — trailing Dan Quisenberry's 45 in 1983 and 44 in 1984.

▶CORNHUSKERS FALL IN LINCOLN

LINCOLN, Neb. (AP) — Guard Brooks Thompson scored seven of his 10 points in the final five minutes as Oklahoma State pulled away from Nebraska to take a 73-63 Big Eight road win Monday.

The game was decided at the free throw line where Oklahoma State (15-5, 6-4) hit 19 of 28 attempts. Nebraska only got to the line five times, hitting four.

Reeves led five Cowboys in double figures with 16 points.

Fred Burley had 13, Randy Rutherford 12 and Von Bennett 11.

Piatkowski led Nebraska, now 16-8 and 4-5, with 18, Derrick Chandler had 17 and Jamar Johnson 11.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Reader resents remark regarding hell-bent accountants

DEAR CASSANDRA,

There is a curiosity I've been wondering about for quite some time now, which perhaps you can shed some light upon.

I'm a junior here at K-State. I'm intelligent and sincere. I've been told that I have a great personality and am very humorous. I am not vain, but honestly, however, (if I do say so myself) I am quite good-looking. I am looking for that "significant other" — a fine woman to share all with and to explore life together.

Ideally, that woman would be very intelligent herself and have a similar outlook on life. Please don't misunderstand me — I'm not necessarily after a Cindy Crawford look-alike. To the contrary, I find the girl-next-door type of woman most attractive of all. Evidently, many women on campus find me attractive as well, due to the fact that I receive many "looks" from attractive women when I walk across campus, etc.

The curiosity lies in the fact that many of the women I would normally approach for a date (they have given me "invitational signals") are also wearing rings on their ring finger (the finger on which engagement/wedding rings are worn). Believe it when I say that I want nothing to do with a woman who is already involved with another person. I am looking for a long-term, slow-moving, caring and, above all, monogamous relationship.

I recently met an interesting woman and wrote a poem for her. As I was about to give this gift to her, in hopes of initiating a relationship, I noticed a ring adorning her ring finger.

Now the problem lies in the fact that this ring was not an "average" ring for that particular finger. It was a golden coin rather than a diamond.

I have also noticed that many other women wear various other styles of rings on that finger (class rings, birthstones, etc.).

Enlighten me, Cass. Are many of these women just trying to ward off the advances of "geeks" (a term which I sometimes consider for myself, as well)? Do these women not want to meet anyone new at the moment, even if they are single? Hey! What's the deal?

Perplexed Poet

DEAR PERPLEXED

Believe it or not, single women often wear rings on their ring fingers for no reason at all. But if a woman has an engagement or wedding ring on her ring finger, it is usually safe to assume that she is either a) engaged or b) married. The same rule also applies to men (except for the part about engagement rings).

We women don't wear class rings, birthstones, etc. as a way to ward off "geeks" (although, if such rings serve this purpose, we won't complain).

My advice to you would be to quit paying so much attention to ring fingers and just let dashing good looks, quick wit and an intelligent mind take care of the rest.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I don't have much to say but I do believe that you owe accountants an apology. In Thursday's column you said "obviously, some of the letters are fakes sent in by accounting students hell-bent on having a wild time."

I resent that remark. Why does it have to be accountants? I would like an apology. I'm sure I speak for all accountants when I say we can find better, more pleasant things to do than to write stupid profound letters to you.

Pissed Off

DEAR OFF,

You are right, and I apologize.

And you were right to speak out for all accountants — I'm sure they have better things to do than send me "stupid, profound" letters. However, I'm glad you took it upon yourself to send me such a profoundly stupid letter.

I don't know how the word "accountants" ever got into the paper. What I meant to say was "obviously, some of the letters are fakes sent in by horticulture students hell-bent on having a wild time."

Again, I apologize to all accountants for my truly unfair remark.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

despite future requests."

There will be no exceptions to the first come, first serve rule, Walters said.

"We all realized it would be best to stick with that goal, which is first come, first serve," he said.

Werring said he thought part of the confusion has been about the way the housing department assigns apartments to residents.

Jardine residents who have complaints need to present them to the family housing coordinator or to the mayor's council, Walters said.

"I think this has been a painful experience for both the residents and the members of the housing staff. Residents need to know that both the mayor's council and the housing staff are here to serve them and assist them," Walters said.

"If at anytime they feel dissatisfaction, they need to share those feelings both with Mrs. Tunstall and their elected representatives."

Clinton asks American people to accept painful tax package

Our debt is now four times as big as it was in 1980."

He said as the deficit increased, "investments in the things that make us stronger, smarter and safer were neglected — less was invested in education, less in our children's future, less in transportation, less in local law enforcement. An awful lot of your money was wasted."

Rep. Romano L. Mazzoli, D-Ky., came away from a meeting with Clinton saying he expected the president to propose higher taxes on tobacco and alcohol. Clinton also is prepared to seek restrictions on Medicare payments for doctors and hospitals but not increased premiums for the elderly.

Monday night, Clinton promised to "chart a course that will enable us to compete and win."

He said, "My message to you is clear: The price of doing the same old thing is far higher than the price of change."

East greets West at Fort Riley

The irony of Russian Gen. Col. Vladimir Semenov touring Fort Riley was not lost on the men who watched, as he made his way around the base Tuesday.

"It's not something you expected to happen," Staff Sgt. Jim Lahtunen said. "I was in Germany when the wall came down and relationships were normalized but. ...," the 7-1/2 year veteran said, his voice trailing off.

Semenov, 52, currently serves as commander of the general purpose forces for the Russian Federation. Before the break-up of the Soviet Union, he served as commander-in-chief of Soviet ground forces and deputy minister of defense.

Fort Riley was only one of his stops as part of a nationwide tour of American military bases to see American weapons and training methods. Future stops include Fort Leavenworth and Fort Cambell, Ky., before an official greeting by army officials in Washington, D.C.

Translators did the communicating as Semenov toured a Bradley Fighting Vehicle and a M1A1 Tank. However Lahtunen, who helped show Semenov the ins and outs of the Bradley, said it was pretty much business as usual, even considering the language barrier.

"He knows what he's doing," Lahtunen said. "He asked the same questions I would ask."

Gen. Thomas Hartzog, commander of the 1st Infantry Division, said he agreed with Lahtunen. He said he noticed something else as well.

"We're finding we're much more alike than we are dissimilar," he said. "We're all soldiers."

Hartzog said Semenov was fascinated by Fort Riley's relationship with the community, saying Russian military bases are usually isolated.

"He can't believe the local bakery delivers," he said.

After watching both Bradleys and M1A1 tanks on a stationary firing line, Semenov then witnessed a simulated battle. Hartzog said the general was seeing a well-trained fighting force.

"They're going to leave knowing they've seen a quality fighting force in action," he said.

Other Fort Riley soldiers echoed Hartzog.

"He's going to come away with a broader knowledge of what we have and how we train," Spc. James Ogle said. "We're ready to go anywhere."

But scaring Semenov with military might wasn't the purpose of the general's trip, Maj. Bill McCormick said.

"We're trying to build a military relationship," he said.

Tapes seek to educate schools

JULIE CORBIN

A female elementary school teacher, who was the target of strong sexual attention from several of her male colleagues, told them to stop sexually harassing her. The next day she found a hand-lettered note on her desk, informing her "sexual harassment is hard to prove." The note was written on a sanitary napkin.

This is one of many sexual harassment cases with which Bob Shoop, K-State professor of educational law, has come in contact.

The list goes on.

While discussing the differences between wants and needs, a male teacher singles out a female student and announces to the class, "Mary may want me, but does she need me? Mary, which is it? Do you want me or do you need me?" When Mary's mother complained to the school authorities, she was told the teacher "did not mean anything by the action — that was just the way he was".

When the parent persisted, the authorities had the teacher apologize to the class. His response was, "Class, I have to apologize for my actions. It seems Mary can't take a joke. I guess we can't have any fun in this class."

"Many people are trained to believe they can get away with it, or that there's nothing wrong," Shoop said when speaking about sexual harassment. "This is the reason it is so important in the schools to protect the administration, teachers, and staff from being sued. But more importantly, to educate those in the school systems of inappropriate behavior.

"We train people about how to behave," Shoop said. "What we must do now is establish what is appropriate behavior."

Shoop is the co-founder and president of Quality Work Environments Inc., a production and consulting company that has recently produced two video tape programs on elimination of sexual harassment in the public schools and businesses.

He is also the author of more than 100 journal articles, six books and several monographs and book chapters on various legal issues. He is now in the process of writing a book on school law for the classroom teacher and a book on sexual harassment in the schools. Both will be published by next fall.

"Sexual harassment is any unwanted action of a sexual nature," Shoop said. "That could be pictures, cartoons, faxes, E-Mail, jokes, books, touching, petting, groping or that could be making a proposition to someone. Sexual harassment runs in a variety of different designs."

Sexual harassment has become a widely discussed issue in the three years since Anita Hill testified against U.S. Supreme Court justice nominee Clarence Thomas. However, many companies and schools shy away from the issue.

The reason is they do not think it is a very big issue. They think they understand sexual harassment, and they do not think it is directly related to them, Shoop said.

For the first time this year, in the case Franklin v. Gwennett, the Supreme Court ruled sexual harassment is a violation of Title Nine. If schools know sexual harassment is occurring and do nothing to remedy the problem, they risk the chance of losing federal funding as well as

▶UNIVERSITY OFFICIALS TO ANSWER TO ALLEGATIONS

A University official said Tuesday K-State will respond to charges it violated the constitutional rights of a student.

Jennifer Kassebaum, University attorney, said K-State will file a response by Friday as a result of an amended petition for judicial review filed by Mark Mazour, junior in architectural engineering.

Mazour alleges, among other things, his rights of due process were violated by the panel that found him guilty of violating the University Policy Prohibiting Sexual Violence. He charges the chairwoman of the panel, Susan Scott, assistant dean of student life, was biased against him.

He was arrested on charges of rape and sodomy last fall during the basketball ticket campout where the incident allegedly occurred. The Riley County district attorney's office chose not to take the case to trial because of insufficient evidence.

The University's response will include a complete record of the panel's meetings, Kassebaum said. She refused to comment on whether those records would refute his allegations.

▶COMMITTEE RESPONDS TO BAD PUBLICITY ABOUT LAFENE

DAVID GROSKO
Collegian

A Student Health Advisory Committee met Tuesday and discussed bad publicity Lafene Health Center has received.

"I hate the fact there is a feeling of distrust about Lafene," Larry Moeller, Lafene health director, said.

Moeller said the staff of Lafene is dedicated to providing quality health care. This has been shown by surveys that reveal 88 percent of the seniors who received care at Lafene for four years at K-State gave high, satisfactory ratings.

"Lafene is not a self-serving body. We are here for the entire K-State community," Moeller said.

One of the ideas the committee had to deal with the bad publicity is to address Student Senate and other student leadership groups about Lafene's medical position, he said.

Mike Burton, junior in pre-medicine and member of the Student Health Advisory Committee, said he was upset with a talk show called Purple Affairs on KSDB-FM 91.9 Monday night that dealt with Lafene.

Rumors fuel prejudices

ROBBIE SPEARS

Rumors about black people involve issues of racism, poverty and education, said Jawanza Kunjufu, executive director of the African American Images Talent Center, in his lecture Monday in K-State Union Forum Hall.

He said many people believe black Americans are poor and lazy.

"If we were lazy, how come they brought us here to do their work. Maybe they were the ones that were lazy," he said.

People who are racists put black people into one economic category but forget there is more to it, he said.

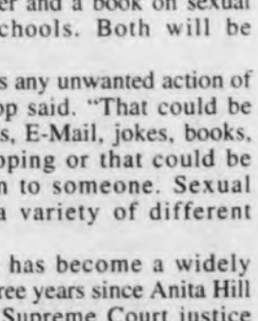
"Yes, there is 33 percent of African Americans below the poverty level, and yes, there are 25 percent that make above $40,000 a year," he said.

Forty percent of black 17-year-old males cannot read beyond the sixth-grade level, and 72 percent of black American boys will not graduate from high school, he said.

Kunjufu said these two examples illustrate the rumor of black Americans not being able to exceed their parents in academic achievement.

"In Kansas City, kids tease other kids for getting good grades. When black kids make the honor roll, other black kids say they're being too white," he said. "Well, if white is being smart, what is being black?"

Kunjufu said he would like to see students study more because practice makes better students.



"That which you do most will be that which you do best."

Many have the false conception black people are inferior, he said.

"If we are inferior, then why discriminate," he said.

He said many white people aren't comfortable with black

ON THE AGENDA

Lafene class helps teach weight control

MARK JONES
Collegian

Sound nutrition, exercise and motivation are taught in the weight control class offered at Lafene Health Center.

The class meets once a week and is free to all students who have paid health fees, Martha Olson, registered dietitian, said.

"We really don't lecture," Olson said. "It's a very informal class.

"We discuss where we're going, each individual goal is set, we present an interesting 10-minute presentation, and then we have a group discussion," she said.

Although the class is taught in a group setting, it focuses on the individual.

The students in the class keep detailed lists of everything they eat throughout the week to make sure they are eating enough of the right foods, said Lafene intern Paige Brosch, senior in foods and nutrition-exercise science.

Students in the class develop their own exercise programs.

"An exercise program is individual," said Lafene intern Kristy Newlon, graduate student in health education. "You can't set a program for everybody."

The exercise program is based on what the student likes to do. Factors include preferred sports and activities, amount of time available, whether the student likes to exercise alone or with others and whether the student's goal is weight control or toning up, Newlon said.

"The emphasis of the course is weight control," Olson said. "Most of the students in it need to lose some weight, but they are also learning overall good health and controlling your weight to a healthy level.

"We set goals, not necessarily for weight, but behavioral goals," Olson said. "Setting the weight goals are the least emphasized, but we do that just like tests are used as a measurement of how you are learning the material in a formal teaching class. Weigh-ins give us an idea if we are on track with the goals set by the individual."

The group is very open in discussing topics, Brosch said.

"I think a lot of the people get support from the other members of the group."

Samples try out Manhattan scene

Sold-out show rocks Snookie's to begin tour

Lights went up. Wires were cut. Speakers were placed. Raw materials were scattered across the dance floor.

The phone was ringing off the hook — Were they still playing? Are they coming? Is the show sold out?

Yes.

And the Samples were braving the snowy weather on their trip from Boulder, Colo., to Manhattan to play the first date of their three-week tour at Snookie's Bar Monday night.

Tired-looking band members tripped up the steep stairs to check out the new atmosphere.

Keyboardist Al Laughlin was intently studying the stage from the back of the bar.

Other members seemed to be sensing what the evening would hold for them and what the response would be.

Then they took over, moving in and unpacking equipment for the evening's performance.

One Snookie's employee said that he had never seen such enthusiasm in a band, that they usually don't move everything in themselves, and that he was surprised at their clearly professional attitude.

"We just got a new PA system, and this is the first time we'll use it for a national act," Ken Snook, manager of Snookie's, said.

According to Snook, he's wanted to get more national acts into Manhattan, and this was the first time since the Romantics played that it was a sell-out

The Samples do more than eat free food at the local King-Super grocery store.

The Boulder, Colo., quartet made its first stop in Manhattan Monday night as part of an upcoming three-week tour that will wrap up in California, when they'll begin recording a fourth compact disc.

Monday night was the Samples' debut in Manhattan, but not for Kansas. They've also played in Lawrence, Kansas City and Eudora.

"I had heard that they were good, and we tried to set an earlier date, but it fell through. I just waited until I got the contract in my hand before I announced they were coming," Ken Snook, manager of Snookie's Bar said.

The Manhattan performance was far from their first. The

IN OUR OPINION

By the Collegian Editorial Board

The cure is worse than the wash

THE ISSUE

A shrinking number of residence hall residents has forced the housing department to charge for the use of washers and dryers.

WE SUGGEST

The solution may only serve to discourage more students from the living option of residence halls.

Look out, mom and dad, next year, students living in K-State residence halls will be bringing their dirty laundry home for you to do. You see, the halls are going to start charging for the use of clothes washers and dryers, which currently are available free of charge, to residents.

According to the Department of Housing and Dining Services, the change is necessary to keep the room rental rates down over the long run. Rates have increased in recent years to combat a shrinking number of students living in the halls.

A wash will cost 50 cents, and a dry will be 25 cents — a little cheaper than the coin-operated laundries located throughout Manhattan.

But will it be cheap enough?

The housing department needs to evaluate what this action may cost them in the long run.

Students are attracted to residence halls because of the services and advantages offered. Take these away, and the halls may suddenly lose their appeal. More students may suddenly be looking to live off campus, driving up rental rates for apartments and houses that are already scarce.

Less students living in the halls means less revenue for the housing department. Less revenue means future rate increases. Additional rate increases means less students wanting to live in the halls.

And unlike the washing machine, this cycle may not end any time soon.

AN EYE FOR AN EYE FOR AN EYE ...

Dick Cavett graduated from the same high school I graduated from. I am not real sure why I know this, but it seemed real important at one point.

In the auditorium of the same high school, Charlie Starkweather carved his name on a seat. After graduation, he went on to kill a slew of people in Nebraska and Wyoming. He was the last person to be put to death by the state of Nebraska.

KELLY KLAWONN

This year, the state of Washington had to use an Army manual to figure out how to ensure the "proper" orchestration of a hanging in Walla Walla.

As far as the criminals are concerned, there is not a groundswell of people banning together in support of the acts they have committed. But that should not justify their murder.

Why Charlie Starkweather became a murderer, and Dick Cavett a journalist, is a pointless matter when discussing criminal punishments.

The fundamental question is not how severe or heinous an act was, but rather what a civil society should use as punishment for its criminals.

The great irony of the United States judicial system is that in the case of capital punishment, the punishment is ultimately the same as the crime.

Some people may argue that the criminal who murders another person does it with such a malicious disregard for life that they should not continue to live. But that sounds strangely familiar to how society treats these criminals.

Today, people tune in to Court TV, "rooting" for a prosecution and hopefully a stiff sentence. An extremely horrifying case will be made into a movie of the week. Hundreds of people stand outside a penitentiary, hoping to get a glimpse of the action. People want to watch the execution of a criminal on television.

The death penalty is not an individual taking another life. It is a society and its institutions taking that life. Meaning, when a person is executed, hanged, given lethal injection, put in front of the firing squad, or strapped into the electric chair, it is us — the constituent elements of society — that are in effect saying it is OK to end another life. We are effectively giving an artificial construct the power over life and death.

Freedom should be the highest law in the land. Regardless of the crime, the severity or the heinous nature of the act, nothing justifies the taking of another life. Each and every one of us should have the right to live if we choose. And yes, we should have the right to die as well.

The death penalty is wrong because it is still one person killing another person. To eliminate the state control over life, the decision to be put to death should be left to the criminal.

For example, if a person is convicted of raping and killing a woman, they should not be allowed to be an active part of society. Pretend for a moment that life incarceration meant just that — LIFE incarceration. This person would never get out, never have a chance at parole, would never be a part of, or threat to society. The person would, in effect, have the same impact on the lives of those in the community as he or she would have if he or she were dead.

People will argue that taxpayers should not have to pay to keep this man or woman alive. But we are obligated to pay, because there is not a price tag on life, and we never have the right to kill another human being. Period.

This does not mean capital punishment does not have a place in society. On the contrary. While we may not have the right to take the life of another human being, that does not mean we don't have control over our own lives.

Going back to our scenario, the man convicted of rape and murder could decide whether he wanted to live, or to end his life.

We would not be involuntarily approving of the murdering of people we don't deem good enough to live.

If we really believe in freedom and in the sanctity of life, we will not seek to justify murder under the cloak of compensation or fairness. A civil society rises above revenge, to respect and fairness.

Health Center has caring, qualified staff

Editor,

I cannot express how disappointed I am in Neil Anderson's "Bad Experiences Using Lafene" article. Having practiced medicine here at K-State for the last 9 1/2 years, I've never been more proud and confident of the expanded services offered, the competent staff who offer them and the efficient management of this very complex and sophisticated health care system.

To refer to our huge collective efforts of providing quality health care to our University as a "Death Center" is tremendously insulting and disheartening to our team of professionals.

I feel another piece of negative journalism resulted. The cases presented were not examples of negligence nor incompetence: one patient with symptoms of congestion that initially were thought to be infective (a cold) and two days later allergic; the other patient with a fever (which was not 106) who essentially received the same treatment from a local emergency room as she/he received at Lafene on the same day.

The reporter was told that the practice of medicine is an inexact science, which does not always coincide with the patient's preconception and expectations. Even with proper treatment, outcomes may not meet the expectations of some patients and, for that matter, their health care providers. For the vast majority of patients, however, they do. Last year, Lafene received almost 60,000 clinic visits, with more than 36,000 of those seen by the medical staff. Diagnoses ranged from colds to cancer.

Certainly, there are many in the K-State community who could give positive testimonials regarding their medical care here at Lafene. Our medical staff has a cumulative 220-plus years of total medical education and experience. We are re-licensed every year by the Kansas Board of Healing Arts and must furnish proof of 150 hours of continuing medical education every three years.

We serve the health care needs of thousands of K-Staters in hope that we can enhance chances for success of tomorrow's professionals and leaders.

I want to emphatically reassure our K-State community that the health center is staffed by competent, caring professionals, who are here to serve needs through our departments.

I think it is time for student leadership to appreciate and enhance the services available to the general student population rather than denigrate them. Lafene is a huge resource to each of you that you all pay for, and I welcome you all to utilize.

Excitement factor is missing here at KSU

Editor,

This one is to all sports fans here at K-State and in Manhattan. I transferred here in the fall of 1992 from Iowa State University. I wish I could explain the excitement in Ames on a day of a home basketball game. It seemed that on the night of the game everyone from Ames was jammed into Hilton. It was crazy. Iowa State can beat anybody at home — anybody. After a game there, your ears would ring for hours.

Then I transferred here. K-State is so much better a place than Iowa State. The town, the people, everything leaves Iowa State in the dust. Everything except our fans. Come on, people. After we beat Iowa State, I phoned friends in Ames to rub it in. One friend said our crowd was so quiet. What could I say?

I'm telling you, this place is something special, so, get out there and show everyone else how great it is to be a Wildcat.

Yell, scream, taunt and put Bramlage Coliseum up with the best of 'em.

Instructor insulted in review of play

Editor,

Artists normally let reviews, both good and bad, slide off their backs; it comes with the territory. The Collegian review of "Prelude to a Kiss," however, seemed to go beyond an honest evaluation of the production, descending rather into what I would characterize (with apologies to William Shakespeare) as "the most unkindest cut of all."

To attack Kate Anderson as a "bad teacher" only serves to reveal a mean-spirited reviewer, obviously rude and ill-bred. Anyone who knows of Kate Anderson and her work would know that the attack is totally unwarranted and ludicrous. I would remind the reviewer and the Collegian that Kate Anderson won the Conoco Award for being the outstanding undergraduate teacher in the College of Arts and Sciences in 1986; that award is coveted by all of us on the faculty.

I've known and worked with Kate Anderson for many years and have only admiration and praise for her as an excellent and caring teacher and as an imaginative and sensitive director.

As a faculty member of K-State, I deeply resent the Collegian callously allowing my highly respected colleague, Kate Anderson, to be so grievously injured by this thoughtless and insensitive review. I do believe the Collegian and the writer owe her a public apology.

Critics should write about good aspects

Editor,

This letter is in response to David-Michael Allen's tasteless, cruel review of "Prelude to a Kiss."

Even though many times I disagree with the ideas printed in the Collegian, I usually just accept them and move on ... until I read this.

I saw "Prelude" on Friday night and thought it was excellent. No, I'm not a theater major. However, I'm currently in Fundamentals of Acting, and did some acting in high school. So it's safe to say I thought it was an interesting story with exceptional acting.

Allen says "two long hours later I left the theater angry." On the contrary, I left with a good feeling and nothing but positive comments for my peers.

I know critics usually look for the negatives and rarely like what they see or hear. But give me a break — Allen's article is not only negative and overly critical, but also done in a tactless way.

As for the directors, cast and the rest of the crew, congratulations on an outstanding performance. Also, the part of Peter was not miscast. He was intense, honest and perfect for the part. Why must you compare him to Dean, Brando or Fonda? After all, acting is all about individual interpretation and style, isn't it? I ran across this quote and thought I'd share it with Allen, "The purpose of criticism is to help, not to humiliate."

'Happy' play hacked to pieces by reviewer

Editor,

I disagree with David-Michael Allen's critique of "Prelude to a Kiss." I attended Friday's performance and left feeling very happy and romantic. The theme of the play is to love your sweetheart for who they are on the inside, not for what they look like on the outside.

I think Mr. Allen missed this theme. His review concentrated on the aesthetics of the play. He missed the tale of two lovers — Peter and Rita. Mr. Allen thought only of how "Nichols Theatre is a poorly designed performance space," and how "a noisy cart rolled on the stage." The play is about how Peter makes the transition from being a stereotypical male, who only wants T 'n' A, to the quintessential lover who wants a woman for her personality. The scenery of the play was kept to a minimum so that the audience could not like it for its beauty; this would contradict the theme. Instead, the actors had to make the scenery from their dialogue and actions.

I think the actors did a fine job. The audience was to concentrate on the actors, not on a cart moving on the stage. It is unfortunate that Mr. Allen could not break through the lack of scenic beauty and see the play for what it is, a heartwarming tale of true love.

Americans should put trust in Clinton

Editor,

The American voters elected Bill Clinton to remedy the economic woes of our country. He has a plan that will create fundamental change and improve our economy in the long run (we must eliminate the deficit). No one will agree with all of his proposed changes. I feel he should be more aggressive — increasing energy tax (environmental and revenue) while cutting spending more.

He has studied the issues, and we should trust him to make informed decisions. There are a lot of factors involved, and we should all read up on his plan before forming an opinion.

Grant makes soil clean-up possible

RON LACKEY
Collegian

A K-State Professor has been awarded an $89,000 grant for finding a new way to deal with environmental disasters.

Lakshmi Reddi, assistant professor of civil engineering, is working on methods of cleaning immiscibles out of soil.

"This project will apply to water immiscibles only. Water immiscibles are anything that won't mix with water," he said. "These pose a problem when they are spilled because they are extremely difficult to rinse out with water."

The grant from the National Science Foundation's division of geomechanics will help finance the research. The National Science Foundation is expected to renew the grant until 1995.

"It is a three-year grant — the first year we will receive $29,983," Reddi said.

The first two years of research will be done in the lab. The third year, Reddi will try to test his equipment in the field.

"I realize there is a world of difference between the lab and the field," he said.

Sreedhar Challa, graduate student in civil engineering, is helping with the project.

"We are only doing lab tests on sands. We are not doing any research on clays because sand is much easier to work with," Challa said.

Reddi said there are a number of things he has to do before the actual testing.

"Once we have all the details, we will find a contaminated site with immiscibles and go there to test it out," he said. "We will approach the Environmental Protection Agency to give us a site. This will be useful at a number of contaminated sites, of which there are many in this country."

The research is useful because some spills can contaminate our drinking supply, he said.

"When a petroleum spill occurs on the ground, it needs to be treated. The pollutants have a tendency to go down to our drinking water."

When the pollutants make it down to the water supply, the result isn't pleasant, he said.

"The pollutants will go down to the water supply and contaminate the water. The current cleanup practice is to flush water through it, but we have found it doesn't work very well," Reddi said.

The old process doesn't work because globs of contaminant called "ganglia" are still in the soil, he said.

"No matter how hard you flush, there are still going to be some blobs which stick to the soil by virtue of the strong forces existing between the soil and the ganglia," Reddi said.

A nightmare in Boulder — Wildcats fall, 88-77

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

Donnie Boyce, Colorado guard, is trapped by K-State's Ski Jones and Anthony Beane during the Cats' 83-78 win on Jan. 16 in Manhattan. Jones and Beane combined for 40 points in that win, but scored just 21 last night.

Wildcat defense continues to struggle

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Just when the Cats thought they hit a defensive rock bottom — with a lopsided 80-59 loss at home to Nebraska — they went to Boulder, Colo., to face the Buffaloes, a team that came into the game with an 0-8 conference record.

But Colorado played like anything but a winless Big Eight team, shooting 59 percent from the floor and winning 88-77 — K-State's third loss in four games.

The Wildcats allowed 80 points or more for the second game in a row and couldn't take advantage a balmy 49-percent shooting game.

K-State dropped to 15-6 overall, but more importantly, the Cats' Big Eight record is now 5-4 — a half game behind Oklahoma State for second in the conference.

The Buffaloes, on the strength of a career-high 27 points from forward Randy Robinson, improved their record to 9-12, 1-8 in the Big Eight.

"I'm very disappointed," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "I really thought our players were ready to go. I thought we were ready to compete, to fight.

"We didn't."

Specifically, he said, on the defensive end.

The Wildcats, who came into the game with the Big Eight's No. 1 defense, gave way to a Buffalo offense that came into the game averaging just 68 points in Big Eight play — good for seventh.

"I don't want to take anything away from the way Colorado played, but we just didn't guard on defense," Altman said. "We never gave ourselves a chance to win this ballgame."

K-State's defense suffered early when, less than 10 minutes into the first half, both Vincent Jackson and Anthony Beane had two fouls and had to sit.

In the end, Colorado — which had made just 43 percent of its shots coming into the game — connected on 30 of 51 field-goal attempts. The 59 percentage is their best since shooting 61 percent in a 1988 game.

"Defensively, we're just not guarding," Altman said. "This was not a night we could get up and guard. And that's what has been winning games for us."

The Wildcats were also outrebounded for just the fourth time this season, 33-32.

The defensive lapse wasted K-State's best shooting performance since an 86-63 win over Temple on Jan. 30. Several Cats broke out of shooting slumps, including Vincent Jackson, who scored all of his team-high 19 points in the second half, and Brian Henson, who was four for eight from three-point range.

Henson broke a three for 36 slump from beyond the arc with back-to-back treys in the first half.

But Colorado still held a 41-31 halftime edge, and K-State couldn't shrink the lead to single digits until four minutes remained in the game. But a 17-8 run 12 minutes earlier all but buried K-State. At one point, the Buffaloes were up by as much as 16 points.

The win for the Buffaloes was just their second in their last 15 conference games and their first since an 87-83 win over Iowa State on March 7, 1992.

Colorado's next game is a Feb. 20 home contest against Oklahoma. And Colorado coach Joe Harrington would like things to go as well as they did Tuesday.

"See what I'm wearing tonight?" he said. "You can bet every stitch will be the same on Saturday."

K-State offense falls short of CU's

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

At least the offense is back.

That is about all the Wildcats had to be optimistic about following their 11-point loss at the hands of the cellar-dwelling Colorado Buffaloes.

After three games in which the Cats shot a combined 32.6 percent from the field, K-State connected on 49 percent on 28 of 57 shooting, including a 54.8-percent clip in the second half.

Forward Vincent Jackson led the Cats with 19 points on seven for 12 shooting but was held scoreless in the first 20 minutes. His only three-point attempt was an air ball.

Brian Henson, who was one for 11 from the field Saturday against Nebraska, responded with 16 points against Colorado.

He hit two back-to-back three-pointers that closed K-State to 25-18 with 8:52 to go in the first half.

Askia Jones completed a three-point play at the 7:20 mark of the first half that closed the Cats to 29-24.

But it wasn't enough last night. Colorado lit the Cats up for 88 points, the most the Buffaloes have ever scored in the series against K-State — now 104 games.

Colorado hit 58.8 percent of its shots against the Wildcats, including back-to-back three-pointers against a rare K-State zone defense to grab a lead, at 15-10, it would never relinquish.

"They were doing whatever they wanted to do," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said.

"They threw it inside anytime they wanted to throw it inside. They kicked it out anytime they wanted to kick it out.

"This is a game we desperately needed, and we never gave ourselves a chance to win," Altman said.

For the Buffaloes, their 88-77 victory was a welcome relief from an 0-8 shutout in the Big Eight standings.

"It's certainly great to be on this winning streak," Colorado coach Joe Harrington said. "I'm sure this was a tough game for them to lose, but that's the way it goes."

Colorado was led by a career scoring night by forward Randy Robinson. Robinson had 27 points on nine of 13 shooting and hit nine of 12 free throws.

"I thought he played one of the best games that he ever played here at CU," Harrington said. "He really had the eye of the tiger tonight."

K-State's road trip continues Saturday in Lawrence against the No. 6 Jayhawks, followed by a Tuesday game at Oklahoma.

"It doesn't get any easier," Altman said. "We have to figure out a way to get to seven or eight Big Eight wins. Tonight was a great opportunity."

Animal rights groups don't understand

I constantly have people walking up to me and asking, "Why do you shoot those poor little birds?" or, "How can you shoot those pretty deer?"

After I calm my urge to be angry, I realize that these people need to be educated in Mother Nature's ways. These are the people who usually mean no wrong, but are easily swayed to support the animal-rights radicals.

You, the sportsmen and sportswomen, need to educate them about the balance of nature and the danger of the animal-rights groups.

RON LACKEY

I am not for animal rights. I am for animal welfare. This sometimes includes the hunting and killing of animals — for their welfare.

Animals cannot decide that they have over-populated an area, hop on a U-Haul and move to greener pastures. All they can do in a situation like that is starve or fall ill to a disease that was helped along by the overcrowded conditions.

Normally, natural predators can keep a species in check. Nature has many checks and balances that work together. In case some animal rights people haven't noticed, nature's forces are not kind. They involve killing and death; one must die so the other can live.

Animal-rights avtivists think that if we leave the animals alone, they will live happily ever after.

What they don't see is the overpopulation, disease, endless road kills and suffering of animals in an over-populated environment.

The problem is that nature is not natural anymore.

Humans have been modifying the earth for as long as they have been around. More recently, in North America, man has cultivated cropland, thus multiplying food plots and at the same time eliminating natural predators like the wolf and puma.

This results in an imbalance of nature. People often forget that man is a healthy part of nature, an animal who hunts for tablefare.

Hunting is not the only activity the animal-rights supporters want to stop.

They are also trying to stop trapping, fishing, livestock production, the lumber industry and some biomedical research.

Animal-rights activists will stop at nothing to inflict their beliefs on the public. The following quotes from animal rights groups should illustrate my point.

"It seems to me perfectly natural and a very moral thing to save animals from persecution. Of course, this would often mean breaking the law, but those laws have been made by a selfish and arrogant human species without taking the interests of animals into consideration." — Animal Liberation Front.

"Arson, property destruction, burglary and theft are acceptable crimes when used for the animals' cause." — Alex Pacheco, People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

A 1990 Gallup poll showed that 77 percent of Americans approve of reasonable use of wildlife. This forces animal-rights groups to be funded through organizations that say nothing about animal rights.

Last year, I received an offer in the mail to join an "environmental" club. Although I am very concerned about the environment, these people were promoting something else.

After researching this club, I found this club financially supports a movement to stop hunting in all of our national parks.

Make sure you know where your money is going — you may be fueling the opposition's fire.

The basic premise is simple: "The U.S. human population now numbers about 250 million. Each person is seeking a reasonable standard of living.

To achieve it, plants and animals must be used. The challenge is to design management systems to ensure that ethically responsible, practical uses of plants and animals be permitted to continue." — The United Conservation Alliance.

▶FORMER COACH CAPRIOTTI SAYS HE PAID ATHLETES

Former K-State track coach John Capriotti admitted to the Wichita Eagle Monday he paid several athletes in direct violation of NCAA rules.

"There was never money to take care of the athletes the way they should be taken care of," Capriotti said. "I knew what I was doing the whole time, and I knew what I was doing was against NCAA rules."

In all, Capriotti allegedly paid a minimum of 12 athletes a combined total of at least $10,000.

"If we had enough money in the budget," he said, "I wouldn't have been breaking NCAA rules."

Capriotti said the money came from his own pocket, but he wouldn't say how much money he distributed or to which K-State athletes.

Capriotti resigned in November to take a job with Nike.

The Wildcat track program is currently being investigated by the NCAA.

▶FLORIDA STATE SUSPENDS 2 LEADING SCORERS

TALLAHASSEE, Fla. (AP) — Florida State coach Pat Kennedy suspended his top two scorers for the ninth-ranked Seminoles' game Wednesday at North Carolina State.

Bobby Sura, the Atlantic Coast Conference's third leading scorer with a 20.8 average, and Douglas Edwards, averaging 18.5 points a game, each received a suspension for "missing an excess number of classes."

"It's a very serious suspension because we're looking at being in the race for a regular season champion-ship," Kennedy said.

North Carolina State (7-13) has played much of its season with only eight players, losing others to injuries and some, like Florida State, to academic problems.

Edwards and Sura also are the leading rebounders.

Typically, students change majors

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

Seventy-five percent of all K-State students change their major at least once, Ron Downey, director of planning and evaluation services, said.

Downey and Mike Lynch, assistant vice president for institutional advancement, did a study titled "Patterns of Student Changes in College Enrollments." The study focused on the number of students who change their majors.

"There is a variety of reasons for students changing their major," Lynch said. "One reason is that many students enter the University and go undecided, then change it to a specific major because of a class they took and liked."

There is an increasing number of students who choose not to declare a major when they first enroll, Lynch said.

"In the fall of 1992, 1,600 students in arts and sciences were undeclared. A very high percentage of these students were freshman and sophomores.

"Another reason students change their majors is because they take a course in their major and find out they aren't interested in what they thought they were, so, they move to something else," he said.

Some colleges require a certain grade point average to continue to the advanced level courses.

"Academic requirements is also a reason for a change. Many students come in with a declared major but change their major later because they are not able to meet current grade point average requirements in their field," Lynch said.

Many students change majors once they take difficult courses in their fields, he said.

"An example of this could be when a student is majoring in engineering and is having trouble with Calculus III and finds out that it is too difficult, so, he or she then decides to change," he said.

Brian Peak, senior in marketing, said he has changed his major three times. He first enrolled in political science, and then changed to geography, he said.

"I took a geography class that was really cool and decided to change my major to that. But, I was sitting in cartography class one day making a map, and I realized that I didn't want to get stuck making maps the rest of my life, so, I changed it to marketing," he said.

Peak said he chose marketing because of his experience in sales and because it is something he wants to do in the future.

Some students choose a major so they can make money in the future, and others choose something that will fulfill their interests.

"When I first enrolled, I thought I wanted to make money," Kelley Toler, senior in education, said.

Toler said she majored in business, psychology and nursing before she finally decided on education.

"I just got in it and decided I liked it. I just don't want to be stuck in something I don't like," she said.

There are programs at K-State designed to help students in finding a career, Lynch said.

"There is a discover program starting at the Career Planning and Placement Center next week," he said.

A waiting list of students wanting to be in this program has already developed, he said.

There are a number of programs planned in the future to help undecided students, he said.

"We are in the process of opening an Academic and Career Information Center in the basement of Holtz Hall," he said.

Tracey Fraser, coordinator of the Academic and Career Information Center, said the center is targeted for students who voluntarily change their major. She said the center will open Wednesday.

"The center is designed to assist students who are undecided and are looking into career options," Fraser said.

"An alumni exchange program is being worked on so students will be able to call and correspond with alumni already employed in certain fields. Students will be able to ask them what they're are doing and what kind salary are they're earning," he said.

Pentagon to OK grant

K-State-Salina would receive money for training program, research

WADE SISSON

The K-State-Salina pilot training program may receive a grant proposal for military retraining and research.

The proposal was revised from a previous one in order to include a wider field of research.

The Pentagon is expected to approve the proposal, Charles Reagan, executive assistant to President Jon Wefald, said Monday.

The requested funds total $7.7 million. Six million would be used to buy 11 new and 15 used airplanes for the training program, Reagan said. The remaining $1.7 million would be spent on laboratory equipment, he said.

"The last communication I had from the Pentagon was they were satisfied with the proposal," he said.

Sen. Bob Dole, R-Kan., included the grant proposal in the Defense Appropriation Bill, which Congress passed in October 1991, Reagan said. The grant, along with 13 others, was given to the Secretary of Defense in early summer of 1992 for his approval.

The secretary of defense requested a proposal from the University in October 1992, Reagan said.

The original proposal stated the airplanes would be used for military retraining, said Ken Barnard, head of the aviation department at K-State-Salina.

The U.S. Department of Defense approved the grant, but wanted the airplanes to be used for research as well.

"They wanted to know how the aircraft would be used for research," Reagan said.

The revised proposal was completed during the summer of 1992 and states the airplanes will also be used to test composite fiber materials, such as fiberglass, Reagan said. The interrelationship between pilots and machines will also be researched.

Such research will include where cockpit controls are placed and how the pilot's awareness of the surroundings during flight can be improved, he said.

Currently, the College of Technology at K-State-Salina has 23 flyable planes, three flyable helicopters and two simulators, Reagan said.

Jack Henry, dean of the College of Technology, said the original proposal was to use the grant money to buy equipment for training purposes only.

"In the beginning, we were going to use the planes in our program to train the students," Henry said. "It's part of the process of training military people to re-enter the civilian work force."

The College of Technology flight training program, called the Professional Flight Program, now has 80 students, he said. Students of the two-year program earn pilot licenses and associate degrees.

The research will be conducted by College of Technology faculty members and professors from K-State's College of Engineering, Henry said.

"The major purpose of the research is helping the Department of Defense," he said. "We have access to pilots here in training that you can use for research projects. So it's a nice fit with University research."

Exercise, support goals of group

STEPHANIE HOELZEL

For most people, picking up a pencil and tying a shoe lace are easy tasks to perform. But in the face of Parkinson's disease, simple tasks become increasingly difficult.

Brian Bonser, senior in biology and pre-physical therapy, knows this and has been instrumental in forming an exercise group to help victims of Parkinson's disease.

"I had been working with a man for some time. He had shown great improvement since his exercise therapy had started," Bonser said. "Other people saw what it did for him and decided that they would like to try it, too."

The exercise group started in June of 1992. People with Parkinson's disease meet at the Senior Service Center every Monday to exercise and socialize.

"They come and enjoy themselves. They socialize. It is a camaraderie. They offer each other a lot of support and that helps them physically and emotionally," he said.

Most of the exercises performed are not for the cardiovascular system. They are motor-skill or movement exercises.

"We do many ranges of movement exercises. Parkinson's disease causes muscles to become stiff and rigid, so, we try to do exercises that allow Parkinsonians to have better movement," Bonser said.

"We also do drills in coordination. Just walking is an effort for some patients. We try to give them the confidence to do everyday tasks."

Since the disease affects the muscles and the nervous systems, speech can also be affected.

"In the exercise group, we work on enunciation drills. We stress diaphragmatic breathing, too. When doing these exercises, they become better at talking louder and more clearly," he said.

There is a great deal of support for the exercise group, from both the state and national level.

"We can call 800 numbers and receive free pamphlets and information to distribute at our meetings," Slava Orazem, group member, said.

"When I first found out that I had the disease, I looked for an area support group. There wasn't one in Manhattan, so, I told one of my doctors, and he helped me contact people to get one started."

The support group is actually a

Samples successful despite shaky start band has been together for a number of years. This relationship was, however, instigated from a simple need for a new start.

Sean Kelly, vocalist and lead guitarist for the band, said his friend and former band member, Charles Hambleton, convinced him to move to Boulder from Vermont about five years ago.

"I wanted a change of scenery, and he had connections in Boulder because his brother lived there. His brother let us sleep on the floor of his house for about a month. Then we realized we needed to get something together if we wanted to survive," Kelly said.

"We were literally starving and had nothing to eat. So Charles and I would go to the King-Super in Boulder and eat the free samples. That's where our name comes from.

"I think after a while we went too far. Sometimes we would go to the dented sections where stuff is marked down to buy food. Then, Charles started to dent stuff off the shelves, and we got in trouble. That's when we knew we had to get our shit together."

Kelly and Hambleton put some ads out for a percussionist and guitar players, and the Samples were complete.

The additions of Jeep MacNichol, percussionist; Andy Sheldon, bassist; and Al Laughlin, keyboards, made the band.

Kelly, co-founder, said Hambleton left the band after a year and a half because of personal problems.

"Hambleton was the juice that got us going. He talked us into getting the band together," Kelly said.

The Samples released their first self-titled album in 1990, followed by an EP, "Underwater People," which includes some live tracks, and their current CD, "No Room."

Described as a reggae/rock group, they thrive on a "grass roots" approach to music and publicity.

"We really rely on the people to make us every bit of what we are. Critics may humble us and say we're 'big', but I don't think we've reached that point in our career," Kelly said.

"I think it's always a gamble. We never know where we will end up. It's important that we aren't buffered into doing things we don't want to do. It has to come naturally."

The band's former label, Arista Records, "tried to tell us what to do and how to write our songs," Kelly said. "It was a good label, but only if you're Top 40, and we're definitely not that.

"We wanted our music done on our terms, so we have a new label, W.A.R.? (What Are Records?). We were the guinea pigs for them because we were the first to try them and 'No Room' has already sold over 60,000 copies," he said.

Kelly said a big influence for the band has been Crosby, Stills, Nash and Young.

"A lot of reviewers compare my singing to Sting, but I think I sound different than him, more than most would think," he said.

After this tour, the band goes into the studio for more recording.

They have a lot of songs finished, and it will probably sound a lot like their first release, Kelly said.

"We're like a puppy as far as progression. You don't really notice it until you haven't seen it for a while. Then you notice how much it's grown," he said.

"I'd like to be established someday, but we're not there yet. Right now we're breaking even, and we have enough to survive. We want to make sure we stay healthy and put on a good show every night so people are getting their money's worth."

Colorado band brings down the house, almost performance.

"I heard they were good, and they've sold out in Lawrence before. I was really excited about the student reaction, and I didn't really expect it," Snook said.

Mitch Ulrich, owner of Vital Vinyl, was in charge of the tickets for the show. He said the 500-ticket show had been sold-out for about a week, and he was wanting to sell more at the door.

The Lawrence band Hey Ruth opened for the Samples' two-hour set.

Hey Ruth played an adrenalin-rushing set that was well received by the packed, at times crushing, crowd as they warmed the bar for an incredible show to follow.

As the lights went down and the Samples came on, the floor began to rumble.

They rocked the audience with new material, not yet available, as well as old favorites, "Feel us Shaking," "Nature" and "African Ivory."

"Summertime" and "Seany Boy" topped the performance from their latest compact disc, "No Room."

At one point in the set, a television draped with a see-through mesh began flashing obscure images.

"I taped about 45 minutes to an hour's worth of random junk on TV," vocalist Sean Kelly said.

Kelly set up the screen and accompanying electronics before the show.

"I'm really into visual art. A moving visual aspect enhances the show, and it's a kind of subliminal experience," he said.

U2 Zoo TV or the Samples' Subliminals?

"It's random stuff, weird movies and TV — it's not planned to match the songs. We were doing this long before U2 was around," he said.

The screens flashed up frames of wildlife, CNN, President Clinton and the Brady Bunch.

The Samples were literally tearing the place down.

Before the encore set, the audience was dancing so hard the floor nearly fell through.

Sweating profusely, the band concluded the show and left the audience in an uproar of enthused approval.

"The only way to maintain the band is by doing a lot of touring. It's what makes this so fun. All that matters is right now and where we're playing that night," Kelly said.

Group therapy helps Parkinsonians ease burden part of the same group, although it meets at different times.

"The support group and the exercise group are really beneficial. They have helped me see more about how the disease behaves by seeing how others are affected," Orazem said. "They give me the strength to fight it. I'll fight it until I can't anymore. We each inspire each other."

Frank Anneberg participates regularly in the two groups.

"The groups have been very helpful. I see what people do, and everyone helps each other. Sometimes it is serious, sometimes humorous," Anneberg said.

The groups help Parkinsonians see the effects of the disease, but also allow them to know they are not alone.

"Being a part of the group opens people's eyes. It gives them a reason to go on because they see that they can still enjoy life. It makes them happier. I know this because I've seen the change in Frank," Nella Anneberg, Frank's wife, said.

The motto of the American Parkinson's Disease Association sums up the efforts of both the local and national organizations: "To ease the burden. To find the cure."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Rude roommate needs to quit 'blowing kisses' all the time

DEAR CASSANDRA,

We're writing you this letter in hopes that you can help us, but most of all, we're all hoping our roommate, who reads Cassandra every day, will read this letter.

To make a long story short, our original roommate moved out to live with her boyfriend, and we took in another girl for financial reasons. At the beginning, we all got along great — we thought we were so lucky to have found someone we could get along with. Well, after she started feeling more relaxed with us, her true identity was revealed. We found out that she is not very hygienic and at times very disgusting.

Unfortunately, our roommate loves ham and bean soup and, as you could probably guess, has tremendous gas. She will pass gas anytime the spirit moves her, and the smell is so disgusting that we have to spray Lysol and open the doors. We have told her repeatedly how disgusting we think it is, but she thinks it's hilarious and even jokes about it being her way of "blowing kisses."

We don't know how to break the news to her without hurting her feelings, but we can't bear it any longer. Our boyfriends won't even come over because our apartment always smells.

This problem may seem ridiculous to you, but it is becoming an everyday problem for us. Please help!

Gas Masks

DEAR GAS MASKS,

You're right. Your problem does seem ridiculous.

Let me get this straight. You are worried about hurting the feelings of a rude roommate who tortures you daily with her toots? Where's your backbone?

Bad manners are bad manners. If she is driving away your friends and driving up your power bill by necessitating winter home ventilation, then you have every right to demand that she quit cutting the cheese. She sounds like a very inconsiderate roommate. You say she reads my column every day. I'll help you get the message to her:

Hey, Stinky! Grow up! Quit farting all the time!

See, that wasn't so hard.

As for you other roommates, wise up. Don't fall for it when she says, "Hey, pull my finger."

DEAR IT,

First off, I refer to you as an "it" because I do not know if you are a male or female. Whichever you may be, where do you get your justification for saying "men are all the same?"

Was this a slanderous remark, or did I just misinterpret this statement in the response for "Indecisive in Love?" To avoid letters such as this one, do not pass judgment on the male species — we are not all the same and do not function solely on a one-track mind. In the future, try keeping your column free of biased remarks. This "man" greatly appreciates it.

Not the Same

DEAR NOT,

I took a beating from men and women alike on this one. Spank me with a rolled-up copy of GQ.

Apparently my tongue was planted a bit too firmly in my cheek when I made the remark that "men are all the same."

I was joking. I am fully aware there are at least five or six different kinds of men. I am also aware that recent behavioral research suggests men are capable of two- and three-track mental functioning.

Of course men are not all the same. They are, on the whole, a wonderful bunch of people, and we women are glad to have them around.

I'll try to be a bit less sarcastic in the future about such sensitive matters.

Education key to end of sexual harassment charges for compensatory and punitive damages.

Just this year, California passed a state law stating an elementary student as young as fourth grade can be expelled for sexual harassment.

Shoop said he believes there are three groups who need to be informed.

First, the people who could be charged with sexual harassment, whether that be administration, teachers, staff or students, need to know valid sexual harassment charges could lead the loss of finances, job, family or career, he said.

The second group that needs to be informed is the people who could be harassed.

"In equal opportunities commission cases, civil rights cases and cases that have made it to court, nine out of 10 victims of sexual harassments are females," Shoop said.

The final group that needs to be informed of the dangers of sexual harassment are the organizations, such as schools and businesses, he said. Without a definite sexual harassment policy, they can be setting themselves up for lawsuits.

If they lose the case, their insurance company will most often not reimburse their loss. If the organization is a school, that money will come out of the general fund, or in other words, the taxpayers pockets.

K-State approved a sexual harassment policy in 1983, then revised it in 1989 to the current policy in use. Jane Rowlett, director of the Office of Affirmative Action, said that the University handles 10 to 15 claims of sexual harassment each year.

"The number of claims have increased within the past five years. About 80 percent of the time, there is an agreement reached between the parties involved. It is usually an issue of intent verses impact — they usually didn't mean for the comment or action to have the impact it carried," Rowlett said.

Shoop said he believes a proactive program against sexual harassment is the first step to eradicating sexual harassment in any situation, especially in the school systems.

"Begin a proactive program explaining to all children, at the earliest levels, what is appropriate and inappropriate behavior. Then watch for violations of appropriate behavior and follow it up with a sequence of discipline," Shoop said.

"Sexual harassment is not something that just springs up in 45-year-old men. It is something that is taught early. Therefore, we need to attack it early," he said.

Kunjufu dispels racial rumors about poverty, education people. Racism is a sign of insecurity, he said.

There are two kinds of racists, overt and institutional, Kunjufu said.

"Institutional [racists] are more dangerous because they are the ones that take advantage of being white. They are also larger and more quiet," he said.

A member of the Ku Klux Klan is an example of an overt racist, he said.

People might become racists because they have a false conception of what a minority is, Kunjufu said..

"The reason why some whites are racists may have something to do with the word minority. People use the word minority to describe those of color. Yet, in our world there are six billion people. Eighty percent of the six billion is made up of people of color. So, tell me, who is the real minority?" he said.

True integration would eliminate the white race because colored genes are dominant, he said.

"Every combination of genes will always equal a darker color."

MIDDLE EAST

Christopher hopes leaders will meet

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — Secretary of State Warren Christopher said Tuesday he does not expect the Mideast leaders to give him an immediate green light to resume stalled peace talks in April.

Even with U.N. endorsement of a U.S. compromise with Israel over Palestinian deportations, Christopher voiced limited expectations as he met here with Israeli Foreign Minister Shimon Peres.

"The portents are very good," Christopher said.

And, he told reporters he hoped to get from the leaders he will meet, beginning on Thursday in Cairo, some sense on how they feel about reopening the negotiations that were suspended here in mid-December.

"I hope that subsequently the peace process can be restarted," Christopher said.

But, he added, he would not expect that to happen during the course of his trip.

Christopher flies to the Middle East Wednesday night with stops planned in Egypt, Jordan, Syria, Saudi Arabia, Kuwait and Israel. He will then meet in Geneva Feb. 25 with Russian Foreign Minister Andrei Kozyrev and go on to Brussels the next day for talks with NATO foreign ministers about the war in Bosnia and tensions in the Kosovo region of Serbia.

Ibrahim Rugova, the elected president of Kosovo, appealed at a news conference Tuesday for the region to be put under a U.N. protectorate. He said Serbian paramilitary forces in the predominantly ethnic Albanian region were poised to provoke a conflict when the time is right, and they can perform massacres as elsewhere.

On Bosnia, Christopher last week pledged U.S. forces would be part of a peacekeeping operation under U.N. or NATO command if a cease-fire and a settlement of the war in the former Yugoslav republic were arranged.

The meeting with Kozyrev is designed to arrange a summit between President Clinton and Russian President Boris Yeltsin. It is considered to have high priority because of the economic and other pressures challenging Yeltsin's reform movement.

The Clinton administration has held off inviting Arabs and Israelis to return to Washington for talks on borders, peace and Palestinian self-rule.

One reason is to give Christopher and other policy-makers a chance to explore the Mideast leaders' thinking. Another, however, is Arab disapproval of Israel's exile on Dec. 17 of some 400 Palestinians suspected of fomenting violence.

Christopher and Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin reached agreement Feb. 1 on a compromise that would repatriate all the 396 Palestinians from a tent encampment in Lebanon by the end of the year, and about 100 of them immediately.

The U.N. Security Council last Friday called the agreement a step in the right direction. Rabin declared an end to the crisis on Sunday and Christopher told reporters Tuesday they thought the action taken at the U.N. last Friday was a positive action.

But, he said, before he gets out to the region and talks to all the parties it would be somewhat presumptuous of him to conclude peace talks can begin immediately.

Hanan Ashrawi, spokeswoman for the Palestinians, said Saturday the deal had no validity and represented a blow to the integrity of the Security Council and another attempt at bailing Israel out.

Peres, while posing for pictures with Christopher at the State Department, said peace was in the interest of all the parties.

He said those who criticized Israel for not paying attention to a Council resolution opposing the deportations should pay attention to the Council's acceptance of the U.S.-Israeli compromise.

Later, addressing a lunch, Peres explained the difficulties in achieving peace with the Palestinians.

"The amount and the scope of compromises which are needed are heavy," he said. "The bitterness is deep. The suspicion is old-aged."

Rabin, meanwhile, said Christopher's mission would be measured by his ability to renew the peace process.

First candidates announced

Jardine mayor , Senate chair declare bid for presidency, vice presidency

STEPHANIE FUQUA

Shades of Ross Perot.

Talk of grassroots, communication, listening to what the people want.

The only thing missing is Admiral Stockdale.

However, Charles Walters is not Texan and doesn't have big ears. Ian Bautista is neither white-haired, nor is he hard of hearing.

But the two have one thing in common with Perot and Stockdale. The desire for leadership.

Walters, a junior in political science, history and international studies, and Bautista, a senior in political science, Spanish and Latin American studies, announced Wednesday they are running for the offices of student body president and vice-president, respectively.

Walters is not a senator.

But that does not mean he has no political experience. He has been a member of the Jardine Mayor's Council for 2-1/2 years and mayor of Jardine for one year. Bautista is currently the student senate chair.

Both stressed communication with students, and Walters said he has two main goals for the campaign and his possible future administration.

"I would like to work closely with different groups, especially multicultural groups. I would like to see more multicultural programs," Walters said. "Second, I am concerned with getting the public-transportation issue solved."

"Our goal is, by the time we leave office, to have plans underway for a shuttle system or a parking garage," Walters said.

Bautista agreed.

"It's time to quit talking about things and do it," he said.

Walters said one of their big thrusts will be to look at Senate and ask what the role of the Student Governing Association is. He said he would look at cabinet positions and wouldn't be afraid to create new ones, such as a secretary of transportation.

"Nothing's final, of course, but we'll look at other cabinet positions as well. We don't have a secretary of education, and we're a university," Walters said.

The pair have other ideas for direct services to students as well.

"I'm interested in making a book cooperation through SGA," Walters said. "The premise is, students would buy and sell books from students. We would be providing an opportunity for students to basically pass used books back and forth to one another."

Communicating with students is vital, Walters said.

"The average student just can't figure out what's going on with Senate. I personally want to write an open letter to the student body twice a month. Maybe establish a hotline so students can call, so students can know what's going on, and we can know what they think.

"The communication process should be right now. The campaign is an opportunity to begin the communication process. Once we take office, then we'll institutionalize it. It's not a criticism of Senate, but a rethinking of what our role is," Walters said.

"We realize some of these ideas will stand students up on their heads, and that's healthy."

Radical ideas are not always a bad thing, Bautista said.

"K-State has one of the strongest traditions of student government in the nation. It's not necessarily a bad thing to look at shaking it up a little bit. Maybe it's time to look at changing traditions and customs," Bautista said.

Walters also has a pet project in mind.

Address focuses on tax hike

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton asked Americans Wednesday night to accept one of the biggest tax increases in history, part of a tough $499 billion plan to curb massive budget deficits and stimulate the economy.

"We must do this together," he said in a pointed overture to Congress.

"This economic plan can't please everybody," Clinton said in a 60-minute address to a joint session of Congress. "If the package is picked apart, there will be something that will anger each of us. It won't please anybody. But if it is taken as whole, it will help all of us."

The plan is a mixture of $246 billion in tax increases and $253 billion in spending cuts over four years. He said his plan would cut $140 billion from the deficit by 1997 — "a real deficit reduction."

"If we don't act now, you and I might not even recognize this government 10 years from now," Clinton said.

He said the deficit would have grown to $635 billion a year, and the national debt would consume almost 80 percent of the gross domestic product.

"Americans have called for change," the president said, "and now it is up to those of us in this room to deliver for them."

He warned that lobbyists would try to block the program.

Clinton's prime-time speech was delivered in the House chamber, where majority Democrats gave a thunderous welcome to the first Democrat to hold the White House in 12 years.

Republicans denounced Clinton's plan as a massive round of tax hikes. GOP lawmakers wore buttons that said "Tax and Spend. Again" and "It's Spending, Stupid."

House GOP Leader Bob Michel said, "The American people would do well to remember: When you hear a Democrat call for taxes, do not ask for whom the tax rises — it will rise for you.

"Tonight the president mentioned a number of new programs that inevitably will cost considerable sums of money," Michel said. "Laudable as they may be, how do we pay for them? The president's answer is, more taxes on everyone."

Clinton's Cabinet looked on as he spoke, as well as his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton and his mother, Virginia Kelley.

Clinton's plan would spread pain universally, although well-to-do people would be hit hardest.

The program would impose higher energy

▶DRIVE FALLING SHORT OF GOAL

WADE SISSON

K-State is falling short of the 1,000-unit goal set for the campus blood drive.

With two days left in the four-day drive, K-State is already 180 units behind, said Kathy McDonald, spokeswoman for the Wichita-based American Red Cross Blood Services.

McDonald said the daily goal for donations is 250 units of blood. She said 161 units were donated Tuesday, and estimated the same amount was brought in Wednesday.

"The reason we are there is because there are people in Kansas and northwest Oklahoma who need blood every day, and we need to get donations from healthy citizens," McDonald said.

Reita Currie, a K-State registered nurse, health educator and coordinator for the K-State/American Red Cross Bloodmobile, said many of the 450 appointments for donations were canceled.

"I'm really disappointed," she said. "At one time, we had 1,700 units, and now we can't even get 1,000 units."

Currie and McDonald both said they thought bad weather may be a cause for the low number of donations.

"It's so important for everyone to realize that, right now, there are three burn victims in the Wichita area who need blood now," McDonald said.

"When people give blood through the Red Cross on the K-State campus, they could be helping a friend or relative who lives in the 84-county region we serve."

Big Eight schools meet for BSU conference

REGGIE BLACKWELL
Collegian

Big Eight schools and other Midwest colleges will convene Feb. 18-20 in Lawrence for the 1993 Big Eight Conference on Black Student Government.

Veryl Switzer, associate director of athletics and adviser for Black Student Union at K-State, said the purpose of the conference is to discuss ideas and help students cope with concerns they might have at predominately white institutions.

The three-day event offers an array of activities such as a job fair.

John Kitchings, senior in psychology and BSU president, said he is looking forward to the job fair because it allows the students to meet prospective employers first-hand.

The job fair draws large companies such as Pepsi, Hallmark Cards and others throughout the Midwest region.

Other events include the various types of workshops.

Nez Savala, senior in humanities and ethnic studies and BSU secretary, said she plans to learn more about leadership and to be open to social problems.

"The workshops provide the opportunity to discuss and explore domestic issues such as unemployment, teenage pregnancy and drug abuse," she said.

The conference also provides several lectures.

Kitchens said the key to any successful conference or convention is attendance.

"Fortunately K-State hasn't experienced problems with funding the event. K-State provides partial funding for 50 students. These students are determined by the BSU officers and body," he said. "The total cost for those students, including transportation, lodging, and two meals a day is $35."

The event that culminates the entire weekend is the Greek Step Show.

"When you are able to assemble hundreds of people from different schools, then great things are bound to happen," said LaFern Watkins, junior in theater and BSU historian.

Bond increased in preliminary hearing

DEBORAH WHITSON

Scotty R. Adam, 18, the Council Grove man accused in the Jan. 23 stabbing death of Scott Sanders, 19, freshman in mechanical engineering, was brought up for preliminary hearing yesterday in Morris County District Court.

Arraignment for Adam has been set for 10 a.m., March 2, on one charge of aggravated robbery and one charge of first degree murder.

Bond was originally set at $50,000 but was increased yesterday to $200,000, on the possibility that Adam would harass other witnesses or flee Morris County.

As the defense called witnesses to help determine whether the charges would hold, pieces of the story were put into place.

Jane Rickenbrode, the dispatcher who was on duty the night of the stabbing, said she was talking on the radio when Adam entered the building.

"He came up to the window and said, 'I'm the one that stabbed that guy,'" Rickenbrode said. "Then he asked how 'that guy' was doing."

She had been informed of the stabbing a few minutes earlier and had already sent someone to the scene. She then called for an officer to take a statement from Adam.

Morris County Sheriff Gary Carrier heard the announcement and came to the station instead of continuing to the scene of the stabbing.

"I walked in, and he was standing there by the window, and she was standing inside the office, and I asked them, 'What happened?'," Carrier said.

Carrier said Adam responded immediately, saying, "I wasn't going to get my ass kicked," and then, "I want a lawyer."

Budding bards have work read

KATHY WASKO
Collegian

This Sunday, K-State playwrights will have the chance to hear their scripts read out loud.

Playwright's stage is a semester long event that begins at 2 p.m. Sunday at the Purple Masque Theatre. It will continue every Sunday, except during spring break, until May 9. Admission is free.

"Playwright's stage is a chance for K-State playwrights to have their work read in front of an audience. It is also a chance for them to see their words actually read and acted out instead of just reading them themselves," said Julian Colton, playwright and senior in speech.

The playwrights can get a different interpretation and see how their words sound. The readings also provide information about rewrites.

"They basically help so we can rewrite the script and see what works and what doesn't work on stage," Colton said.

There are informal discussions following the plays, in which the audience members are encouraged to ask the playwright questions and make suggestions.

"We encourage the audience to give feedback, because that is really the whole point in doing this," he said. "You can really learn a lot about your own plays through watching the rehearsals and the actual reading. There is always someone in the audience who picks up on things that the playwright doesn't."

Auditions for the 14 plays to be performed this semester were Feb. 8-9. There were 33 parts available and 25 people auditioned.

"We were able to use everybody, which is something that we always try to do. Some people were cast twice," Colton said.

Step into fitness, fun with new style of workout

Aerobic-type exercise enjoys increasing popularity

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

A new form of aerobic exercise, step aerobics, is increasing in popularity with exercisers as a different way to get in shape.

"Step aerobics is an aerobic-type exercise that works the cardiovascular system, and at the same time it works your lower body," said Barbie Inbody, graduate teaching assistant in kinesiology.

Step aerobics is popular because almost anyone can do it.

"Some people have trouble with the high impact-type aerobics. Practically anybody can do step aerobics," said Katricia Sinn, junior in kinesiology and nutrition and step aerobics instructor for the Lifestyle Improvement through Fitness Enhancement program.

Some say that you get the aerobic benefits without all of the hard work.

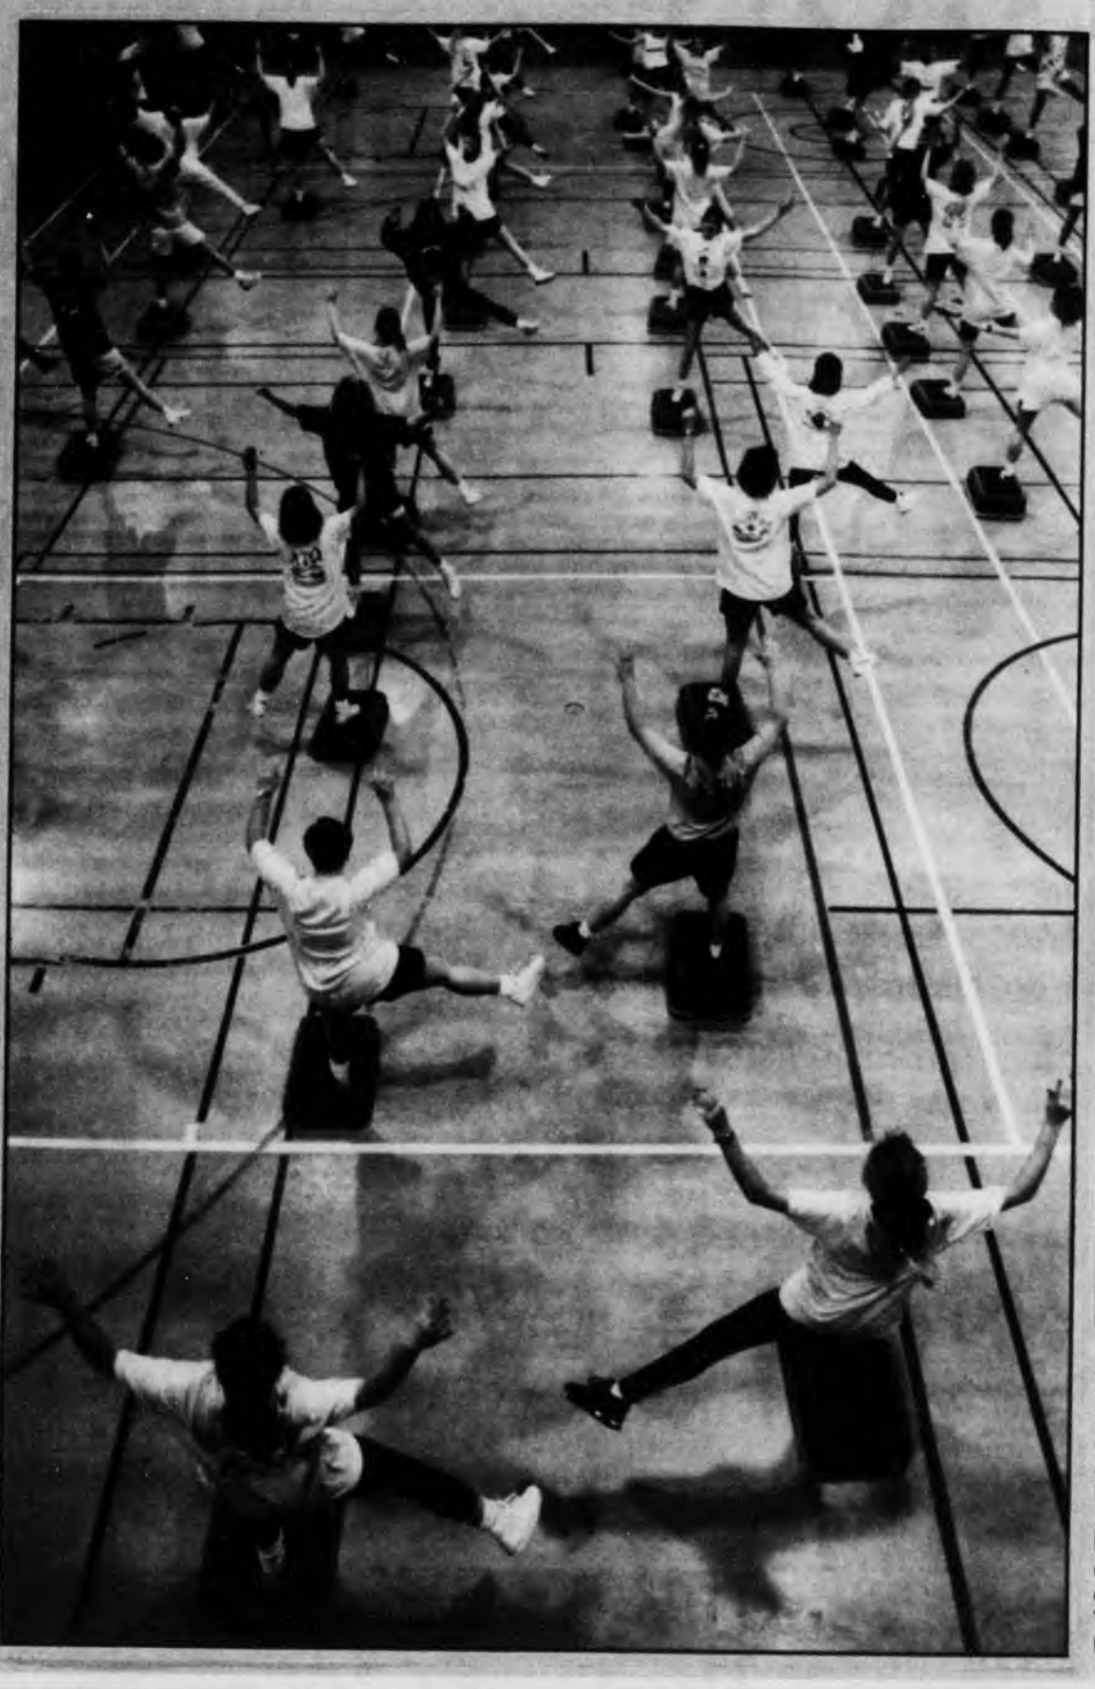
"It doesn't feel like you working as hard, but you get your heart rate up," said Crystal Barber, junior in community health and nutrition.

Barber attends step aerobics sessions at the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex.

Most people start out on a four-inch step and then progress up to an eight-inch step.

"You do not want to go higher than eight inches because it starts putting stress on your joints," Inbody said.

Step aerobics are offered to students through the Rec Complex and the L.I.F.E. Program. The L.I.F.E. program is offered through the Department of Kinesiology.



The Rec Complex began offering step aerobics in January. Since then, more sessions have been added because of the demand.

The Rec Complex has 100 steps available, which is often not enough, said Cheryl Eberting, junior in secondary education and Rec Complex aerobics instructor.

Step aerobics sessions at the Rec Complex include 45 minutes of aerobics and 15 minutes of toning.

The L.I.F.E. program began

THE ISSUE

Kansans have been denied the freedom to remove the tags from their mattresses for far too long.

WE SUGGEST

New legislation repealing the restrictive 1923 state law should be instituted.

People all over Kansas can now sleep the sweet sleep of the just, thanks to the Kansas Legislature.

A week and a half ago, the House approved a bill that would wipe out a 1923 state law that made it illegal to rip those foreboding tags that come attached to your mattresses and pillows. The penalty for such a malicious deed was set at six months in the Big House.

House members spent 20 minutes debating the lofty bill, introduced by Rep. Melvin Neufeld, R-Ingalls. Neufeld said his research failed to produce any instance of a miscreant tag-ripper ever being prosecuted.

Well, that got the ball rolling. Soon, Rep. Richard Lahti, D-Wichita, suggested an amendment that would make manufacturers responsible for putting handles on the ends of mattresses, effective July 1, 1996. The reason? Lahti had bad experiences with moving non-handled, bulky mattresses.

Eventually partisan politics took its place in the spotlight when Republicans, wary of additional government regulation, asked for a roll call vote. It failed.

"Do we need this bill now?" Rep. Betty Jo Charlton, D-Lawrence, asked.

You bet we do.

It is glaringly obvious that when the framers drafted our dear constitution, the right to rip off whatever tag, whenever we wanted, was a high priority, and we're relieved the Legislature recognizes a crisis when it sees one.

In defense of the fan

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

My friend has been having college moments, he says. He will stop, mid-stride, and look around at the campus. I will still be walking, talking to him, though he is not there. I turn around, and he is apparently looking at the guttering on Anderson Hall.

"College moment," he says, staying, staring another couple of seconds, then resumes our conversation.

He is soon to graduate and, in my summation, has already grown nostalgic.

It has begun to rub off on me, though God only knows when I will be finished with this education. Nonetheless, driving by the fossils of a land-grant institution, long dead, I saw Memorial Stadium and Ahearn Field House as never before.

It was partly because another friend said his father, fullback for Oklahoma University in another generation, played in Memorial Stadium.

It was also partly because that friend recently told me he had had sex with a girlfriend on the old 50-yard line in that hulking dinosaur last summer. He said he didn't know whether to tell his dad about it and soil his image of that ruined stadium or not.

But it was also something else. The stadium and field house seemed ethereal. Nameless in antiquity. Real, not real. Apogees of something weird.

Some things I promised myself I would not write about in columns this semester: my sexuality (see, I'm blushing), abortion, racism, Bill Clinton, my dad, my dog, God and, because of a two-year exile on page six, sports.

Which reminds me. We play the University of Kansas in basketball again this weekend. The public relations debacle the last game turned into probably caused President Wefald to lose his hair.

Oh. Wait. Nevermind.

KU and the penny. The end of the game. A penny striking the young Rex Walters in the noggin. A challenge to fisticuffs by Coach Roy Williams, enraged by the audacity of such an incident.

To strike out against the No. 1 team in the nation! The notion of the proletariat uprising by flaunting the very capital the bourgeois thrived upon! A peasant showing insolence to the Gods! The gall!

And then the backlash. Ron Paradis, K-State alumnus, pseudo-broadcaster, former ballplayer for the Fightin' Wildcats, played up the incident for all it was worth on his television and radio shows.

Then people started getting sentimental for the Good Old Days, when you could go into a ball game and not fear floating five-cent pieces.

Then the chorus of columnists and sportswriters joined in. Across the state, the nation, and in this good paper, the sportsjournos eulogized the Death of the Good K-State Fan and the End of Good Sportsmanship in Wildcatland.

Wake up, sports fans. The Penny Incident, the Good Sportsmanship of Yesteryear are shams and overblown, sensationalized turds of journalism.

I say this knowing the reprehensible action of injuring an athlete, person or player is indefensible.

But think about it. Who in the world could intentionally throw a penny at any certain basketball player, with deadly and uncanny accuracy, and peg him above the eye? No one.

Try it. Stand in the 30-minute parking area in front of Anderson Hall, and try to hit anyone walking by. Pick someone out and nail them. Try to hit Anderson Hall, for that matter. Pennies tend to curve, drop, fly errant missions.

Anyone who threw that penny (disclaimer: which should not have been thrown) had no idea who they were going to hit. Instead of being a K-State fan, angered by the loss, it could just have well been a KU fan trying to hit a K-State player.

Or someone trying to hit President Wefald. Or a member of the alumni trying to find yet another new way to contribute to the athletic program.

This is all nothing new. K-State fans have always been poor sports. We've always been rowdy, obnoxious, rude and prone to throwing live hens. Always, always, always. Anyone who tells you differently is a fool and a charlatan whose naiveté is equaled only by his ignorance.

It has nothing to do with the loss of Ahearn Field House, as has been cited in several daily publications.

It has nothing to do with the temperament of today's game-goers. Kids will be kids, idiots will be idiots.

And it has nothing to do with a team that might not be that great. That one slays me. Am I the only one who sat through all those 80-below, rainy Saturdays to watch K-State get pounded by everyone in football?

K-State's appeal is its nuttiness, its unpredictability. People go to K-State games for the fear. The fear of not knowing whether they will come out alive or end up being handed up through the crowd by some student crazies. The fear of loss and the excitement to pull the upset. If that is not why you are going to K-State games, there's another university up the river.

Getting nostalgic for things that never were makes good copy and interesting sentimental broadcasts. But reality, that is something of which to be afraid.

Behold Cupid, slightly drunk and still angry

BRAD SEABOURN

I happened across a news item recently many of you may have missed in all the uproar over homosexuals serving in the military and "illegal aliens" being employed by corporate attorneys and federal judges — or is it illegal aliens in the military and homosexuals working for corporate attorneys and federal judges? I can't keep these things straight anymore.

I suppose if you've heard one sad story about homosexual Martians posing as federal judges while working for corporate attorneys who are serving in the military, then you have indeed heard them all.

What I want to know is, why would a Martian want to be a federal judge? Are all federal judges Mar-tians? There is a lot to be learned about our judicial system as we find answers to these questions.

As I was saying, the story I encountered had to do with a married couple living in Israel who are seeking a divorce ... sort of. Actually, one is, and the other isn't, but let's start at the beginning.

Yahiya Avraham (who is now 80) and Ora Avraham (who is now 64) were married 52 years ago. At the time, Yahiya, the groom, was 28, and Ora, the blushing bride, was 12. Now, in this country, that sort of age difference would be grounds for considerable eyebrow-raising and throat-clearing from your average Justice of the Peace (unless of course the judge were a Martian, in which case all bets are off). But in Israel, it was no big deal.

After 12 years of marriage and two daughters (for which Ora was berated and abused by Yahiya for not having given him sons), Ora decided she had had enough. "His behavior was abhorrent. He treated me like chattel," an indignant Mrs. Avraham was quoted as saying.

Now, under Jewish law, both parties must agree to a divorce. And if one party does not agree, the law provides for imprisonment as a final way of convincing the recalcitrant party. Ora tried for 10 years to persuade Yahiya to agree, but he wouldn't budge.

Yahiya was finally sent to prison in 1962 and has been there ever since. Over the last 30 years numerous rabbis have interceded in the situation, offering Yahiya everything from freedom, to a fancy apartment, to religious blessings and a host of other things. Yet, nothing would soften his position. Ali Yahiya would say is, "Can't do it, can't do it, go away." Obviously, he is an avid fan of former president Bush's conversational techniques.

Having heard this sad tale, I became curious. What have noted personalities throughout history said about marriage? Would this give some insight into what went wrong between Yahiya and Ora?

Maybe Ora left Yahiya because she felt as British politician Nancy Astor did when she said, "I married beneath me — all women do." Or maybe she called it quits because, as French novelist Honore de Balzac once said, "The majority of husbands remind me of an orangutan trying to play the violin."

It could be that Ora suffered the same experience as described by British novelist Jane Austen, "Mrs. Hall of Sherbourne was brought to bed yesterday of a dead child, some weeks before she expected, owing to a fright. I suppose she happened unawares to look at her husband."

Then again, maybe she realized, over time, as did British poet Samuel Rogers, "It doesn't much signify whom one marries, for one is sure to find next morning that it was someone else."

I would imagine many married couples feel that way eventually.

On the other side of this issue, Yahiya would probably agree with British novelist and poet Thomas Peacock, "Sir, I have quarreled with my wife, and a man who has quarreled with his wife is absolved from all duty to his country."

I have found myself thinking the same thing many a time.

But what, exactly, is Yahiya thinking? Why 30 years in prison? Maybe he is thinking something like, "If a man stays away from his wife for seven years, the law presumes the separation to have killed him; yet according to our daily experience, it might well prolong his life," a witty quotation by British writer Nigel Dennis. Or, "In marriage, a man becomes slack and selfish and undergoes a fatty degeneration of his moral being," a sobering saying by Robert Louis Stevenson.

It is hard to say what would keep a man in prison for 30 years.

Though, if I were Yahiya, I do know what would make me come out. It is something his wife of 52 years said the last time she tried to persuade him to agree to the divorce, and he again refused, "I haven't seen his ugly puss since 1967, and I hope to never see him again."

Now, how could any married man let an opportunity like that go by?

Religion and science can meet and be nice

Editor,

In the Feb. 12 letter by Robert Bowling and others informing the readers of the anniversary of Charles Darwin's birthday, they reveal a very widespread misconception about the relationship between the scientific theory of evolution and the theological concept of creation. They state, "The harmony of the living universe, Darwin said, is not the wisely planned work of a creator but the product of an interaction of forces." The error here is in seeing God's creative activity and the interaction of natural forces as alternative or anti-ethical ideas.

In the Bible, God is understood as intimately and actively involved in natural, law-governed processes, and nothing in creation is surrendered to a purely natural realm independent of God. The sun rises and sets; the clouds bring rain to the Earth; and the hawk takes flight at God's command.

Because of the recognition of God's imminence and providence, the ideas of Darwin were embraced by many evangelical Christians. Darwin's most prominent supporters in the United States included Asa Gray, a Harvard botanist and Calvinist; George Frederick Wright, a Congregationalist pastor and geologist; and James Dwight Dana, a geologist at Yale and also a Congregationalist. These evangelical Christians all accepted evolution and natural selection but criticized the reductionist leap which rejected God's involvement in the process.

Many evangelical theologians also found no inherent conflict between evolution and divine design or governance. Of special interest is B.B. Warfield, who argued forcefully for the inspiration and complete inerrancy of the Bible. He held that there was no conflict between evolutionary science and belief in scriptural infallibility, calling himself a "Darwinist of the purest water."

My point in all this is to show the fallacy of the often uncritically assumed antagonisms of science vs. Christian faith and evolution vs. creation. These false dichotomies have been thoroughly rejected by a wealth of historical, scientific and theological scholarship.

Making business of rubbish

County joins with Howie to reduce waste

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

Howie, the "can lady" and the "Grand Poo-bah of recycling" all came together Wednesday night to discuss recycling.

Monty Wedel, introduced as "the Grand Poo-bah of recycling" and director of Riley County Planning and Special Projects, and recycling coordinator, spoke on the problems he has encountered and the importance of recycling.

"We had to close the landfill last January due to contamination," Wedel said. "After it shut down, we had to develop a new solid waste plan. Recycling was our only resort."

The county has now teamed up with Howie's Recycling to reduce the solid waste problem.

Howie's Recycling is owned by Howard Wilson and his wife, Joann. Although working with the county, they are also considering other recycling options to improve the participation in Manhattan.

Drop-off centers are still the most profitable for the county. Curbside pilot programs were experimented with and are now under consideration. Another possibility is bins such as in the parking lot of Wal-Mart.

"Recycling is all in the market," Howard Wilson said. "We must demand to use recycled products. Right now, recycled products are more expensive than normal products, and that is not the way it should be."

Howie's recycles a variety of products at this time including glass, plastics, newspapers and aluminum.

"The recycling business is growing rapidly," Joann Wilson, better known as the "can lady", said. "We have plans in the future to expand to the point that we can recycle anything possible."

"The next time you recycle an aluminum can, just think, it will be back on the shelf in six weeks," Howard Wilson said.

The No. 1 product being recycled in the nation is paper at 41 percent.

"It might be a little higher in Manhattan due to the amounts used at K-State," Wedel said.

The next highest percentage is yard waste at 15 percent.

Wedel said he believes it is important that Manhattan keeps moving forward in the area of recycling.

"When it comes to recycling, Manhattan is ahead of the times," Wedel said. "But this doesn't mean that there is no room for improvement."

Principal-Counselor-Student CONFERENCE

The Office of Admissions cordially invites former students of these high schools to attend the 1993 Principal-Counselor-Student Conference. High school principals and counselors will be on campus to visit with you about your preparation for and experiences in KSU Academic programs. Your participation will help the University build a stronger relationship with your former high school faculty.

You are welcome to drop by between 10:15 a.m. and 12:15 p.m. on Thursday, Feb. 18. This is an excellent opportunity for you to renew old friendships with former classmates. The Provost has asked that your instructors excuse you from these class periods.

Athletic administration awaits jurisdiction

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

In the wake of former track coach John Capriotti's admission to paying Wildcat student athletes, the K-State athletic department is quietly trying to complete its own internal investigation, unsure of what lies ahead.

"When we feel satisfied that we've looked at every issue, that report will be forwarded to the NCAA," Jim Epps, K-State's interim athletic director, said Wednesday. "Our main objective is to do the best possible job we can in terms of a very thorough internal investigation of the problems.

"Then, we'll simply await an outcome. But we expect substantial penalties."

The investigation stems from incidents recently made public. Capriotti allegedly paid athletes in the track program before his resignation in November — a resignation, Epps said, the athletic administration pushed.

"Coach Capriotti knew it was time to leave."

But Capriotti maintains he simply paid athletes because they were in need of financial help.

"It was hard for me to say no," he said Wednesday from his office in Beaverton, Ore. "I said no several times, but it was hard.

"I admitted to what I did, and that's all I can tell you. I have nothing to hide."

The consequences of Capriotti's actions have not yet been determined. The NCAA office, without having seen the reports of K-State's internal investigation, couldn't speculate what disciplinary action might be taken.

Past cases involving similar incidents offer different possible actions that might be taken against the Wildcat track program.

In December 1986, a story unfolded about alumni paying football players at Southern Methodist University. Just three months later, the NCAA handed down its decision — the death penalty for the SMU football team.

Southern Methodist wasn't allowed to play football for the 1987 season. The next season, SMU was limited to just seven games — all on the road. The University chose, however, to forego that season as well.

In 1989, SMU won just two of 11 games.

"And that's two more games than a team with 74 freshmen was expected to win," Ed Wisneski, SMU's assistant athletic director, said.

More recently, Clemson University was put on probation by the NCAA in 1990 for a student athlete who reportedly received and distributed cash payments.

But the NCAA imposed lesser penalties to Clemson because "the institution was instrumental in identifying and producing the former student athlete who received cash payments."

K-State's case, Epps said, is entirely self-reporting.

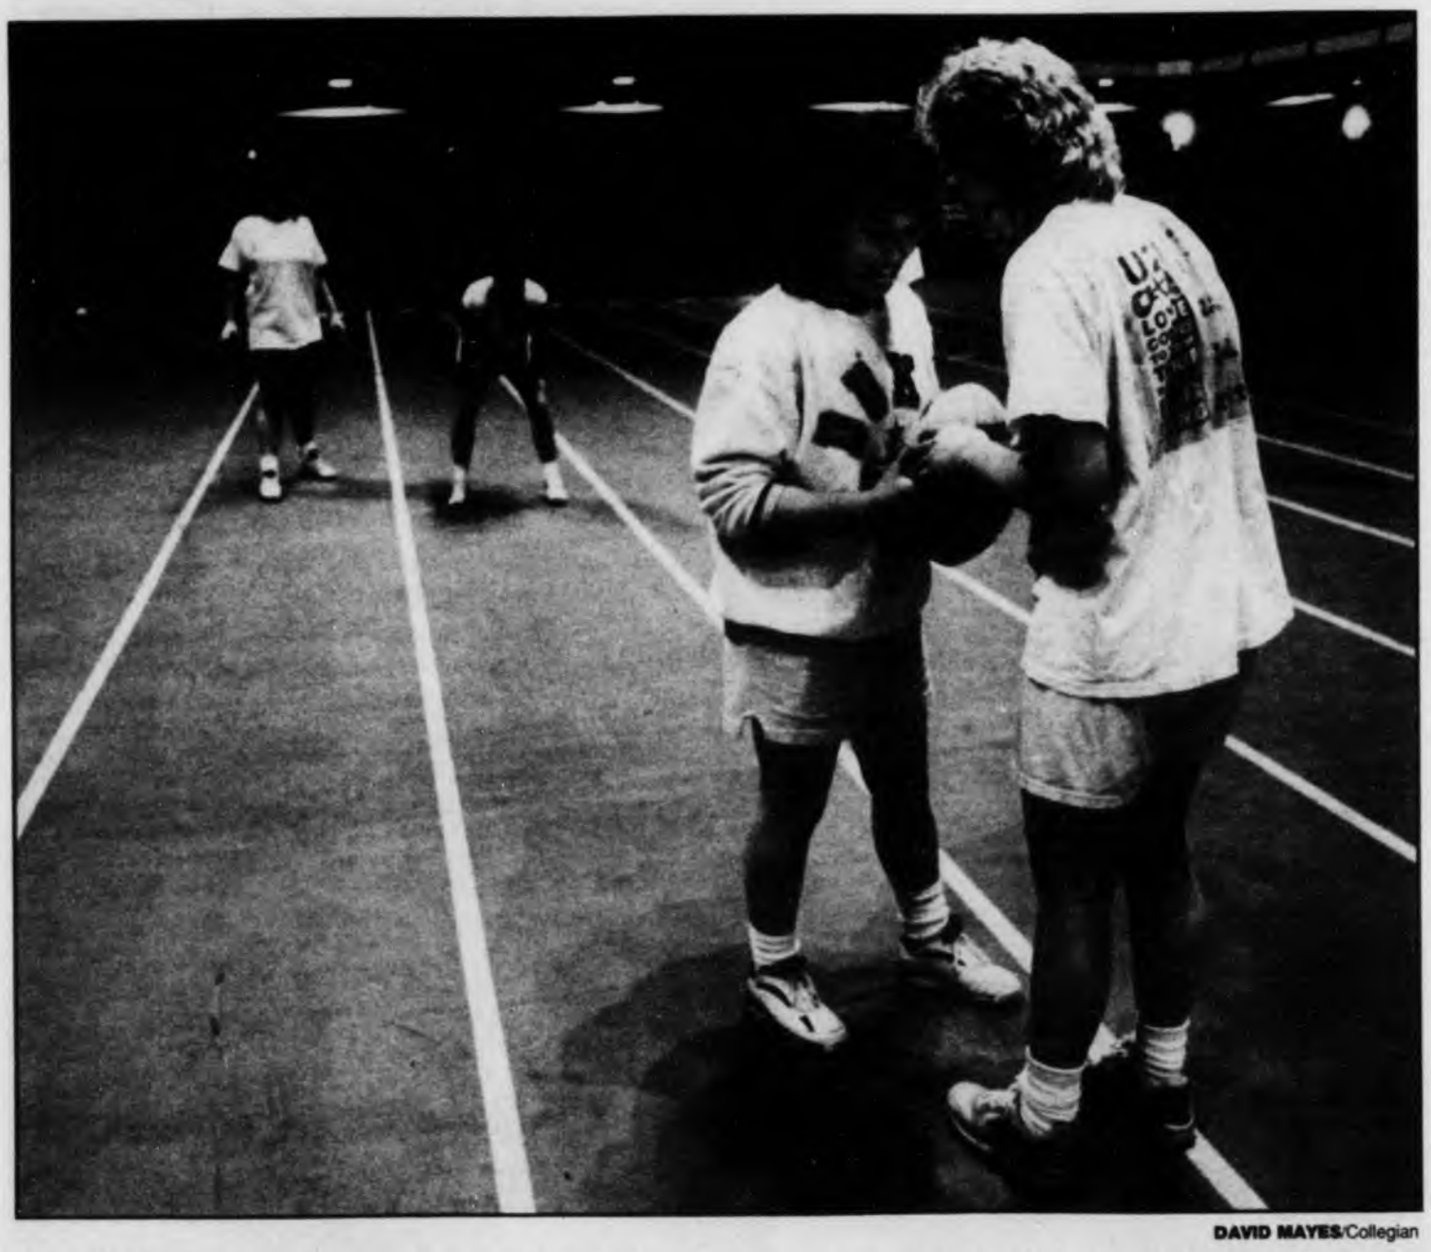
But Clemson's case involved only $50 to $70, far less than the $10,000 originally reported concerning Capriotti — a figure he contends is inaccurately high.

"Given the track record of the Committee on Infractions, it gets your attention," Epps said.

The current Wildcat track team stands to lose the most if the NCAA decides to hand out a punishment. But interim track coach Cliff Rovelto said his team is trying not to think about that possibility.

"Right now, it's important for us to take care of business," he said. "The best thing for us is not to dwell on this at the moment. They've asked me to coach the team, and that's what I'm doing.

"I don't know what else to say."



And Capriotti maintains he did what he thought was right.

"I feel bad for the athletes that are in the program now because they are all innocent," he said.

"They are the ones who are going to have to catch all of the heat, and it should be me."

But, knowing what he knows now, would he do it again?

"I don't know how to answer that," he said. "I just want the thing to get done with."

Women's rugby team has 3 national all stars

ERIC MOORE
Collegian

Three members of the K-State women's rugby team were selected to compete with the United States national team — a squad dubbed "the Eagles." They will compete in June in Toronto against the likes of England and Wales.

LaDonna Grenz, graduate student in laboratory research and the team coach, along with Lonndon Seely, senior in criminal justice, and Dana Teagarden, senior in environmental engineering, will represent K-State.

The three Wildcats were among 40 players selected from more than 1,500.

The average age of members on the Eagles team is 29. Teagarden, 22, will be competing for the second year in a row as the youngest Eagle.

"My big goal is to make the World Cup traveling team," she said. "This is a big step in that direction. I thank God that I have not been injured.

"I am lucky that there is such a strong program here that has allowed me to grow as a player. This is a team sport — it is hard to get better without good people around you."

Seely made the squad in just her second year of competition.

"I was basically shocked, to be perfectly honest with you," she said. "I felt I had a good chance to make the Western team, but not the Eagles.

"I would like to see K-State go a little farther. For K-State, I can still see some goals in the future. We have a quality program here, and I want to leave a quality program behind.

"Having three women selected to the pool from our team says a lot about its quality," Seely said.

Grenz said she did not let her age, 29, stop her.

"My best playing efforts are going to come in the next couple of years," she said. "Experience is a great asset, but when you are playing a 22-year-old, it is very hard to keep up.

"I want to schedule K-State's team to play tough teams that will challenge us this year. I would rather lose to a great team than beat an easy one. We have a really great team this year. We have a chance at nationals."

And Teagarden said she was happy to see Grenz make the team.

"LaDonna making it is pretty cool," she said. "She has been the constant force here at K-State. This says a lot about how hard she has worked. This is comparable to someone trying to teach themselves to play tennis — and then going to Wimbledon."

K-State is one of four teams that plays in the Heart of America Rugby Union. K-State competed against the best players of seven other unions in the first step of the selection process for the Eagle team.

The Western Select Side Team was selected from the eight unions, and from the Heart of America Rugby Union, the three Wildcats were chosen. One player for the University of Missouri-Kansas City was also chosen.

The next step was the Inter Territorial Tournament (ITT), where the selections were made into four sectors — Eastern, Western, Pacific and Midwest.

All four players from K-State's union were chosen by the national selectors to compete on the Eagles.

"It is great to see that the K-State women's rugby team is finally starting to be recognized," Grenz said.

COLUMN

NCAA guidelines need re-evaluation

Over the years, perception has been that K-State pretty much ran a "squeaky-clean" athletic department.

However, even in a well-run athletic department, some things the NCAA frowns on will happen.

Former K-State track and field coach John Capriotti admitted this week he paid athletes on his squads.

Capriotti's resignation, which was a surprise to most on campus, came immediately following K-State's great showing at the Big Eight cross country meet last fall.

TROY COVERDALE

Turns out, he was forced out when the administration found out about his alleged "misdeeds."

And there are enough allegations to fill two pages of this paper.

But some of the problems raised have to do with the NCAA's stranglehold on college athletics.

Capriotti said in a story published in the Topeka Capital Journal, "when an athlete sits across the desk from me and says his house in the inner city has burned, and he has nowhere to go," violating NCAA rules wasn't on his mind.

Helping that student get back on his feet was.

And there's where my problem with the NCAA comes in.

In this space three weeks ago, I stated athletes do not deserve allowances, and I firmly believe that.

But extenuating circumstances do arise. An athlete's house burns down, or a family member dies, and there ought to be a way for help to be offered.

Just a couple of years ago, Larry Brown was trying to convince a basketball player to transfer to KU when that athlete's grandmother died.

Brown paid for his ticket home for the funeral.

KU went on probation the following summer, and Brown's financial help in that situation was one of the factors in the NCAA's decision.

That is wrong.

In regular life, people do loan their fellow human beings money when things like this happen. It's part of human nature.

But the NCAA, trying to be the watchdog of college athletics, oversteps its bounds in cases like this.

In other words, the NCAA doesn't care whether an athlete is alive, dead, breathing, bleeding, running or jumping.

As long as they aren't getting high, flunking class or getting money, the NCAA keeps their hands off.

Now, a lot of other allegations have been made in this case.

Everything from scholarship stretching to "head games" being used by Capriotti.

I'm not going to sit here and tell you John Capriotti was the nicest man you would ever meet, or that he would do anything to help his fellow man.

And I'm definitely not condoning allowances for athletes.

All I'm trying to say here is when it comes time for the NCAA to rule on the punishment to dole out in this situation, it needs to take into consideration that extenuating circumstances call for extraordinary help.

The NCAA's rules do not count for squat in the bigger picture of life.

And that's the way it should be.

Sooners, Cyclones post Big 8 wins

Tigers lose 5th in last 6 games

ASSOCIATED PRESS

AMES, Iowa — Iowa State held Missouri to its lowest output in seven years and got 10 points from Fred Hoiberg down the stretch in beating the Tigers 65-50 in Big Eight play Wednesday night.

The Cyclones (15-8 overall, 5-5 Big Eight) survived their own poor shooting to win their 14th straight home game and hand Missouri its third straight loss and fifth in the last six Big Eight games.

Missouri (15-9, 4-5) trailed 27-15 at halftime and shot a season-low 35 percent. The 50 points were the Tigers' fewest since a 66-50 loss at Virginia on Jan. 7, 1987, and were the fewest Missouri has scored against Iowa State since a 49-42 win over the Clones in 1951.

Iowa State, which shot only 37.7 percent, was led by Justus Thigpen's 16 points. Hoiberg finished with 15, Ron Bayless scored 14, and Loren Meyer had 12.

Melvin Booker led Missouri with 12 points but made only five of 19 shots. The Tigers' poorest shooting game previously this season was 35.4 percent in a 64-56 loss to Memphis State.

Despite its shooting woes, Missouri made a game of it for a while in the second half, drawing to 43-39 on Jeff Warren's putback with 7:26 left. But the Tigers made only one field goal over the next six minutes, and Iowa State went on a 14-4 run to put it out of reach.

Hoiberg scored six points during that stretch, including two free throws that gave Iowa State a 57-43 lead with 1:38 to play. After John Burns hit a 3-pointer for Missouri, Hoiberg sank two more free throws after an intentional foul by Booker, then got loose for a layup four seconds later.

Missouri struggled from the start, missing eight of nine shots and turning the ball over six times in the first seven minutes as Iowa State took a 9-2 lead. The Cyclones never trailed.

OU downs No. 6 Hawks, 80-77

ASSOCIATED PRESS

LAWRENCE, Kan. — OU's Terry Evans became the Big Eight's career 3-point leader, and Oklahoma upset No. 6 Kansas 80-77 Wednesday night, the Jayhawks' first conference home loss in three years.

Oklahoma (17-7, 5-4) won on the road for the first time this season. The Sooners did it without star center Bryan Sallier, sick with pneumonia.

Evans, a four-year starter, broke former Wildcat great Steve Henson's conference record with his 241st 3-pointer with 15:43 left in the first half. Evans finished with 26 points.

The Sooners took a 72-62 lead on Angelo Hamilton's basket before Rex Walters' 3-pointer started a comeback by Kansas (20-4, 7-2). Steve Woodberry's jumper cut Oklahoma's lead to 76-75 with 1:10 remaining.

Evans then made a running 3-pointer and, after another basket by Woodberry, Evans added a foul shot with 18 seconds left. In the final seconds, Patrick Richey and Woodberry both missed 3-pointers that would've tied the score.

After hitting just two of 15 3-pointers, the Jayhawks made three in a row during their comeback. Kansas shot just 38 percent overall, its worst performance of the season.

Oklahoma had lost 13 of its previous 16 games at Kansas. The Sooners took a four-point lead at halftime against the Big Eight leaders and made it 58-48 early in the second half.

Kansas coach Roy Williams pulled his starters just three minutes into the second half and sat them out for almost nine minutes.

Bryatt Vann had 17, Hamilton, 16 and Jeff Webster, 13 for Oklahoma. Adonis Jordan had 16 points for Kansas while Walters and Greg Ostertag had 10.

Playwright's stage offers forum for creativity, expression

The majority of the people who audition are K-State students, but occasionally people from the community audition as well.

The performers hold scripts in their hands during playwright's stage. The rehearsals are minimal, and the performers usually don't start rehearsing until the week before the play.

"The stage is minimal, too. We construct the set with whatever we see in the Purple Masque Theatre, and there are never any walls built," he said.

Taylor Mali, graduate student in English and playwright, has a play to be performed Sunday called, "If Only Love Came In a 6-Pack."

"The play has loosely connected scenes between two men who explore different friendships and relationships," Mali said. "One scene is about two guys who argue rather heatedly over what it would be like to be a woman for 24 hours and what they would do."

There is a class offered in the fall and taught by Norman Fedder, distinguished professor of speech, called Playwriting Workshop. The students write plays in the class and get credit for them. The playwrights can then have them go to playwright's stage in the spring. They do not get credit for playwright's stage.

Playwright's stage began in the spring of 1990, and since then, several of the plays have received productions at K-State or at various places around the country.

A few years ago, a K-State student's play "Any Day Wednesday" was done in Nichols Theatre on its main stage. It went on to the American College Theatre Festival and is currently being published in an anthology of women playwrights.

offering step aerobics in January 1992. Originally, one section a week was set aside for step. After the first week, the step aerobics sessions were so popular that regular aerobics are not even offered anymore, Inbody said.

The L.I.F.E. program is open to students, faculty and anybody in the community. For $8 a month, members have access to 10 aerobics classes and any of the facilities in Ahearn Field House.

Both the Rec Complex and the L.I.F.E. program provide the steps for the sessions.

Students are encouraged to attend the 3:15 p.m. sessions at the Rec Coplex, which were recently added to help keep session size down. The 4:20 p.m. and 5:30 p.m. sessions are the busiest, Marian Brandenberg, Rec Complex receptionist, said.

The L.I.F.E program offers sessions at 5:15 p.m. Monday through Friday, and at noon Wednesday and Friday. Some people prefer the L.I.F.E. program step aerobic sessions because they are smaller, and they feel like they get more individual attention, Inbody said.

Ag leaders criticize Clinton address

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — Leaders from two Kansas farm organizations found President Clinton's economic address Wednesday short on agriculture-related specifics, but they agreed an energy tax could hurt farming.

"There's no way in the world that you can farm or move commodities without using energy," said Doyle Rahjes, president of the Kansas Farm Bureau, the state's largest agricultural organization.

"We're very energy dependent. It would have a significant impact on what we do," said Tom Giessel, a Larned-area farmer and vice president of the Kansas Farmers Union.

Giessel said he is worried that agriculture may be hard hit by spending cuts after already sacrificing more than many areas of the federal budget.

"Talk about sharing is not new," Giessel said. "But it just hasn't happened. Agriculture is about the only segment that has taken a real hit all of the last 10 to 12 years."

Rahjes said he was pleased the president mentioned his support for the North American Free Trade Agreement and for private enterprise having a major role in economic recovery.

"But I was disappointed that he didn't mention agriculture," Rahjes said.

Clinton did mention cutting federal government interest subsidies to the Rural Electrification Administration.

Rahjes said most farmers would qualify for the permanent investment tax credits Clinton mentioned since they have gross incomes of less than $5 million a year.

"I want to support him because the overall thing he's talking about — getting the deficit down — is terribly important and absolutely essential," Rahjes said.

Many more specifics are needed before the impact of Clinton's plan on agriculture can be accurately assessed, both Giessel and Rahjes said.

"I hope something changes," Giessel said. "Because as it stands, things don't work. That's one thing I can agree with him on."

Proposed bill targets dropouts

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Students who drop out of high school could lose more than an education if a House bill that would place stricter requirements on those under 18 who want to obtain driver's licenses is passed.

Under the bill, on which the House Transportation Committee held a hearing Wednesday, in order to get a license those under 18 would be required to show proof of graduation from high school, enrollment in high school or that they have been excused from school due to circumstances beyond their control.

"The biggest incentive to make kids stay in school is to tie it to something they really want," said Donna Whiteman, social and rehabilitation services secretary. "What we're doing right now is not working to keep them in school."

Whiteman, a former state representative who introduced a similar bill in the House in 1990, said SRS favors the bill because dropouts tend to require more state financial aid, particularly in aid to dependent children grants. Her bill passed the house but died in the Senate.

Rep. Robert Tomlinson, R-Roeland Park, said that 4,900 to 5,300 high-school age students drop out of Kansas schools each year, and about 3,500 of them are under age 18 and could be affected by the bill.

But Tomlinson estimated that only about 700 licenses would be suspended each year if the bill were passed because many dropouts would likely get general education degrees, turn to alternative education or be excused from school.

According to state law, a child can drop out of school at age 16. Most drop out between grades 9 and 11.

"The U.S. Supreme Court recognized that driving is a privilege, not a right, but it also recognized that driving is also a necessity," said John Smith, administrator of driver's licenses and driver control.

Smith said the state must provide an administrative hearing to suspend a license unless it was suspended by a court.

"We can't deny them that hearing," he said. "We have to give them due process."

But Tomlinson estimated 10 percent or fewer of the students would appeal.

Schools would be responsible for notifying the Division of Motor Vehicles if students dropped out, under provisions of the bill. The department would have 10 days to notify the dropout of the suspension of his or her license.

Committee Chairman Rex Crowell, R-Longton, said the hearings would increase the amount of administrative paper work and that could hinder the bill's chances for approval.

Ten states already require graduation or enrollment in school for a child to receive a driver's license, Tomlinson said. He said even though the dropout rates in these states had not changed, the accuracy of dropout rate reporting had increased. Their dropout rates have also not risen with the national average, he said.

Tomlinson said dropouts could also enroll in vocational education classes, job preparation training or take GED classes for one to two hours a week and still retain their licenses.

"This should not be considered an anti-driver's license bill or an anti-youth bill," he said. "It's a pro-education bill."

Universities present aspirations

Speech pathology program to be reviewed by regents

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Kansas Board of Regents heard a final review from the heads of the state universities about their aspiration statements and program review recommendations Wednesday.

The regents are scheduled to act on the statements Thursday.

The recommendations touch every school at the University of Kansas, Dave Schulenburger, acting vice chancellor for academic affairs, said.

KU has already begun public hearings on programs recommended for elimination.

The university heads all told the regents the process had been beneficial, and the schools were able to work well together.

"We've all taken this extremely seriously," said Jon Wefald, K-State president. "This has been a monumental task."

Among the most controversial programs recommended for review is the speech pathology program at K-State.

Regents Chairwoman Shirley Palmer said she has received many letters from people concerned that the need for speech pathologists would not be met if the K-State program is cut.

Fort Hays State University, Wichita State University and KU have speech pathology programs.

Rex Cottle, provost at Wichita State, addressed a concern unique to the university, which is searching for a new president to replace Warren Armstrong. The regents are scheduled to interview candidates Thursday and Friday in Overland Park.

Cottle said the university would like to be able to go forward with new programs during the search for a president and the cutting-back process.

Edward Hammond, Fort Hays State president, said his university had given itself a pre-test for the 21st century.

Fort Hays State wants to be able to prepare its students for the bio-engineering age, which they expect to begin in 2020, Hammond said.

He said the three C's for the next century are change, collaboration and choices.

One way Fort Hays will prepare students is by keeping a student-teacher ratio near 17-to-1 and having regular faculty teach classes.

Palmer said she had received several calls from people concerned about plans to eliminate the home economics degree at Fort Hays.

"It isn't a done deal," Hammond said. "All parties will have an opportunity to present their cases."

"We've all taken this extremely seriously. This has been a monumental task."

U.N. suspends shipments to Sarajevo

Lastest move meant to demonstrate world body's anger at warring parties

ASSOCIATED PRESS

UNITED NATIONS — The United Nations' decision Wednesday to suspend aid shipments to Sarajevo is the latest instance of the world body saying it won't sit still, be shot at, and then get blamed for failing to do its job.

The United Nations is getting picky after vastly expanding its peacekeeping presence around the world in recent years, tripling its deployment with major increases in forces in Cambodia and the former Yugoslavia.

Boutros Boutros-Ghali, who took office as secretary-general 13 months ago, has made it clear he will not commit scarce resources and the lives of U.N. personnel if warring parties are not willing to cooperate and reach peace agreements.

The United Nations drew the line again Wednesday when its U.N. High Commissioner for Refugees, Sadako Ogata, suspended aid shipments to Muslim-held Sarajevo and Serb-ruled sections of Bosnia.

Ogata angrily condemned the Bosnian factions for turning food into a political weapon.

Bosnia's Muslim-led government has blocked the distribution of food to Sarajevo's 380,000 residents to protest the U.N. failure to get aid to besieged Muslims to the east. U.N. officials said Serbs have stopped food shipments to an estimated 100,000 Muslims.

Earlier demonstrations of the U.N. will include:

■ Boutros-Ghali's declaration Friday that nearly 14,000 peacekeepers in Croatia may be withdrawn if the Croats don't halt their offensive on the Serb enclaves, and the two groups don't begin productive peace talks.

■ his plan to withdraw 700 peacekeepers from Angola by the end of April, because the UNITA opposition movement and the governing MPLA party resumed their civil war after signing a peace treaty.

■ his threat to withdraw U.N. peacekeepers from the Green Line on Cyprus, where they have been stationed since intercommunal violence in 1964. They were reinforced after the Turkish invasion of the northern part of the island in 1974. Boutros-Ghali insists that the Greek and Turkish Cypriot communities reach a political settlement.

■ the abandonment of the peacekeeping plan for Western Sahara due to a political impasse between Morocco, the occupation power, and the POLISARIO liberation movement. The U.N. force was supposed to monitor a referendum on independence or affiliation with Morocco. Boutros-Ghali has said the plan may have to be scrapped if there is no progress toward holding the referendum.

One exception is Cambodia. Boutros-Ghali said in a report to the Security Council Wednesday that U.N. peacekeeping troops may have to stay there past their scheduled departure date.

There are 15,700 U.N. troops in Cambodia, and the number is to be cut by 3,100 by June.

The Khmer Rouge has been refusing to allow U.N. personnel into its territory, and the Vietnamese-backed Cambodian government has attacked Khmer Rouge regions in recent weeks.

Boutros-Ghali still believes the peace process and national elections can go ahead even without Khmer Rouge cooperation but recommended more security after the elections while the new government is organized.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Wimpy husband needs to cut the apron strings

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Help! I have a real problem that is ruining my marriage. I have been married for almost five years, and my mother-in-law is a real #%$*&! (and that's saying it nicely).

She has never liked me and made it very plain from the beginning of my relationship with her son that I would never be accepted into the family. She has caused a lot of problems between my husband and me, and I'm fed up with it. I have tried everything to make that woman like me, but to no avail. I can't try any more.

My husband wants me to pretend as though nothing is wrong, even though she constantly puts me down, calls me filthy names, criticizes everything about me and has made it clear that I'm never welcome in her home. I haven't been invited to a family function the entire time we've been married, although my husband goes to them all — without me.

When she calls the house, she hangs up if I answer. The sad thing is that I have never done anything to make her dislike me. It really is confusing to everyone who knows me that she would treat me like this and that my husband allows it.

I have finally given my husband a choice: his mother or me. He refuses to tell his mother to knock off her behavior, and so, I feel I have no choice but to get out of this miserable situation and leave. Don't get me wrong — I love my husband but can't stand the fact that he won't cut the apron strings and that he allows her to do these horrible things. I'm really stressed out and can't take any more.

By the way, we've tried counseling, which hasn't helped. Any other suggestions?

Anonymous

DEAR ANONYMOUS,

What an unfortunate situation.

I don't have to tell you that the problem is with your husband. I hope he values your marriage enough to stand up to his mother's inexcusable behavior.

Your husband needs to be reminded that the two of you were the only people at the altar at your wedding — not his mother.

I don't think your ultimatum is out of line, although I'm sorry it has come to this. This doesn't sound like a problem that will correct itself, and your mother-in-law doesn't sound like a very reasonable person.

It is unfair and insulting of your husband to go to family gatherings to which you are not invited. Explain this to him (I'll bet you already have).

Your husband needs to remind his mother that you, not her, are the woman in his life and he will no longer tolerate her rude behavior.

I'm sure your husband loves his mother, but he's going to have to quit being a wimp. He can show solidarity by refusing to attend any future family gatherings at which you are not welcome.

Show him this column.

Wimpy husband, here's my advice to you:

Shape up. Get some nerve, momma's boy. Don't you realize that you are being completely unfair to your wife? You could soon be saying, "I used to be married but Mommy didn't like my wife ..."

Good luck. Let me know how things turn out.

Campaign to focus on students

"I'm from Minnesota, having spent many years in the Minneapolis-St. Paul area. They have an International Festival of Nations," Walters said. "It's at the civic center, and people pay a five-dollar admission fee. The multicultural groups, international associations will establish booths for food, arts and crafts. You walk through and get a taste of what the world's like."

He said he would like to work with international students and establish something similar in Bramlage Coliseum or Ahearn Field House.

But for now, both will concentrate on the campaign at hand, which will not be high budget.

"It's going to be grassroots," Walters said.

"We're not going to max out our campaign-expenditure fund," Bautista said.

taxes on every household with income of more than $30,000. The administration calculated that would raise $71.4 billion by 1998.

The tax would start next July at 2.5 cents a gallon for gasoline, 2.75 cents per gallon of heating oil and 8.75 cents per thousand cubic feet of natural gas. It would triple those original figures.

Income-tax rates would jump significantly — from 31 percent now to 36 percent next year — for families with taxable income over $140,000 and for individuals over $115,000. Clinton said that would affect only 1.2 of taxpayers. A 10 percent surtax which Clinton had promised to impose on millionaires would be applied to taxable income over $250,000.

Hearing increases charge to first-degree murder

While frisking Adam for a weapon, Carrier asked him if he still had the knife. Adam said he had thrown it somewhere at the scene. The knife, which was admitted as evidence, had later been found at the scene by Kansas Bureau of Investigations agents.

Witnesses had previously said an altercation at a local convenience store had led up to the stabbing. Sanders and his friends had stopped on the way back from Emporia when Adam and three of his friends had gotten into a verbal exchange with Scott Miller, one of Sanders' companions.

After the exchange, Adam and a friend followed Sanders' vehicle to Kansas Highway 57, and two other friends of Sanders' pursued in a truck. Sanders left his vehicle to talk to Adam, as Miller fought with Larry Shane, the driver of the truck.

The passenger in the truck, Andy Helton, 18, described the scene.

"We pulled up in front of Adam's car, and I saw Sanders crouched by the driver's window," Helton said. "I turned to get out of the truck, and when I got out, Sanders was lying on the ground. He never got back up.

"I turned to watch Miller and Shane fight, and then someone was yelling, 'he's dead, he's dead.' Then we left."

One piece of evidence admitted was part of the reason charges were initially increased from second to first degree murder. It was what remained of a ball cap that had been taken from the scene and burned, Carrier said.

The hat belonged to Sanders.

"We had questioned one of the guys that was with him, and he told us about the hat," Carrier said.

Helton said he had told Adam he should get rid of the hat as they left the scene.

"We went to the shelters (near Council Grove lake), and I told him he should get rid of it, so he burned it," Helton said. "I assumed the hat was for a trophy — why else would he want it?"

He said Adam told him at the scene, and again at the shelter, he had stabbed Sanders. He said Adam seemed shaky and scared.

Helton said he had gone to the scene to fight.

"That other Scott that was in the car with Scott Sanders slapped me," he said. "He thought I was laughing at him when he came into the Stop'n'Shop, and we started arguing."

Helton testified he had not seen Sanders or either of his two companions carrying weapons and Sanders had not been one of the people arguing. He said he was drunk when the incident occurred but did not know if anyone else was.

Other witnesses at the hearing were Bonita Peterson, the path-ologist who performed the autopsy, and John McElroy, KBI special agent.

Steven Opat, a Geary County prosecutor and criminal attorney, is working with Robert Daub, Morris County Attorney, to prosecute the case. Ralph DeSago, chief public defender for Geary County, is Adam's lawyer.

Alcohol policy, fees discussed by Senate

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

After three weeks of short meetings, Student Senate spent four hours discussing legislation during Thursday night's meeting.

After 1-1/2 hours of debate, an amendment that would enforce strict guidelines during the informal period of Senate failed. The original bill, which would eliminate informal period from the agenda, passed.

A resolution that would appoint a parliamentarian for the remainder of the 1992-93 term was postponed until next week after much debate. The debate concerned the right of the parliamentarian to have voting privileges, since the person seeking the office is also a senator.

Also postponed until next week was a bill restructuring the finance committee of Senate. This bill would give interns on finance committee voting privileges and adjust the number of at-large members, senators and interns on that committee.

In first readings, a bill was discussed concerning an enhancement of the Student Publications Inc. fee. This increase would adjust Student Publications' fee for inflation and would also allow Student Publications to augment its reserves.

If passed, the fee would be increased from $4.80/full-time, $2.40/part-time, $.70/summer to $7.80/full-time, $3.90/part-time and $1.15/summer.

Another bill discussed during first readings was a special allocation to the Tae Kwon Do Club. The allocation would allow the Club to pay a national registration fee and to purchase target pads, body shields, sparring pads, headgear, c-gloves, shin guards and boots.

If this bill is passed in next week's Senate, the Tae Kwon Do Club would be a nationally recognized club by the American Tae Kwon Do Association.

An ad-hoc committee was Aspiration statements presented to regents

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — The Kansas Board of Regents approved a recommended curriculum Thursday for high-school students, aspiration statements and program-review recommendations of the regents institutions.

The regents approved a recommended curriculum for high-school students wishing to enter state universities.

The curriculum includes completing four units of English, three units each of math, science and social science and two units of foreign language in high school. Courses must meet certain requirements to qualify.

The regents also acted on the aspiration statements and program-review recommendations of the six regents institutions.

The goal of the study is to more narrowly focus each school's mission by eliminating programs that are not central to the mission and could be better taught at other regents institutions.

The leaders of the six institutions drew praise for the presentations they made to the board.

Regent Rick Harman said the report presented by K-State President Jon Wefald was the best the regents had seen.

The regents' approval means the universities can continue the processes they have in place.

"All our recommendations were with the intention we would go back to the campus and initiate due process," University of Kansas Chancellor Gene Budig said.

The University of Kansas already has begun public hearings on programs recommended for elimination.

The universities will eventually bring final recommendations for elimination of programs back to the regents.

The board amended the recommendation by Wichita State University to allow it to go forward with three proposed degrees.

All other proposed degrees in Wichita State's statement must be reviewed by its new president before they can be endorsed by the regents.

The regents planned to interview candidates to replace Wichita State President Warren Armstrong Thursday and Friday in Overland Park.

The university leaders all told the regents the aspirations process had been beneficial, and the schools were able to work well together.

"We've all taken this extremely seriously," Wefald said. "This has been a monumental task."

The universities proposed to reallocate more than $15 million and discontinue 102 degree programs.

Stanley Koplik, executive director of the regents, said, "Their actions demonstrate accountability to taxpayers who support these institutions," Koplik said.

Contestants vie for crowns, scholarships

During Saturday night's Miss Manhattan–K-State Pageant, the woman who finishes second can still win.

"We're going to give two girls a crown," Karlene Taylor, assistant director of the pageant, said.

"It's a historic first for the state of Kansas," Nancy O'Kane, executive director of the pageant, said. "We're going to have what they call in Miss America lingo, a stacked pageant," she said.

A stacked pageant is one in which more than one person is given a crown and title, O'Kane said. In cooperation with state officials, they have decided to name one woman Miss Manhattan and the other Miss K-State, she said.

"The top two vote-getters will receive a title," O'Kane said. "We'll just randomly grab the crowns."

"Each will get a $1,000 scholarship," she said. "We're really excited about that."

In the past, Dick Edwards of Dick Edwards Ford has underwritten the pageant, O'Kane said.

"They've given us one thousand for the winner," she said.

Following last year's pageant, Bob Cook, manager of Hardee's Restaurant, told O'Kane he would like to become more involved in the event, she said. Cook said Hardee's and Alliance Restaurant Corp., Hardee's parent company, would donate a $1,000 scholarship, O'Kane said.

"That's a new all-time high," O'Kane said.

There will be 10 contestants vying for the two titles and the scholarship monies, Taylor said.

Each contestant competing in Saturday night's competition is guaranteed at least a $125 scholarship, O'Kane said.

"The first runner-up will receive five hundred," she said.

K-State students competing are the following: Heather Ballew, freshman in arts and sciences undecided; Donna Duryee, sophomore in apparel and textile

Missionary plane hijacked

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MIAMI — An armed Haitian soldier hijacked an American missionary plane at an airport in Haiti and ordered it to Miami on Thursday, but when it landed he emerged with his hands behind his head and surrendered to a SWAT team.

None of the other 12 people aboard — all believed to be Americans — was injured, FBI spokesman Paul Miller said. Among the passengers was a woman whom the hijacker had taken hostage before boarding the plane.

The hijacker had given his handgun to the crew during the flight — about two hours after he seized the plane and two hours before it landed in Miami, a federal law enforcement source said on condition of anonymity.

The hijacker had shot a hole in the ceiling of the plane before it took off from Cap Haitien in northern Haiti, said Kathleen Bergen, spokeswoman for the Federal Aviation Administration.

The plane, an aging twin-prop DC-3, refueled without incident in Providenciales Island in the Turks and Caicos before flying to Miami, Bergen said. It had to refuel because of a shortage of aviation fuel in Cap Haitien, which is about 600 miles from Miami.

Moments after the plane landed at Miami International Airport, the man walked out the door with his hands behind his head as about 10 SWAT team members in dark garb crouched nearby. The man then laid down on the tarmac, and the officers surrounded him.

The ending was reminiscent of the hijacking a week earlier of a Lufthansa jetliner from Europe to New York's Kennedy International Airport. That hijacker, a 20-year-old Ethiopian student, also walked off the plane with his hands behind his head and surrendered to a waiting SWAT team. None of 104 people aboard was injured.

It wasn't immediately known whether Thursday's hijacking was related to the upheaval in Haiti. Tens of thousands of Haitians have fled the impoverished Caribbean nation by sea since the army ousted the country's first democratically elected president, Jean-Bertrand Aristide, in 1991. U.S. policy has been to intercept the refugees at sea, though some have reached Florida.

The hijacked plane was owned by Missionary Flight International, based in West Palm Beach, Fla. A spokesman for the missionary service said he had no information on the hijacking.

▶KU LAW PROPOSING $40-PER-CREDIT-HOUR FEE

TOPEKA — Problems outlined in an accreditation report on the University of Kansas School of Law can be solved with a $40-per-credit-hour fee charged to students, administrators said Thursday.

The report questioned whether the university had the money to finance a high-quality law school.

The problem wasn't new to administrators.

"Almost all of the major concerns in the report had to do with funding," said Dave Schulenburger, acting vice chancellor for academic affairs.

He said Thursday the $40-per-credit-hour fee charged to law students would alleviate the problems. The fee must be approved by the Legislature.

Schulenburger said he believes the fee will be approved, and if it isn't, the university will find the funds internally.

The report, issued by the Accreditation Committee of the American Bar Association in November, said faculty salaries at the school of law had deteriorated dramatically in recent years. During the past five years, the school has dropped into the lowest quarter in faculty salaries.

The school's support staff is limited and unable to provide adequate support for the school's teaching, research, administrative and service missions, the report said.

The November report said the law library's staff and acquisitions budget is too small.

Budig said the legislators had been receptive to the law school's needs, including those addressed in the report

If You Smell Gas, What Do You Reach For To Save Your Life?

Absolutely Wrong. Any kind of spark or flame near a gas leak could be hazardous, not just to your health, but to your neighborhood as well. Clear the area, call KPL, and we'll come investigate.

Wrong again. If gas has leaked into your home, the spark in a light switch could cause a problem. Don't look for the trouble; that's our job. Clear out and call KPL.

Wrong. Even the low-voltage of a telephone switch could be dangerous if gas has leaked in your home. Go to a neighbor's home and call KPL to report any gas leak.

RIGHT! If you ever smell the telltale "rotten eggs" odor we add to our natural gas, get everyone out of the house and call us from a neighbor's phone.

We'll come anytime, day or night, to keep your home safe.

Memorial Quilt brings message, sheds light on AIDS

Randell Carter

The names of victims of the AIDS virus rang clear throughout Lee Arena as an estimated 1,200 people made their way through the Names Project AIDS Memorial Quilt exhibit Thursday night.

The quilt, on display through February 21 at Washburn University in Topeka, represents only a small portion of the whole quilt. Out of 22,000 panels in the complete quilt, 920 are on display at Washburn.

But to those who witnessed the opening ceremonies, those 920 panels speak loudly.

"It's a very powerful experience," Dawn Romano of Topeka said. "I feel a lot of real conflicting emotions — anger, sadness and hope."

Romano, who had a friend recently die of AIDS, said the Quilt

Sacrifice cannot be avoided

THE ISSUE

Everyone seems to be whining over the sacrifices required by President Clinton's economic plan.

WE SUGGEST

In order for us to solve our nation's economic problems, we all must be willing to bear more of the burden.

The first 100 days of the new administration have not yet passed, and the most of the nation is already deep in criticism of President Clinton.

He isn't doing what he said he would do about taxes, he did what he said he would about gays in the military, and he should be doing more than he said he would do about abortion laws.

So, what, exactly, did we expect? Some political God to come floating down in a cloud of stardust, instantly wiping out poverty, unemployment, high taxes, AIDS, urban crime and the deficit in one fell swoop?

Did we think that we, the people who supposedly run this country, would be able to sit back and continue to indulge in conspicuous consumption for another 12 years, without ever having to pay the piper?

Stop whining. Clinton is probably going to screw up as often as any other president, and because our expectations are so incredibly high, he will be attacked for it twice as fast. But we elected him.

Yes, we, the age group that turned out in record numbers at the polls, are largely responsible for putting him in the most powerful position in the free world. And since we have that power, we should continue to have an active role in our government, supporting Clinton in his decisions, offering criticisms and protest when we don't agree with them.

None of the changes in this country are going to happen overnight. Some of them may never happen. But if all we do is sit in front of the television and yell at our newly elected president, we have no room to complain.

We should continue to monitor Clinton's progress and be willing to make a few sacrifices of our own. If we aren't willing to change, how can we

VICTIMS

TOM LISTER

When I was 15, I totaled my dad's pickup. It had been his pride and joy, and now it was upside down in the ditch.

I remember Dad walking to the scene of the accident, crushing his cigarette like Clint Eastwood and letting me know I was ate up with dumb-ass.

For a while, I felt more than a little sad about the whole deal, and then it faded from my thoughts altogether.

Nowadays, though, I look back on it and think:

"Goddamn, I can make some bucks off that."

Because today we've learned to take pride in our ability to feel sorry for ourselves. In essence, we've all become torchbearers for the victims' revolution.

There's only one item in the head shops that sells better than the tie-dyes and lava lamps. It's the crown of thorns, and everyone wants to wear one.

We have all seen victims in our time. In 1977, we saw the 900 bloated bodies that cult leader Jim Jones left in his wake. We've seen films of the Holocaust and the photographs of gaunt prisoners destined for the gas ovens.

We've seen the police dogs attacking civil rights supporters. We've seen poverty and ignorance in all races.

Contemporary times have brought new types of victims. For these people, politics has become a drama theater in which to purge melancholy.

And under the banners of the victims' revolution and multiculturalism, politics have become a forum in which to reap individual benefits in the name of a collective whole.

Before you can be a member of the victims' revolution, you need a red badge of courage. White liberals are hip on giving these out.

Money is the long hair of the '90s, but money can't buy sympathy. That's why white liberals have adorned themselves with such terms as "dysfunctional family" and "white trash."

By using these terms, liberals found a way to associate themselves with other groups as victims. By patronizing these groups, white liberals have found avenues in which to further their own causes.

Recently, we've seen the sick extremes of such associations, even at K-State. In a recent letter to the Collegian, a student explained how he associated himself with Holocaust victims. In other instances, we've seen lesbians and feminists automatically associate themselves with rape victims.

I've known several rape victims. The memories of their rapes are not pleasant to them. I don't think they would approve of someone prostituting their experiences to further an ideological cause.

In addition, I've found little in common with a Midwest college student and someone heading to the gas chambers.

Because of the term "multiculturalism," blacks, too, have found themselves associated with victims. Most recently, homosexuals have associated themselves with blacks because of the military ban on homosexuals. In New York, homosexuals have lobbied for teaching homosexual doctrines in public schools under the banner of multiculturalism.

In addition, conservative views on abortion and welfare have been labeled racist.

The legacy of the victims' revolution is not pretty.

Rather than make the effort to distinguish among groups of self-proclaiming victims, Americans will learn to dismiss them all. Because they see so many unconvincing hands reaching out for pity, Americans have learned not to care.

College has given us analytical minds. However, students have learned only to turn that analytical ray inward in a masturbatory search for victimhood. The result is an inability to grasp larger issues.

We're currently facing an economy that isn't being helped by broken promises. We're also facing, but largely failing to recognize, a true holocaust taking place in the Serbian-Bosnian conflict.

In the wake of university atmospheres that have turned into crying sessions, these real issues will continue to be ignored.

Perhaps we are all victims.

Won't you be our neighbor?

"Why can't we be friends?"

There was a wonderful photograph in Wednesday's Collegian of Gen.Col. Vladimir Mogamadavich Semenov, commander of the Ground Forces of the Russian Republic, as he watched U.S. Army maneuvers staged for his benefit at Fort Riley. General Semenov's stony countenance glowering off the page fulfilled every image we Americans hold of our old enemies. Certainly, this is how I thought a bunch of Russian generals would behave as I prepared to meet the group that visited K-State Monday.

SHAWN WOODFORD

I suspected that General Semenov might be a little different when I learned that he wasn't really Russian, but Chechen. Chechenia is one of the former Soviet Central Asian Republics now fighting for independence in the Northern Caucasus. Semenov's middle name means "son of Mohammed," which indicates that his father was at least named after the prophet of Islam, if not a practicing Muslim. Although national differences were downplayed in the former Soviet Union, the majority of ethnic Russians, known as Great Russians, tend to be chauvinistic toward non-Slavs, so it is very unusual for an Asian-Russian to have risen so high up in the ranks of the military — not to mention one with a Muslim background.

I stood far back in the receiving line that formed in the lobby of Throckmorton Hall when the Russians pulled up. The three generals and three colonels looked fairly impressive in their uniforms and great coats. I mumbled something from my limited Russian vocabulary as I shook each hand, and then was struck by something that I hadn't quite expected. Nearly all of them smiled as they greeted me. Good God, Russian generals don't smile! I was so surprised by this that I barely noticed I was also shaking hands with an impressive array of American top brass, including Gen. Gordon R. Sullivan, chief of staff of the U.S. Army, and the commanders of Fort Riley and Fort Leavenworth.

I was in for a bigger shock later, when I discovered that Semenov had a sense of humor. After the party had toured the agricultural facilities in Throckmorton, they went over to the Military Science building to hear a briefing on the ROTC program and meet some of the Army and Air Force cadets. The cadets all stood at attention as Semenov reviewed them, stopping to ask a question or two of each.

When he finished, the general praised them and congratulated the Army cadets for choosing the right branch. "Army is No. 1," Semenov said with obvious relish, "Air Force is No. 2, and Navy is No. 3." All of the Army cadets were grinning from ear to ear, while the Zoomie cadets got red in the face, shook their heads and looked as if they had just chewed on raw lemons. Of course, the U.S. Army generals found this very amusing, even as they attempted to soothe ruffled feathers. I guess it was a good thing there weren't any Marines there.

While this was going on, my friend who teaches Russian history was talking with Colonel Glubenko, Semenov's interpreter. Glubenko referred to Gen. Dimitri Yazov, the Russian defense secretary who took part in the August 1991 coup attempt, as an "elderly asshole." My friend was astonished to hear a Russian officer speak like that about a superior, so he told him,"Don't lay a macaroni noodle on my ear" in Russian, which is the equivalent of "Get the *%$# out of here," in English. "Why, sir," Colonel Glubenko responded in perfect deadpan English, "I would not hang a macaroni noodle on your ear."

I'm sure that the Pentagon pinheads who orchestrated the event were not in the least happy that the discipline of the tour broke down, allowing everyone to speak freely with each other. There were several guys in suits looking as if they too had just bitten into lemons.

Telephone numbers and business cards were exchanged, with the Russians inviting their new friends to look them up if they ever got to Moscow. Even General Sullivan got into the mood and called the event, through his thick Joisey accent, a "historic occasion." Well, perhaps not historic, but very human.

Russian generals are actually human. Hmm, that's a thought that might take some getting used to. But then again, it will also be difficult to think of them as the bogeymen they had been portrayed as for so many years.

My, my, how things have changed. Maybe Vladimir Mogamadavich and I will be able to have a good laugh about it the next time I'm in Moscow.

Matters other than health care mar Lafene

Editor,

I am writing in reference to the article in the Feb. 17 Collegian titled, "Committee responds to bad publicity about Lafene." In the article, Mike Burton was reported as being "upset" because of the bad publicity Lafene Student Health Center received from Student Senate and the talk radio program, "A Purple Affair." I am presently a College of Agriculture student senator and the host, creator and producer of the DB92 Monday 7 p.m. talk radio show that deals with campus issues.

First of all, let's make this clear — my show does not serve as positive or negative "publicity" to any issue. I merely present the issue. I pick topics that concern students and their money, which usually has been generated straight from the agenda of Student Senate meetings. I interview a panel of guests who are K-State student leaders, faculty and administration who can answer the callers' questions or direct the listeners' concerns.

Because of my Senate position, I constantly hear complaints from students on everything, including the mismanagement of Lafene Student Health Center and their $2,000,000-plus bank account that breaks SGA guidelines. Because of Lafene's bloopers, SGA formed an ad hoc committee to investigate their financial accounts. Lafene did not hear students' concerns and therefore, Student Senate passed a resolution so that they will take students seriously.

My production staff felt we needed more student input about Lafene, so we used it as a topic on our radio show. Mike Burton called and failed to prove my panel wrong. He wound up defending Lafene because of their bad decisions that are opposed by most students on campus. Larry Moeller hates the fact there is distrust about Lafene. Well, students hate the fact they have to distrust Lafene because time and time again their concerns go unnoticed. Everyone should realize Lafene has its advantages, but that does not mean it can weasel out of constant complaints about their mismanagement of money, time and student relations.

Care received at Lafene was above-par

Editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to raise my voice and opinion about the recent letters that have been written about the care provided by the staff as Lafene Health Center. As a student at Kansas State University, I have been seen at Lafene many times. Each time I have been there I have received a courteous welcome by the staff in the check-in window, the nurses in the nurse-station have been very polite, and the care received by the doctors has been outstanding.

I agree, I have a very complicated medical history, but that does not mean that the doctors at Lafene are not competent in handling my illness, or anyone's problems. They are full of compassion, love, understanding, and some of them have gone out of their way in order to provide care.

For example, 12 days ago I was in need of IV antibiotics, and my doctor from Topeka spoke with Dr. Davis to set up the IV therapy here in Manhattan. Dr. Davis and Dr. Moeller both arranged the therapy at Memorial Hospital — that I call being efficient, and most of all, very concerned about students' health and conditions.

The opinion of two students cannot make us think that Lafene provides health care below the standards of a university hospital. To the contrary, I believe that all the doctors at Lafene deserve an apology from the writer of that article. They certainly have worked very hard in school to be doctors, and they have chosen the profession because they care. I know I will always be grateful to the staff at Lafene. You all are a great team, and without you I would not have survived my cancer and many other illnesses. Thanks for all you have done for me and for all of us.

In Europe, it's cool to wear toilets on our arms

Last Sunday night, while most of us were all snug in our beds dreaming of being chased by chainsaw-wielding lunatics, an unlucky traveler in Europe accidentally dropped his identification papers down his train's chemical toilet.

Minutes later, while most of us were upright in bed, dry-heaving, this unfortunate bloke discovered that, indeed, his arm was firmly lodged within the confines of said toilet.

Two hours later, while most of us were dabbing our sweaty faces with a damp cloth, the nervous traveler watched as emergency crews, no doubt giggling uncontrollably, cut the toilet out of the train car floor. The man was then rushed to a hospital in the French town of Saint-Pierre-des-Corps, with his arm still encased in the toilet.

NBC, ABC and CBS wasted no time in rushing film crews into production on this moving saga. At press time, Weekend only knew that NBC had recruited Judd Hirsch to star in the tentatively titled "Two Hours Later And I'm Still Here With My Arm Down This Stinky Toilet."

Like waving a red flag at angry senior citizens

After eons of sticking to the commonly accepted theory that container-grown trees and shrubs should be replanted in big holes with soil boosters, along comes Jimmy Tipton to thumb his nose in all our faces.

Tipton, a so-called "authority on plants of the Southwest," has the audacity to say "new research shows traditional techniques aren't best for new plants."

This wiseacre suggests the way to go is to dig a hole no deeper than the root ball and no more than two to five times its diameter. Then he says to just forget about boosting the soil around the tree.

What a bunch of malarkey. And dangerous, too.

The effects of Tipton's hasty words hit the gardening world like a ton of horse poo-poo. Local gardening clubs, once docile bastions of useful horticulture tips, broke out in violent melees where elderly members threatened each other with hoes and spades.

Now that horticultural anarchy is inevitable, are you happy, Mr. Tipton?

'Could I interest you in a can of Yoo Hoo, dear?'

We're not going to pretend that we don't rush into the room every time those alluring Taster's Choice coffee commercials come on. You know, the ones where that man and that woman, both wired to the gills with dangerous amounts of caffeine, go through that little "wink-wink/got-any-coffee/ooh-la-la/that-was-your-brother?/hey, I'm going to Paris, you come too" mating dance.

While those commercials (which have jacked-up the company's coffee sales 40 percent) are fairly new to America, the whole sordid tale has been running in Britain for the last five years.

Recently Corgi Books had romance writer Susan Moody put the story into novel form. When they first meet in London, he's as drunk as a skunk and it's not until page 80 that she comes a 'callin':

"Almost automatically she walked towards his kitchen, conscious of his gaze on her back, her somewhat naked back ... "

Quite suddenly we were conscious of a feeling in our stomach, our somewhat nauseous stomach.

I think, therefore I am?

"Love of wisdom — philosophy — the guide of life."

Story by Christina Carbajal

Design by Deanna Adams

If you have ever gone away from a philosophy class and thought, "I really don't understand what's going on," then you're doing something right.

This is how James Hamilton, head of the philosophy department, knows that students are truly learning philosophy. The philosophy experience gives people the ability to think critically and know the reasons why they believe in anything.

For centuries, philosophers have been seen as the group who relentlessly tested the traditional religious, political and moral beliefs of the times. They have gone against the majority to prove, not just accept, what they should believe or not believe.

But, this is where the frustration and misunderstanding may come in when someone is wrestling with philosophical ideas.

"There's a segment of society that is deeply fearful of rational inquiry and fundamental questions about human life," John Exdell, associate professor in philosophy, said.

"It doesn't mean that what someone accepts is wrong, it just means that you need to justify why you believe it."

Philosophy can test everything someone has taken as truth, but in philosophy there is more to it than doubting everything a person believes.

"If students work hard enough to get themselves a little uncertain, and they think everything is up for grabs, it really isn't up for grabs," Hamilton said.

"Philosophy is a way of supplying someone with new ways of thinking. Philosophical issues are fun. They can be compared to puzzles. They're not exactly like puzzles, but both philosophy and puzzles share the pleasure you get when you figure something out."

This craving to know how to back up ideals and beliefs, and the satisfaction that comes with gaining that knowledge may be enough reason to pursue philosophy as a career. Usually those who pursue philosophy become professors in their area of specialty, but don't look for fortune or fame.

"No rational person goes into teaching philosophy in order to earn a great deal of money," Hamilton said.

"The philosophy degree is good because of the intellectual training you receive."

Also, training in philosophy is highly respected when trying to get into law school, and it works well with other professions such as psychology or English, Hamilton said.

If someone is worried about finding a job, whether it is in philosophy or not, that person should be realistic of where any undergraduate degree would take someone, he said.

"If you want a guaranteed job at the end of school, then go into architectural engineering or electrical engineering," he said.

Exdell said he decided to pursue philosophy during the 1960s, when philosophical viewpoints were more prevalent because of the political and social turbulence of the decade.

"I found myself asking questions and exploring the motivations of the time," Exdell said.

"My family values influenced me because I was raised to take interest in political issues.

"As a member of society, I had choices to make concerning what to believe in, and those choices depended upon clear thinking about basic issues such as justice and liberty," he said. "The meanings of these words and principles ought to guide us."

Today, social and political philosophy is still studied, but philosophy of feminist issues and philosophy of family issues are the growing areas.

"This development is a result of more women going into the field and broadening the area. It's a major step forward in the discipline," Exdell said. "The dominant values in society have been values propagated by men." Now, philosophers are reconsidering these values, he said.

Angela Bolte, senior in philosophy, said she is applying to graduate school and has studied feminist issues. She said she agrees philosophy is dealing with more social issues today, such as the riots in Los Angeles and trying to find out why things like this have happened and what can be done about them.

"Philosophy gets you to think deeper about a topic," she said.

"You just can't look emotionally or superficially at an issue such as abortion and say, 'that's bad.' You have to use logic and give arguments for all your beliefs."

Bolte said she thinks being able to back up what a person believes in is still important when it comes to any issue.

"A lot of people think philosophy is scary, or they're intimidated by it. They shouldn't feel that way. It's not that philosophy makes you doubt what you believe in, but it makes you analyze why you think that way and if your reasons are correct or not.

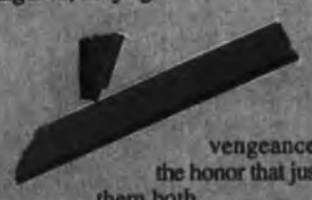
"It does so much for your critical thinking skills. You don't go around with blinders on or follow everyone else like sheep. Thinking critically just isn't taught enough," she said.

Doug McGaughy, senior in history and philosophy, said he has also seen the emerging use of critical thinking and the way feminist issues are being studied.

"Feminist issues criticize old views of the world that were set up by white men," he said.

"You can analyze something you believe, and in the end you either still believe it or you don't, and you can then find something else that's closer to what you're looking for."

Hamilton said philosophy is a process that reflects the changes in society. Its ideas are revised as society's ideas are revised.



"There has been a remarkable set of changes in philosophy," Hamilton said. "There has been a rethinking of traditional philosophical problems in light of developments."

"Mohicans" reaches out to the romantic in all of us

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

Die-hard romantics will fall for "The Last of the Mohicans," a movie that immerses the viewer in the fight for undying love, undying vengeance and the honor that justifies them both.

The movie is set in colonial America during the late 1700s, a time when the British and French were fighting for possession of land and power. Native Americans were also fighting for their place in the colonies — some taking sides in the war and others trying to keep their culture alive without having to bend to the British or French.

It is in the midst of this turbulence that Hawkeye, played by Daniel Day-Lewis, and Cora Monro, played by Madeleine Stowe, meet and eventually fall in love despite their different backgrounds. Hawkeye is the adopted son of Chingachgook, a Mohican, and Cora is one of the daughters of Colonel Monro, the British leader in the war. They both pledge their undying love for each other, no matter the cost.

Besides their differences, lurking in the background to destroy their love is the deeply bitter Heron Indian, Magua, played by Wes Studi. Magua is determined to kill Colonel Monro and his daughters so he can attain revenge for losing his family and his honor.

Day-Lewis and Stowe definitely make sparks as they fight to stay together. True romance is developed as they stare deeply into each other's eyes promising that, "No matter where you are, I will find you."

The supporting cast, however, makes just as much of an impression. Studi plays Magua with intense, yet restrained, anger, and the audience will truly hate him as he goes after the Monros.

Jodhi May, who plays Uncas, Hawkeye's Mohican brother, is also striking as the savior of Cora's younger sister, Alice. He quietly falls in love with her and protects her until the end.

See this movie expecting a classic romance story, and there will be no disappointments.

Cats hope to take advantage of KU 'slump'

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The games just seem to be getting more and more important.

If the Wildcats want to reach the magic number of 18 — the amount of wins that all but assures them an invitation to the NCAA Tournament — they'll have to win a road game somewhere down the line.

With just two home games to play, K-State is going to have to win one of its three remaining regular-season road games, or in the Big Eight tournament at Kemper Arena in Kansas City, to reach the 18-win plateau.

The Jayhawks are 20-4 overall and in first place in the conference with a 7-2 mark. The Wildcats, at 15-6 and 5-4, are in third place — and in need of a road win.

But Saturday's 1 p.m. game against No. 6 Kansas, at Allen Fieldhouse in Lawrence, may not be the ideal place to start looking for a win away from home.

And, considering the fact that Kansas fell to unranked Oklahoma 80-77 Wednesday night, the Jayhawks may be especially hungry.

"You can look at those things a number of different ways," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "It's obvious we won't sneak in there now because they will be trying to bounce back from that game.

"And they haven't lost many at home over the course of two or three years — especially in the conference."

Indeed, Kansas' loss to Oklahoma was the first home loss against a Big Eight team in almost exactly three years, a 77-71 loss to Missouri in 1990.

But all is not well in Jayhawkland. Kansas has lost three of its last six games against Division I teams. And the Hawks, who started the season 16-1, are just 4-3 in their last seven games — with two of those losses coming at home.

Against Oklahoma, Kansas shot just 38 percent from the floor — the second-worst shooting performance by the Hawks in Coach Roy Williams' career.

"You just dig down deep and find some way to improve your play," Williams said. "We'll go back and re-study the three teams we've lost to and look for common threads."

But Altman isn't convinced that "slump" is the best word to describe what the Hawks — who have also lost to Nebraska, 68-64 — are going through.

"They've just lost two close games," he said.

The Cats, on the other hand, are coming off of a pair of thumpings — losses to Nebraska, 80-59, and Colorado, 88-77 — that have put big question marks on their post-season hopes.

And Altman said there is no doubt what has led to K-State's demise.

"The last two games, we have not played well defensively," he said. "We have to get back to that. We're not getting loose balls. We're not getting to the boards.

"It was our defense, or lack of defense, that got us in trouble in both of those games."

The Wildcats are 0-3 when they give up 80 points or more.

"It was another effortless effort," guard Anthony Beane said following Tuesday's loss in Boulder, Colo. "We're really not coming out with any emotion. It's almost like our fire is going down."

And at no worse time.

Heading down the final stretch of the Big Eight season, and knowing that the Cats need at least two more wins to be considered for the NCAA Tournament, may create added stress.

"We've hit a stretch here where we haven't been able to respond," Altman said. "I'm not sure what the reasons are, we just haven't been able to get it done.

"This is an important game for both teams, but much more important for us."

And, Williams said the Cats will come to the game ready to play.

"No. 1, they know a victory over us will pull us back to the pack more and give them a lift," he said.

"The other thing is, they'll be enthused because it's Kansas — let's be honest."

In what may have been the fastest bench-press meet in intramural history, six men and no women competed in the annual meet Thursday night at the Chester E. Peters Recreational Complex.

Steve Martini, the associate director of intramurals, said the turnout was a disappointment.

"Last year, we had 15 to 20 people compete. It's kind of discouraging," he said.

"It's not a disappointment for the guys lifting because they are enjoying it. I think there still is a demand for it. We always have our weight room full of lifters.

"Maybe there was a class conflict with the lifters that would have participated or something else."

Craig Bunck, senior in engineering technology, said he would have liked to have more people to lift against.

"I wished more people would have came out," Bunck said. "It makes the event more fun and makes the competition better."

Roland Myers won the 140-150 lb. division over Daniel Crowl. Myers lifted 255 pounds to Crowl's 230.

In the 151-160 pound class, Mike Stornello easily beat Shane Dicks. Stornello passed his first weight at 225, while Dicks could not get passed the first lift and was disqualified.

Bunck out-muscled Preston Wang in the over-200 pound class. The 220-pound Bunck lifted 460 pounds on his second lift to beat out the 335-pound heave by Wang. Bunck was named all-university bench press lifter.

Lady Cats looking for 2nd straight victory

TONYA FOSTER

Following their first Big Eight win of the 1992-93 season, 67-43 over Iowa State, the Lady Cats will square off against Oklahoma and Oklahoma State at home this weekend.

K-State, 9-13 overall and 1-10 in the Big Eight, will face the Sooners at 7 tonight and the Cowgirls at 2 p.m Sunday.

K-State coach Susan Yow said she would like to see the team build on last Sunday's win.

"I'd like to see us finish strong before the Big Eight tournament in Salina," she said. "That can give us a boost."

The tournament is March 6-8.

Lady Cat guard Andrea O'Neal said the win was a much-needed one.

"It's a confidence builder," she said. "Now, we are due for an upset."

The Sooners are led by sophomore forward Angi Guffy, who averages 13.8 points and 6.3 rebounds per game. She is also third in the conference in blocked shots, with 1.6 every outing.

But Yow said she feels good about the games — especially Oklahoma.

"We know we will have to play good games and hold our defensive game," she said.

The Sooners are also led by Sharee Mitchum. The sophomore forward/guard averages 9.3 points and 5.4 rebounds and is second in the conference in assists.

Yow said the team will have to play its best, both offensively and defensively.

"We are going to have to execute on offense and take care of business on defense," Yow said. "Defense is the key to both games."

Oklahoma State, 20-4 overall, is second behind Colorado in the conference, with a record of 8-2. The Cowgirls are second in the conference in defense and scoring.

The team's leader, Lisa McGill, is averaging 18.9 points per game and 8.6 rebounds. The senior forward is second in the conference in both scoring and rebounding. Freshman guard Stacy Coffey averages 8.7 points and 5.1 rebounds and is first in the conference and sixth in the nation in steals.

"We still have three more games," Yow said. "We need to take it one game at a time."

O'Neal said the Lady Cats still have a chance.

"We had Colorado up with two minutes left in the game, and we almost had them beat," O'Neal said. "We can do anything.

"If they (Oklahoma and Oklahoma State) don't come in with the right mindset, we can beat them."

▶HAWKS TO PLAY IN KICKOFF CLASSIC

EAST RUTHERFORD, N.J. (AP) — Florida State and Kansas have officially been announced to play in the Aug. 28 Kickoff Classic, the first game of the college football season.

The game will be played at Giants Stadium in New York, and each school is reported to be paid more than $600,000.

Others team mentioned for the game Texas, Texas A&M, Nebraska and Oklahoma.

Florida State finished 11-1 last year and beat Nebraska in the Orange Bowl. Kansas went 8-4 and defeated Brigham Young in the Aloha Bowl, the Jayhawks' first bowl appearance since 1981.

▶NO. 7 DUKE DROPS 2ND GAME IN ROW

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va. (AP) — Once able to hold the upper hand over all of college basketball, Duke now can't even do it in its own conference.

Thomas Hill missed a 3-pointer at the buzzer Thursday night, giving No. 23 Virginia a 58-55 victory over No. 7 Duke.

It marked the first time since 1990 that Duke lost back-to-back games to anybody, and the first time since 1990 the Blue Devils were swept by an Atlantic Coast Conference opponent. They lost to Wake Forest, 98-86, in their last outing.

Virginia (16-5, 8-4 ACC) took sole possession of fourth place in the league and dumped Duke (19-5, 7-5) into the league's second tier.

Cory Alexander scored 20 points for Virginia, which last month broke Duke's 36-game ACC home winning streak.

Bobby Hurley, the Blue Devils' No. 2 scoring threat, was held to eight points, nine below his average.

KSU Open to attract nearly 400 competitors

DEREK NELSON

The K-State track and field squads host their final indoor meet of the year this weekend. The KSU Open meet is expected to draw nearly 400 competitors from across the Midwest to Ahearn Field House.

The meet is the team's final competition before the Big Eight indoor meet next weekend.

"We are expecting a lot of competitors, but most teams use the meet as a tune-up for the upcoming conference meets," K-State interim coach Cliff Rovelto said.

K-State, he said, will be no different.

"With the Big Eight meet coming up next weekend, we'll have most of our athletes compete, but in most cases not in their strongest events," he said. "Most of our athletes will run down a race from what they normally run."

Francis O'Neill, a provisional qualifier for the NCAA meet in the mile, will only run the 800 meters.

"It's a lot different," he said. "It's obviously shorter. It's pretty much an all-out race.

"You can push yourself the whole race without really hurting. I love the speed of the race."

Gwen Wentland, who has qualified for the NCAA meet in the high jump, will only participate in the 55-meter hurdles and the shotput.

NCAA-provisional qualifier Christy Ward will also throw the shotput.

Linda Shea, who placed second in the 600 meters last week at the Husker Invitational, will run the half-mile.

"She's never run the half before," Rovelto said. "She was a sprinter in high school, but I've been training her in the 400 and the 600. Eventually, she will be a good 800 runner."

While nearly half of the K-State team will participate, there will be some noticeable absences, noticeably NCAA-qualifier Itai Margalit, who will not participate in the high jump this weekend.

Margalit, who has set new K-State records in four successive weeks, injured his ankle last weekend. He is expected to return in time for the Big Eight meet.

Distance runners Jennifer Hillier and Paulette Staats will not run either.

Of the nearly 400 athletes who will participate, Rovelto expects a lot of quality competition. Twenty-two teams will be represented, including Kansas, Oklahoma State and Nebraska from the Big Eight.

Barton County Community College, which has one of the top programs in junior college, will also be at the meet.

The meet will begin this afternoon at 4.

The competition will continue Saturday at 9 a.m.

Baseball Cats hope to rely on depth

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

Wildcat baseball coach Mike Clark said he has plenty of reasons to be excited about this season's K-State team, which starts the season this weekend with a three-game series in Arkansas.

The combination of 12 returning lettermen and 14 newcomers is expected to make the team the deepest squad in Clark's seven-year career at K-State.

"In the past, we never had any versatility coming off the bench," Clark said.

"We've had a depth problem since the day I came here, and judging from the record before I came here, it's been a problem for 20 or 30 years.

"We think we have some competitions for jobs that we haven't had in the past," he said.

"We can't have positions where we're just trying to make due. If somebody slips a little bit, we'll have somebody there to back him up."

Brian Culp, a second-team all-Big Eighter last season, agreed that depth makes for a better team.

"Position-wise, everybody could start somewhere on the field," he said. "Unfortunately, we can't put everybody on the field. We are going to put a good product on the field.

"I hope the fans come out and back us up. All the games are going to be like the game against Wichita State."

Not only does the team have depth, it has gained several top-notch players — players that Clark said will contribute immediately.

Of the new players, Clark said he is primarily impressed by two pitchers and three position players.

"(Robert) Merriman and (David) Leonhart will give us some instant help that we needed some help in," Clark said of the left-handed pitchers.

"They were the best juco transfers in the state."

Merriman ranked 10th in strikeouts per inning at Barton County Community College, while Leonhart threw a recorded 87 strikeouts in just 70 innings. He walked just 23 batters.

Offensively, Clark said Chris Hendrix and Chriss Hess are big pick-ups.

"Hendrix and Hess are going to contribute right now," he said. "Their bats are going to be in the lineup right away."

Hendrix earned first-team all-state in his last two years of high school, and Hess was named the Kansas 1992 Golden Diamond Amateur Baseball Player of the Year.

But the most prominent newcomer is Brian Morrow, a transfer from Wichita State.

"For a new kid, he is someone who's shown good leadership characteristics," Clark said. Morrow started in 26 of Wichita State's 45 games in 1991, accumulating a .284 average in his first season of college ball.

But Clark said because of the number of newcomers, he could use several lineups to start the season.

"Depending on who's pitching, we'll platoon at third base and shortstop, could use any of the three catchers and have four different outfielders and three different designated hitters," he said.

"The first 20 games, you could see 17 to 18 different combinations."

Clark said Scott McFall and Morrow will get second and first bases, respectively, and Brett Bock will be the main closer coming out of the bullpen.

Dan Driskill, last season's pitching ace who finished third in the Big Eight with nine wins, will return as the No. 1 starter and will start the first game of the season this weekend against Arkansas.

Culp said the squad could go a long way this season.

"If we get our sights set high, we have enough pitching and hitting to beat anybody," said Culp, who batted .358 last season in Big Eight games. "We can be Top 20, go to the Big Eight Tournament, or even go to regional and then go to Omaha."

Omaha is the site of the College World Series.

"I want to wear a ring at the end of the baseball season that says Big Eight Champions," he said.

"Many of the players want the same thing I want. There is no difference between Oklahoma State and K-State except expectation.

"I expect us to win the Big Eight conference."

Men's spikers fall to 8-3 Jayhawks

Cats take 1st game, then fall apart and lose 3 straight, drop to 5-7

RON LACKEY
Collegian

The men's volleyball team had a rough evening in Ahearn Field House last night against the Kansas Jayhawks.

The 5-7 Cats began the night by winning the first game 15-13. After that, though, things began to fall apart.

"We really weren't mentally into the game," Eric Martin, Wildcat middle setter, said.

"We came out really strong, started scoring points and assumed we were going to win. "Then we lost our concentration."

And Wildcat Pat Doherty said that the team made mental errors.

"We were disappointed, our execution was disappointing, and we couldn't make it pay off," he said.

"It's easy to do the physical stuff and most of our mistakes tonight were all mental.

"When it's a club team, it's hard to get everybody ready. It's hard to expect things out of people that don't do this for a scholarship.

"But were still improving."

Being a club sport, the Cats don't practice everyday like most varsity sports.

"We only practice twice a week. We won't even practice again till Monday.

"Then we'll work pretty hard on things that we had problems with tonight," Martin said.

The 8-3 Hawks won the three remaining games, 15-5, 15-9 and 15-3.

"We had a mental breakdown early and brought ourselves back up," said Sean Barker, Kansas club president.

Barker said that he was surprised K-State was such a good team.

He said that he realized right away that the Wildcats had great athletes, but he said he was surprised that K-State — being a club team without the regular practice sessions — was so strong.

The final game of the match, that lasted more than twenty minutes, was the closest of the three.

With the Hawks up 14-13, the two teams exchanged serves back and forth until Kansas finally put the game away with a single tally.

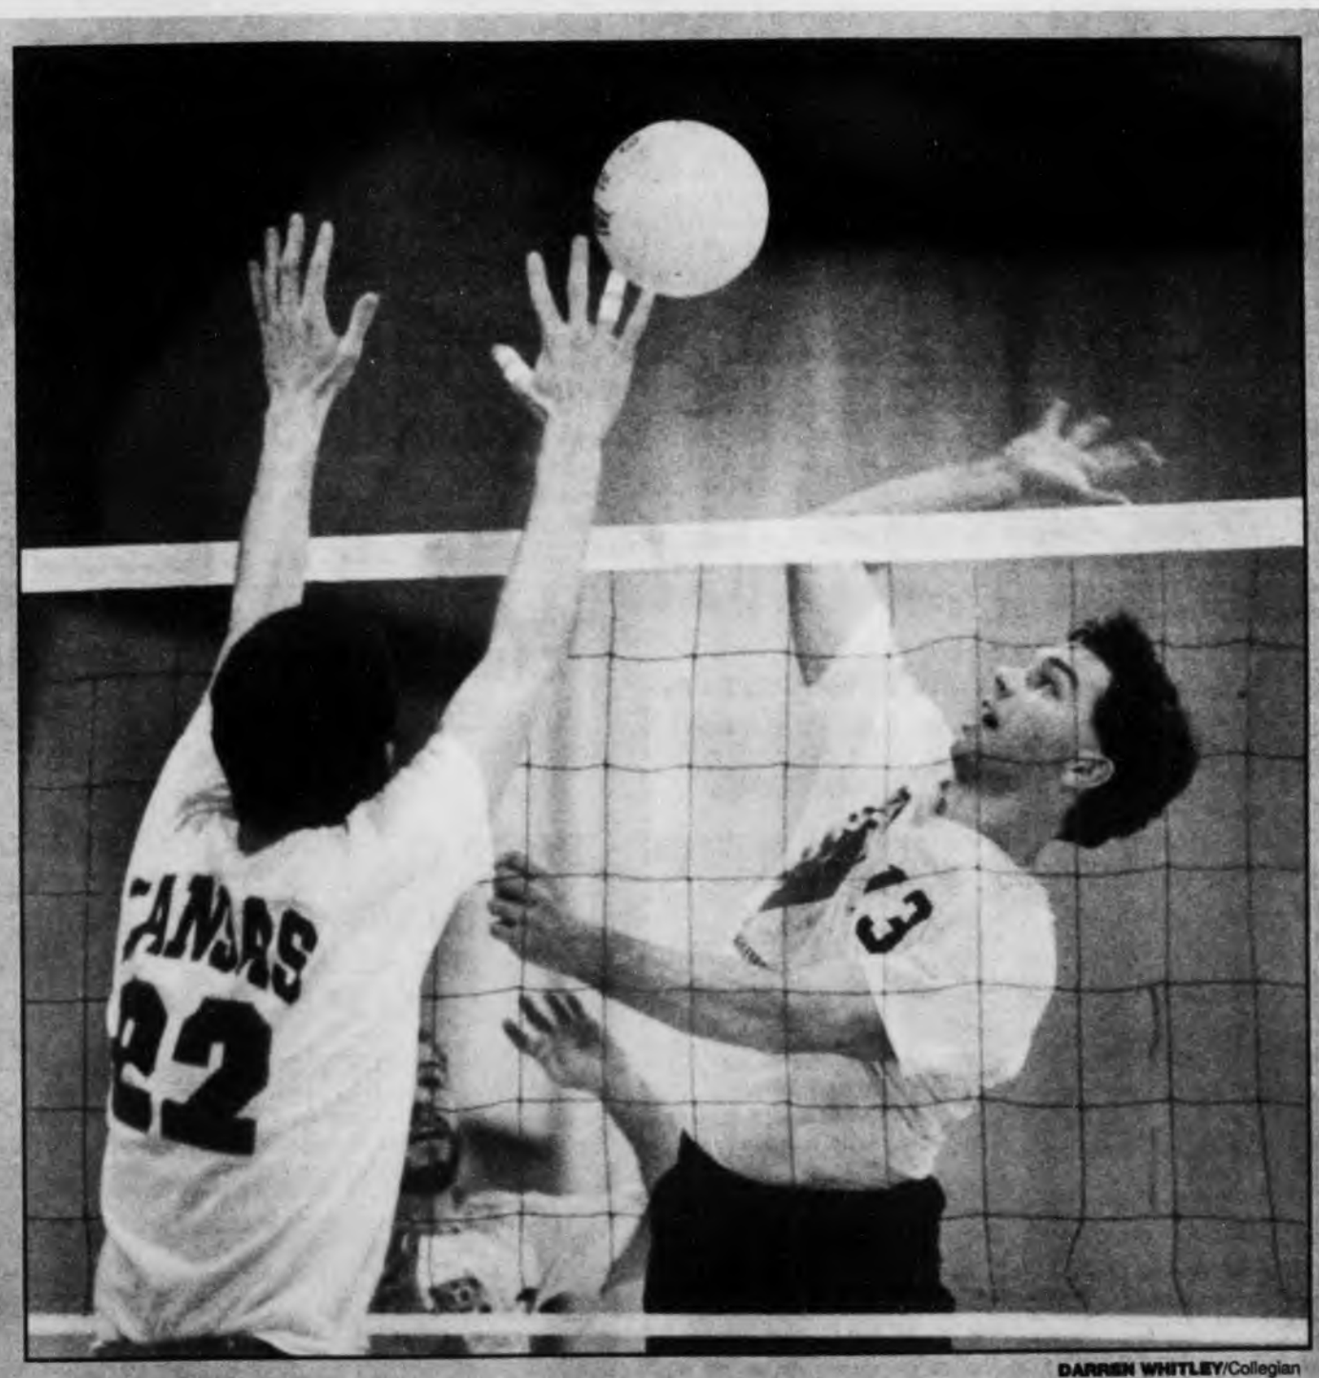
Barker said that, late in the match, the Hawks weren't concentrating enough on the match.

"We came back and started worrying more about each point than the whole match," he said.

And Kansas middle setter Chris Dornfeld said that the Jayhawks had a debt to pay to the Cats.

"We owed these guys anyway," he said. "They beat us twice in Allen Fieldhouse last semester."

Co-coaches Lori Simpson and Kathy Saxton said they were not pleased.



"We just weren't in it," Simpson said. "The players weren't focused. It was just one of those nights."

Co-coach Kathy Saxton, who played volleyball for the K-State team, said even though the Cats came out losing, there were highlights.

"Norte Roen played great.

"He gave us a 110 percent all night long. It's what you expect, and it's nice to see," she said. He was the one spark that we needed."

The Cats will have a chance at redemption next Thursday in Lawrence where they will face the Hawks in Allen Fieldhouse.

TENNIS

Netters hoping to gain experience in match against Wichita State

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

When the K-State tennis team duels the Wichita State Shockers Saturday, the Wildcats will be looking to acquire what they need most.

"Experience — by far," Suzanne Sim, one of two seniors on this season's squad, said.

"This season is a real learning experience for us. We have a real young team and three freshmen that have never played college tennis.

"But the more we play, the better we'll get," Sim said.

The 1 p.m. matches at the Cottonwood Racquet Club will give the young Cats a chance to get back on a winning track.

K-State's season record dropped to 1-2 after back-to-back losses to Drake and Arkansas last weekend in Topeka.

Wildcat coach Steve Bietau said the Wildcat squad, which includes two players in just their first semester of college, is in search of consistency.

"There were a lot of things that happened that were good, but we're not satisfied," Bietau said. "Suzanne was really the only player there that consistently played well throughout the entire weekend.

"Another of the bright spots was that when the team played well, they played very well. That's a situation you sort of expect in early-season matches.

"At this stage of the game, it wasn't a bad performance after all."

Wichita State comes to Manhattan with what Shocker coach Les Stafford said is a deeper team than he has had in the past.

"We have better depth than we did the last year or two," he said. "We've gotten wins up and down the lineup, which is a good quality for a team to have."

In its last match, Wichita State was swept by the Oklahoma Sooners, 9-0.

"Our No. 6 singles player got sick and had to go to the bathroom to throw-up during her match," Stafford said of the loss.

"We had our chances, but unfortunately we didn't get the win."

Saturday's first match will feature K-State's No. 1 singles player, Susana Labrador, against Wichita State's Jo Ellen Walker, a sophomore from Napoleon, Neb.

The two met twice last fall. Walker took the first match in a Nebraska tournament, while Labrador returned the favor in Manhattan.

While this will be their first meeting as No. 1 seeds, Bietau said Labrador has been adjusting well to her new role.

"Being the No. 1 player is a demanding role," Bietau said. "Susana is a little on the self-confident side, and she needs that quality to be a No. 1.

"She's going to have to give her best effort Saturday to win."

"It's definitely a rebuilding year for us," Sim said. "It's a young team, and these girls are going to get better with a year's experience.

"The more we play, the better we'll get. Hopefully by the Big Eight games, we'll be pretty tough."

Admission will be free to the Cottonwood Racquet Club's indoor courts, located at 3615 Claflin Road.

TELEVISION

Live broadcasts build students' character

MICHELLE HAUPT
Collegian

K-State's first TV news show will be produced Friday afternoon, whether it is ready or not.

"We're not ready," Tom Grimes, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications, said. "If we waited to air when we were ready, we'd start the second week in May."

Grimes is the instructor for a 15-student broadcast journalism class. Each week the class will produce a 30-minute news program, called Channel 21 News, including stories about K-State and Manhattan.

"No class is ever ready," he said.

Grimes said there may be mistakes, but these are instrumental to the learning process. However, they will sometimes produce a news broadcast that appears unsmooth.

"Viewers should expect to see mistakes on air," Grimes said. "But they are watching men and women in training. They are allowed to make good faith mistakes and then learn from them."

The show will be broadcast from Dole Hall. Grimes said the first broadcast was originally scheduled to be live, but instead the first few broadcasts will air taped.

"The principal function of the broadcast is to teach television news students how to convey a message to an audience," Grimes said. "This is to function as a lab."

Grimes has extensive background in TV news. He was executive editor and anchor for four years at KERA-TV nightly news in Dallas, and he produced three PBS specials.

He said there are two ways to run a program like this.

"One is to assign an executive producer," Grimes said. "The problem is, I end up doing what the students should. Students wouldn't come into contact with the program and all the different aspects."

The second way to run the show is to let the students handle everything.

"I stand back and let the students make mistakes," Grimes said. "If I see a train wreck coming, then I step in."

Tricia Marsee, junior in broadcast journalism, said the broadcast will give real-life practice to those involved .

"It's not the kind of subject you learn out of a book," Marsee said. "It's not something you can learn with a pencil."

Marsee said it is easier to learn hands-on, rather than listening to someone lecture.

"We will be under the same time pressures and deadlines the professionals are under," she said.

Dane Petersen, senior in broadcast journalism, said it is really more of an educational experience, but the desired result is a professional product.

"We're not going to be the CBS Evening News," Petersen said. "It's not going to have a snappy look, but I think it will help in the real world. There is no substitute for this kind of experience."

Catherine Poindexter, senior in broadcast journalism, said this experience will help students prevent cold feet when they enter the job market.

"When we are thrown to the wolves, this will teach us to do things as fast as you can," Poindexter said.

Poindexter said this class is a stepping-stone for the real world.

"This class kind of walks us through," Poindexter said.

Grimes said each week the students will work in different positions in the broadcast, exposing them to all aspects of the news. The students get experience in anchoring, producing, interviewing, photography and field work. He said he has seen students think they want to do one thing and then excel in others.

"I want students to experience all of it so they can make a decision of what they want to do," he said.

School conference attendance suffers

High school faculty seek student feedback; location cited as limiting factor

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

Snowy roads and cold temperatures kept a few schools and many students from attending the 41st annual Principal/Counselor Student Conference on Thursday.

The conference included morning and afternoon sessions on desegregation, changes in financial aid and basic admission information. Between the sessions, principals and counselors met with former students to find out about their experience at K-State.

Tables were set up in Ahearn Field House and the K-State Union Courtyard for each of the 153 high schools scheduled to attend. Principals and counselors sat at the tables from 10 a.m. until around noon, talking with their alumni.

All Kansas high schools are invited to the event, Lynnette Matthews, assistant director of admissions, said.

"We send them a packet of information about the conference, and they send us a response," Matthews said.

There has been positive feedback from the schools about the conference as a whole. However, there is also negative feedback about the lack of attendance by alumni, she said.

"I wish we could see more of the students while we're here. When only a few show up, it makes the trip seem less worthwhile," said Scott Day, counselor at Jefferson North High School in Winchester, Kan.

Out of 27 former Jefferson North students attending K-State, only one showed up to speak with him.

Sharon Porter, a business teacher at Jefferson North, said having the conference in Ahearn Field House is one of the problems.

"It would be better if we were in an area where students could pass by and say hello, instead of having to walk over here," Porter said. "I wish I knew how we could get over in the Union like some of the other schools."

Principals and counselors said the few students who did stop by gave them useful information about K-State.

Scott Smith, counselor at Blue Valley-Stilwell, said the conference is very beneficial to the teachers and administrators at Blue Valley.

"All of the feedback we get is very positive and shows us that we are doing some things right," Smith said. "We listen to what the students are concerned about and pass it along to our staff."

Smith said during the past three years at the conference, Blue Valley has had a good response from its alumni. This year out of 120 alumni attending K-State about 10 percent showed up to give their feedback about K-State.

The principals and counselors asked former students what they think of the classes at K-State and how prepared they were upon leaving high school.

The information obtained is used to help prepare future high-school graduates and to make their transition into college that much easier.

Upon leaving the conference, the principals and counselors were asked to fill out questionnaires about the event. These responses are used to make changes in next year's conference, and to help determine what topics need to be addressed.

The best improvement we can make with the conference is to get more students to come, Matthews said.

Sawyer Brown to highlight triple country act at Bramlage

JULIE CORBIN
Collegian

Bramlage Coliseum will explode with the lights and sounds of Suzy Bogguss, Restless Heart and Sawyer Brown, three top names in country music, at 8 p.m. Saturday.

"Touring with the guys has been great," Bogguss said in a radio interview recently.

"They have kinda' taken me under their wing — like their little sister. Besides, who wouldn't like traveling across the country with the likes of Sawyer Brown and Restless Heart?"

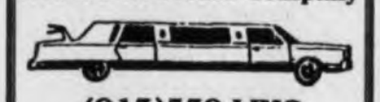
Bogguss's first two albums, "Somewhere Between" and "Moment of Truth," had a couple of singles released, but her breakthrough album came in August 1991 when "Aces" hit the charts. Singles from that CD include "Outbound Plane" and "Letting Go," both of which peaked in the top 10 on both the music and video charts.

Bogguss opens the show, followed by Restless Heart.

Restless Heart entered the country-music scene in 1984, and in the past nine years has produced six albums, achieving top ten singles from each one. Hits include: "Till I Loved You," "That Rock Won't Roll," "The Bluest Eyes in Texas," "Fast Movin' Train," "You Can Depend on Me" and "When She Cries," just to name a few.

The new CD, "Big Iron Horses," was made without two founding members of Restless Heart. Lead singer Larry Stewart left the group to pursue a solo career, and Dave Innis, keyboards and co-founder of the group, left the group for "personal problems," John Dittrich, the band's drummer and singer, told The Tennessean Living Magazine.

"I think what you're hearing on this new album is much more of the individual personalities of the band members coming out. I think that vocally, we are singing the things that we really want to sing and the things we really enjoy singing," Dittrich told Music City News Magazine.



To bring the group back to its original five-member configuration, new members Chris Hicks, guitarist and saxophonist, and Dwain Rowe, keyboardist, joined the group.

The featured group is Sawyer Brown. Their high energy concerts bring fans back time after time.

A Sawyer Brown press release said, "Their road show became one of the most successful on the tour circuit, and fans began bringing signs announcing the number of shows they'd attended. The numbers of shows often exceeded the concert goer's age by 50 or 60."

Sawyer Brown's hits are high energy and popular at dance clubs nationwide. Songs like, "Step That Step," "Betty's Being Bad," "The Race is On," "Shakin" and "Some Girls Do" all fit into the expected Sawyer Brown style. However, within the past few years, Sawyer Brown has expanded their style to include thought provoking ballads such as, "The Walk" and "The Dirt Road". Their new CD, "Cafe On the Corner," includes such ballads as the title track, "Cafe On the Corner" and "All These Years."

Tickets for Saturday's concert can be purchased for $20 at all Bramlage Ticket outlets.

Amidst the rush on campus between morning classes, Gladys Myers, senior in human development and family studies, walks to her statistics class in Dickens Hall.

A NEW EXPERIENCE

Throw the usual stereotypes right out of the window.

These stereotypes include those students who, for some reason, call it quits part-way into their college education or never bother to start college at all. They wander aimlessly through life, never knowing what to do, and never set foot in the ivory halls of education again.

Not so with Gladys Myers.

Myers, a senior in human development and family studies, attained her General Equivalency Diploma and regular high-school diploma in Michigan. She had previously dropped out of high school after a dispute with a teacher.

She has six children.

And Gladys Meyers is 62 years old.

Thought to be the one of the oldest students currently enrolled at K-State, Myers returned to the college life at the prodding of her children.

"In 1985, my youngest daughter decided that she wanted to go to college. She said, 'Mom, take me over to the college. I have an appointment.' And so I became interested in it."

After discussing it with her daughter's adviser, Myers eased back into the college atmosphere. After living in both Kansas and Michigan, Myers finally settled in Kansas in December 1980 to take care of her ill mother. Her husband and mother have since passed away, but Myers still lives with two of her grandchildren.

In spite of her age, Myers feels no discomfort working with fellow students the same age as her grandchildren.

"I relate well to young people. I always have. I think other students react well to me."

Myers takes notes in her housing and facility management class in Justin Hall.

Myers said she feels the same about her teachers.

"I don't think that I'm treated special. If I need help, I'm the first one to go ask for it. I'm interested enough to care about what I do with my time."

Being older than most of her teachers in the first place, Myers has one advantage going into the classroom that most other students don't — experience. Not so much educational experience, but a solid background in the ups and downs life and handing people.

"I think that's one of the things that makes it easier for me because my experience with others has made it easier for me to go ahead and talk. I'm not afraid to ask a question."

As a senior, Myers should be graduating in May. Having already received an interdisciplinary degree from K-State, she plans to work with senior citizens and perhaps children.

"It sounds like a gripe when I say this, and it really isn't, but I relate well to older people. I was raised with older people. I was never young."

Myers takes her schoolwork as seriously as a job.

"I enjoy it — don't get me wrong, but it's also important to me that I do as well as I can."

The positive attitude Myers holds toward her schooling also carries over to her opinion of her fellow students.

"I think they're great. I love them all. We were all young once, and too many older people forget. I remember the things that I used to do. Yes, there's more drugs, but I believe kids have a tougher time growing up today because of all the pressures. Kids have to grow up fast, and they have a lot of years to be old."

As far as her opinion of growing old, she says it's all a state of mind.

"I'll probably be forever young. If I could change one thing, it would be going to school many years ago instead of now and finishing up."

Putting the exclamation point on her youth, Myers was asked if she would ever retire.

"What's that?"

Enough said.

MANAGEMENT

Technique boosts worker morale

Methods benefit students, employees; Union Station uses plan

"Total quality itself is a big tent full of ideas."

THEODORE MARCHESE
VICE PRESIDENT OF THE AMERICAN ASSOCIATION FOR HIGHER EDUCATION

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

Ideas aimed at improving corporate enterprise and customer focus, a notion coined Total Quality Management, is taking a foothold on college campuses.

Theodore Marchese, vice president of the American Association for Higher Education, gave a presentationThursday on the history and components of TQM for the Chester E. Peters Lecture in student development.

"Total quality itself is a big tent full of ideas," Marchese said. "In 1992, these ideas became a big deal."

He said universities are beginning to soak up ideas that have spilled over from other fields who have been using TQM techniques since the early 1980s.

Automobile corporations, the armed forces and health care have already implemented quality management techniques.

Marchese emphasized several components TQM involves at a higher education level.

"Quality is what the customer says it is," he said. "It is a new mindset about listening and service."

Continuous improvement, fair leadership, improving processes, creating a unifying organizational vision, working as teams and receiving rewards are essential parts of TQM as well, he said.

"Quality is the function of results, of outcomes," Marchese said.

It is the job of the institutions to develop student talent to the fullest, he said.

"Kansas State University has made remarkable strides," Marchese said.

The K-State Union started TQM training in May, Julie Groh, Total Quality Management coordinator, said.

"We're trying to make the most efficient use of resources at the Union," she said. "We want to find out what the needs of the students are."

Groh said student needs are incorporated in all phases of the Union, and employees from different sections of the Union belong to teams that work on various tasks.

Union staff members are phased into task groups gradually and do the TQM tasks during paid working hours.

"Our employees are assets," Groh said. "They have the knowledge."

The College of Veterinary Medicine is implementing TQM also, Cynthia McCahon, assistant professor of management, said.

McCahon is chairwoman of the Total Quality Management Awareness Group, which was formed in May.

"TQM basically becomes the way you do business," she said.

McCahon said it is extremely important that people have a good feeling about being a member of the college.

Ways of encouraging this include improving research and teaching, and by empowering and training employees.

"You constantly look at better ways of doing things," McCahon said. "The possibilities are endless."

Newspapers stolen after wreck photo

ASSOCIATED PRESS

HIGHLAND — Hundreds of copies of a student newspaper were stolen and thrown away after the paper published a picture of the wrecked car of a student who died in a traffic accident.

About 30 students had signed a petition asking the editor of the Highlander, a weekly newspaper, not to publish the photo.

But the paper went ahead Feb. 12 and published a front-page photo showing the wrecked car of 19-year-old Darin Hinchman of Topeka.

Friends who signed the petition said the picture made it difficult to remember Hinchman in life, not in death.

"Those of us who cared about him would prefer to remember him in life, not death. We are not trying to censor you or abridge your freedom of speech, rather sincerely asking that you consider our feelings when making your decision," the petition said.

At issue was a photograph showing Hinchman's car following a two-car accident. The crash occurred Feb. 2, just west of Highland in Doniphan County on U.S. 36.

The accompanying story quoted the Brown County sheriff as saying the roadway was deadly and should be avoided.

"Our main point of view was it was a safety factor," said Melissa Blake, co-editor of the paper, which publishes about 1,500 copies twice a month. "Maybe the picture stopped someone else from driving on that highway."

The newspaper is usually easy to find stacked inside campus buildings and distributed around town.

But after Friday's issue appeared, copies were taken and thrown away as quickly as they were distributed. The five-member newspaper staff got the news out only by taping a copy on the window of the journalism office.

"They found stacks and stacks in the trash," said Vicki Mellenbruch, a co-editor of the newspaper who shot the picture.

"It's been hairy. We've had a lot of threats."

LEGISLATURE

Students lobby for salary increases

RANCE AMES
Collegian

K-State students took a page out of the special-interest group handbook Wednesday and traveled to Topeka to lobby Kansas legislators.

"The student lobbyists were there in support of K-State and higher education," said Tim Oswalt, senior in finance and state and legislative affairs director for Student Body President Jackie McClaskey.

"We lobbied for four priorities. These priorities were based on the governor's recommendations with regard to higher education," Oswalt said.

One priority is an increase in unclassified and classified employee and student salaries, and benefits.

Another priority is the establishment of the Kansas Supplemental Grant Program. This program uses money collected from student fees and provides grants to needy Kansas students attending a Kansas Board of Regents institution.

Full funding of the Youth Educational Services Program is also one of the priorities. This program pays University students to work with at-risk elementary school students.

Finally, a four-percent increase in the University's other operating expenditures is another priority. This provides regents schools with funding to keep pace with inflation, especially in the areas of computing and libraries.

Rep. Gary Haulmark, R-Lenexa, said these priorities are not out of line.

"I certainly think they are very reasonable. What it all boils down to is making the money go as far as possible," Haulmark said.

Jim Persinger, senior in marketing and chief of staff for McClaskey, said about 35 students participated in lobby day and were able to talk to over 85 legislators.

Sen. Paul Feleciano Jr., D-Wichita, said he likes to hear from students.

"It is important to get feedback from students. Too often they are the ones who have to make sacrifices at budget time, so, it is good when they take the time and interest to share their concerns with their elected officials," Feleciano said.

Jon Whitton, senior in political science, was one of the students who participated in lobby day.

"Most of the legislators were receptive to the students," Whitton said. "Some of them took the time to sit down with us and go over the problems in funding all of the state's needs," he said. "That made it interesting and educational for us, too."

As a part of the lobbying effort, there was a reception table on the second floor of the capitol with foods prepared on campus.

"There were meats and cheeses from the Department of Animal Science Industry, and the Bakery Science Club donated bakery goods," Persinger said. "This gave the students a good chance to mingle with legislators on a more casual basis."

This year's lobby day went well, Oswalt said.

"We had a larger turnout of students than in years past, and many of those students had participated in a lobby day before. That previous experience really helps," Oswalt said.

Couples will be swing dancing.

The swing is one of many country dances that will be taught in the K-State Union Station for four weeks, from Feb. 21 to March 15. Union Program Council Special Events is sponsoring the lessons.

Becky Keller, chairperson for UPC Special Events and sophomore in human ecology, said the lessons give people a good opportunity to learn something new.

Cindy Singer, senior in secondary education, said she is excited to learn.

"I signed up for lessons because whenever I go somewhere, I see people who know how to dance, and I can't," she said. "Hopefully I'll learn a few basic steps and dances."

Stephanie Turpin, dance-lesson instructor and senior in accounting, said she plans to teach some of the basic steps.

"We plan to teach the two-step, a waltz, the basic swing and maybe a few line dances," she said.

She said the line dances will be taught if people learn the basic steps first.

"We saw a lot of people catch on really fast last year and taught more than we planned," Turpin said.

She and her partner taught about 21 couples last year, Turpin said. This year the number is 25 couples a session, Keller said. There will be a total of 50 couples since there are two sections, divided into the Sunday and Monday groups.

"The sign-up was on a first-come, first-serve basis. There's even a waiting list of couples," Keller said.

Couples pay a $12 entry fee to take the lessons in Union Station.

"It's a good, easy, fun money-maker," Keller said.

Changes in rape law proposed

"If the language of this law is not changed, there will be a negative impact on prosecution — an impact we can't afford to have."

DORTHY MILLER
DIRECTOR OF SAFEHOUSE

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Attorney General Bob Stephan was among witnesses urging the Senate Judiciary Committee on Wednesday to change a state law that says voluntary intoxication of the victim is a defense in rape and sodomy cases.

Dorthy Miller of Pittsburg, director of Safehouse, an agency that provides services to victims of sexual assault in southeast Kansas, also testified in favor of the change.

She worked recently with a woman who was raped at knifepoint but couldn't get police to investigate because she refused to take an alcohol test.

"If the language of this law is not changed, there will be a negative impact on prosecution — an impact we can't afford to have," she said. "Kansas needs more prosecution, rather than less."

Also strongly supporting the change was Gabrielle Thompson, assistant Riley County attorney, who has been involved in a case stemming from an incident that occurred during a student campout for K-State basketball tickets late last year.

Not everyone supported the change.

Shawnee County Public Defender Ronald Wurtz, representing the Kansas Association of Criminal Defense Lawyers, expressed skepticism that the advocates knew what the consequence of changing the law could be.

And, Sen. Richard Rock, D-Arkansas City, a member of the committee, said the Legislature could make things worse by over-reacting to an emotional issue.

Wurtz, public defender in Topeka for 14 years, opposed the change, saying he had never seen an unsuccessful prosecution because of the law.

"It will tend more to put the victim on trial than the current law," he said, adding that the bill "dangerously broadens the reach of sexual assault charges."

"Its potential for abuse outweighs any benefit it may have in deterring those who would use alcohol to achieve their sexual desires," Wurtz said.

Rock was also apprehensive.

"These things become so involved in advocacy sometimes that things become more difficult," he said. "It's a very, very emotional, difficult aspect of our criminal law. It's also very complex from a prosecutorial and constitutional standpoint."

At issue is a state law that says it is not rape if the victim voluntarily became intoxicated on alcohol or drugs before the incident occurred. The committee took no action on a bill that would remove that language from the law.

Stephan said the law has led to absurd results.

"The mere fact that an individual consumes alcoholic liquor or is under the influence of a narcotic, drug or other substance, that they voluntarily consumed or allowed to be administered, should not give license to sexually assault that individual," the attorney general said.

"Regardless of the circumstances of the victim, there is no justification to, in effect, say that that individual has thereby given permission to be sexually assaulted. It is almost as absurd as saying that if a woman is wearing the wrong clothes, then a sexual assault is to be expected."

Ms. Thompson, who has been involved in a Manhattan rape case involving allegedly voluntary intoxication by a rape victim, said a judge twice threw the case out because of the consent language in the law. Charges have been filed a third time in the case.

"The statute, as it is presently written, permits rape of a person who has become voluntarily or knowingly intoxicated or unable to consent because of intoxication or the intake of narcotics or drugs," she said.

"There is no reason that I can find or that has been explained to me through all the controversy of the past several months why in selected crimes a person can be attacked because that person is defenseless due to the ingestion of some substance."

Program asks questions of men

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

Four men were somber and apprehensive as they tried to relax in front of a large group of mostly women.

They fidgeted as if they were about to be bombarded by an onslaught of questions.

These men were waiting to participate in an Oprah-like talk show discussion Thursday night in Boyd Hall.

This discussion, called Ask a Man, provided students an opportunity to ask anything they ever wanted to know about men, event coordinator Mindy Farris, senior in elementary education, said.

A four-man panel consisting of Marlone Davis, junior in nuclear engineering; Jeff Gardner, senior in elementary education; Brian Hancock, senior in advertising and political science, and Scott Thomas, senior in secondary education, fielded questions from an audience of women and men.

Panel members answered questions ranging from "How would you feel if a woman asked you out?" to "How does sex play a role in your relationships?"

The panel members agreed it was all right for a woman to ask a man out or at least to make the first move. Most of them said they prefer a woman to ask them out.

"Girls don't think guys are shy," Thomas said.

But asking someone out and facing the fear of rejection seems to petrify some men.

Most men on the panel also agreed that a couple would know when it was right for them to have sex.

"If you're in a relationship for sex, then you're in a relationship for the wrong reasons," Hancock said.

Some of the qualities the men said they looked for in a relationship were a sense of humor, attractiveness and honesty.

The panel members agreed honesty was important in any relationship. When asked about how they would like a woman to break off a relationship, they said honesty was the best policy.

Hancock and Thomas said respect for the individuals in the relationship required honesty during the break-up.

They also said honesty was not something a person could pick out of a crowd, but it was ultimately something to look for in a partner.

Farris said she felt the panel discussion went well.

"It was a good attempt to bridge the communication gap between men and women," she said.

Letter pranksters shocked by being caught in deception

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Let us introduce ourselves (informally, of course). We are the three pranksters responsible for the Roommate Masturbator, Video-tape Scandal and many other letters.

We were shocked that you just now caught on to us. We got lazy and careless I suppose, but all in all we've had 19 letters published in your pathetic column since the fall semester of 1992 began.

Listen here, I suggest you apologize for your rude response to our last letter, the roommate masturbator. Face it, bitch, you need us three. If it wasn't for us your column would suck. The only time we hear people talking about your column is when one of "our letters" is in it. Do you really think people read your column for your smart-ass and witty responses? Get a life! People don't care about your opinion, they only want to hear about people's bizarre problems. Not your shallow, simple-minded, absolutely feminist responses.

So now that that is out of the way, here's the truth. As long as we continue to "grace" your column with our true journalistic creativeness, you'll continue to have a reading audience. Otherwise, your column ain't shit!

Cordially Yours,
The Three Amigos

P.S. If you don't print this letter you're truly a gutless voice who hides behind a literary pseudonym and denies the truth.

DEAR JON WEFALD, JIM COFFMAN AND BOB KRAUSE (JUST KIDDING),

Simple pleasures for simple minds.

You devious sophomoric masterminds of deception really pulled one over on me this time! I'll bet readers are as flabbergasted as I am. You zany pranksters you.

Actually, you three deserve congratulations for your determination and dedication. This Saturday night, while you're all sitting around your dorm room playing Nintendo or watching USA's Up All Night, take a break and give high fives all around.

DEAR CASSANDRA,

Although I am embarrassed of what I'm about to write to you I have no other solution but to ask for advice from you.

I can't seem to get sex off my mind. It is getting so bad that I even have sexual fantasies for a professor of mine. My friends say I have a problem and need counseling, but I just enjoy sex and that's not a problem, is it?

I only have sex with two and sometimes three men a week, but I always have safe sex and the guys are regulars. Am I OK?

Sincerely,
Sex Addict

DEAR SEX ADDICT,

You should control your sex life, your sex life shouldn't control you.

How often and with whom you have sex is up to you. People vary in their sexual drives and appetites. Make sure you are gauging yours correctly. You say you are having safe sex — I certainly hope so. If you and your partners are happy with your sex life, then I don't see anything wrong. But please, be careful.

If you feel sex is beginning to control your life then perhaps you should seek counseling.

approved to explore the notion of incorporating Student Governing Association. The committee will have five members, plus a chair. Students' Attorney Dianne Urban shall be an ex-officio member.

This committee will consider the effect of incorporation on other Regents' institutions and other incorporated student organizations throughout the country.

Held for a second reading in next week's agenda is the recommendation for an amendment to rules concerning consumption of alcohol at KSU Stadium.

If passed, this resolution would recommend that the Administration amend its alcohol and cereal malt beverage policy to allow the consumption of alcohol before K-State home football games in the southeast corner of the stadium's east parking lot.

Approved by unanimous decision was a resolution that forms an elections committee. The nine students were approved as the SGA Elections Committee.

AIDS Quilt brings message to Topeka sheds new light on the AIDS crisis and solutions to it.

"For me, it's been an awakening of a visual experience of awareness," she said.

That is what the Quilt's visit to Topeka is all about, said Mistee Leighty, media coordinator for the event.

"The main thing we want is awareness," Leighty said. "People think diseases like AIDS don't happen in Topeka, Kansas."

To break that stereotype down, Leighty said she and others spent over 6 months to make sure the Names Project AIDS Memorial Quilt would get to Topeka.

"It's like giving birth," she said. "But, you know, it's something I would do all over again."

Over 500 middle-school students are scheduled to participate in AIDS awareness classes today, Leighty said. She said she believes that kind of education is key to solving the AIDS epidemic.

"I have a 2-1/2-year-old daughter," she said. "If my working on this project can do anything to educate people or change one person in the future to where my daughter can benefit from it, it's been well worth the time."

For Pam Becker, any future solution or cure for AIDS is going to come too late.

Becker lost her brother, Mark Gregg, to the disease on March 24, 1991, at the age of 36.

Dressed in the completely white uniform all volunteers wear, Becker silently waited for the first unfurling of her brothers panel.

"Mother and I made the panel as a labor of love," she said. "We begin working on it at Christmas time."

Becker said the grieving process still isn't over for her, but as she and her mother made the quilt, they gained a network of support.

"All the people we went to quilting bees with, we started meeting people who had family members or friends with AIDS or who were HIV infected," she said. "We've made a lot of lasting friendships as a result."

But nothing will bring her brother back.

"Letting it go has turned out to be a very difficult thing to do," she said.

AIDS QUILT PROJECT

Quilt display times:

Today	9 a.m. - 7 p.m.
Panel Presentations	7 - 10 p.m.
Saturday	9 a.m. - 10 p.m.
Sunday	10 a.m. - 4 p.m.
Closing Ceremonies	4 p.m.

Education Seminars (AIDS 101) will review four areas:

1. Overview of how HIV differs from AIDS
2. Routes of transmission
3. HIV Disease progression
4. Prevention including condom demonstration (when appropriate)

For education seminar times and place, contact a Topeka Red Cross member. All seminars are taught by Red Cross certified AIDS educators.

Sawyer Brown brings down the house

JULIE CORBIN
Collegian

Sawyer Brown is known for its high energy concerts, and Saturday night's performance at Bramlage Coliseum was no exception.

As the lights came up and music started, the fans went wild. Lead singer Mark Miller rocked the crowd with his trademark dancing and craziness. His bright yellow jacket ordained with sequins, black Wranglers and elaborately decorated knee-high red boots looked more like something you would expect from Elton John. But there was no doubt Sawyer Brown was in town, and the band was ready to party.

Suzy Bogguss signs an autograph for Jeanette Surratt, Topeka, backstage after opening for Sawyer Brown.

After playing upbeat songs such as "Betty's Being Bad" and "Trouble on the Run," the band slowed it down for a few ballads. Before the audience knew it, they were back on their feet with "Some Girls Do," but to their dismay, the band stopped, and Miller announced, "Do you think we'd play this song this early in the show?"

As the show continued, every fan had a chance at fun, heartache, tears or old memories, song after song. Miller dedicated "Cafe on the Corner" to the American farmer, which brought a rousing response from the crowd.

The song tells the story of farmers losing their farms and having to go to work in the city.

"It's always fun to play at colleges. We were college students just the other day. Well, not really, but God, it feels like just the other day," said Jim Scholten, Sawyer Brown's bass guitar player, in an interview after the show.

"It's just fun to come back and do shows like this."

After a standing ovation from a coliseum full of restless fans, Sawyer Brown came back for an encore. Miller, adorned in his John Deere cap, came out shaking his head and smiling. The band regrouped and started with "The Walk," and finished what they started earlier in "Some Girls Do." The fans ended the show with an a cappella chorus of the song.

Opening acts Suzy Bogguss and Restless Heart did their part to get the crowd going.

Bogguss opened the concert with "Someday Soon" and presented an excellent rendition of Chris LeDoux's "Cadillac Cowboy." Even as a fairly new act, Bogguss already knows how to please the crowd.

"She put together a pretty good show. Since she wasn't the main attraction, she was kind of limited on how much she could do," Tim Grable, junior in agronomy, said. "It would look bad if she was better than the main act. I'd like to see her in concert by herself — I think she'd put on a great show."

Bogguss rocked the crowd with songs from both her previous albums and her new CD "Voices in the Wind." Removing her jacket and donning a white waitress apron, she transformed the coliseum into a 24-hour cafe as she flirted with the sax player in "Eat at Joe's." The blues-style song complemented her silky smooth voice as she played it up for the crowd.

"Just a job I had in another life," she laughed afterwards.

Bogguss finished with her trademark hat, singing "Outbound Plane" to a sea of fans who did not want to see her go.

Although fans wanted more of Bogguss as she left, they were sure they wanted her back when Restless Heart took the stage. Unlike the quality of their albums, the band's stage show is lacking.

Whether intentional or accidental, the music consistently overpowered the singers, and the band must have forgotten they were playing for a college crowd of country fans.

The best part of the performance was when John Dittrich, the band's drummer, told the story of Greg Jennings' run-in with a woman at the motel.

While fighting with the candy machine, his hand slipped off the lever, and Jennings elbowed a passing woman in the breast.

"Miss, if your heart is as soft as your breast, you will forgive me," he said.

"Sir," the lady replied, "If the rest of your body is a hard as your elbow, I'm in room 218."

Beauty, brains displayed

Amy Hiett, Miss Manhattan, and Deanna Nichols, Miss K-State, take their walk and wave to the crowd after being announced as the new title-holders Saturday night in Manhattan High School Auditorium. This is the first year the title was split and given to two women.

Deanna Nichols and Amy Hiett were named Miss K-State and Miss Manhattan Saturday night, but both said they gained more than a title from the competition.

"I gained a lot of self esteem and self confidence," Nichols, senior in social work, said. "I also improved on my interviewing skills and poise."

The pageant encourages women to form their ideas on current issues and places an emphasis on the fine arts, said Hiett, senior in business management and psychology.

"It's not a beauty pageant," she said.

Nancy O'Kane, executive director of the pageant, has been involved in the Miss America pageant system since 1969. Winners of local pageants like this one will moved on to the Miss Kansas pageant. The winner there will compete for Miss America.

"I sincerely believe in the program," O'Kane said. "I wouldn't have donated so many years of my life to it if I didn't."

Hiett and Nichols will compete in Miss Kansas June 7-12 in Pratt, O'Kane said.

"Their biggest competition will be each other," she said.

A lot of people get the different pageants confused, O'Kane said.

Miss America was founded in 1921 and has become the largest scholarship foundation in the world for young women, she said. Each year, the Miss America program awards more than $10 million, she said.

The Miss USA pageant was formed in the early 1950s by the swimsuit manufacturer Catalina, O'Kane said.

"It saddens me that people don't know the distinction," Hiett said.

Hiett, a self-described tomboy, said she would not have become involved with the pageant if it were just based on beauty rather than scholarship.

It offers women the opportunity to take their platform issues to the public, Hiett said.

Nichols said the pageant has taught her to always work to be the best she can be.

The girls in the audience who admire the contestants are a source of flattery and confidence to her, Nichols said.

"I would like to tell all those little girls to always reach for their dreams and

▶STRAIN TO GIVE HIS FIRST FACULTY ARTIST PERFORMANCE

Jim Strain, assistant professor of music, will demonstrate that percussion involves more than just drums at tonight's Faculty Artist Series performance.

"It's a pretty varied program," Strain said. "It runs the gamut of styles."

Strain has a theory of why some people do not frequently attend displays of musical talent.

"People shy away from recitals because they think the recital will be boring," he said.

The Faculty Artist Series is a tradition at K-State.

"(The performances) certainly contribute to cultural life on campus," Jennifer Edwards, assistant professor of music, said.

Tonight's performance is Strain's first at K-State since he joined the faculty in August 1992. He said he chose some of his favorite pieces because it is his first.

Strain will be assisted by William Wingfield, assistant instructor of music, on piano; Alfred Cochran, assistant professor of music, on saxophone; and Ben Fosse, freshman in music education, on tuba.

The performance begins at 8 p.m. in All Faiths Chapel. Admission is free.

KANSAS STATE COLLEGIAN
Seeking the Students

The purpose of a newspaper is to inform and to serve its readers.

At the Collegian, we are always looking for ways to better serve our readers and improve the content and quality of the newspaper.

To do this, we need your help. We need to know what concerns you, what you care about and what bothers you, both as a reader and a student. For many of you this is the only newspaper you read. This is all the more reason to let us know how we can better serve you.

Everyday, we get some idea of what you want through phone calls, angry letters and bizarre pleas to Cassandra. Although these help us, there are better ways to let us know what you want.

We know our phone lines are always open, and we know every letter to the editor is read and taken seriously. We know there is always someone in the newsroom with the time to hear your comments or leave a message for someone to talk to you about your concerns. Unfortunately, not all of our readers know that.

The Collegian is operated by students for students. This means everyone from the editor to reporters to the advertising staff are students. We are trying to juggle classes and extracurricular activities while working on the Collegian. We spend so much time in the newsroom and occasionally, in class, that we don't get out on campus to talk with you, the students, face-to-face.

This week we will be setting up tables in the Union, outside the stateroom, and in Derby and Kramer dining centers. We encourage everyone to stop by and let us know what concerns you about classes, campus, life in Manhattan or anything else that you want to talk about. We welcome feedback from everyone, both positive and negative.

Week to help students enhance job chances

LYNN ANDERSON

Arts and sciences majors will have help expanding job opportunities through the first Career Awareness Week, Feb. 22-26.

"The idea was discussed, and it's been into planning almost a year," said William Feyerharm, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and creator of Career Awareness Week.

"We were in need of a program such as those done in agriculture, engineering, business and others. They have career days that occur in the Union, and companies come in. We had talked about that prospect."

Balancing out those programs is what arts and sciences ambassadors, Feyerharm and the Career Planning and Placement Center hoped to offer students through Career Awareness Week.

"The first leg in dealing with the issue was asking ourselves 'What do arts and sciences students do after graduation?'" Feyerharm said. "A broad liberal arts degree opens up to all sorts of walks of life. There really are a variety of business opportunities. We hoped to highlight the usefulness of an arts and sciences degree."

Students in these majors seem to realize their dilemma.

"We're not directly qualified," Bill Lansdowne, junior in history, said. "Students in arts and sciences have to go out of their way to get a job, and it takes more on their part. I have to go out and market myself as a person who can adapt."

Giving direction to these students, the week is filled with many programs that feature guest speakers as well as members of the K-State faculty.

"We set up seminars and workshops and invited outside people or faculty and students to speak on life after college," Feyerharm said. "We wanted to address these issues through to give and take and lecture and interchange."

The Career Planning and Placement Center was a primary proponent in helping to collaborate the guest speakers for this week, Feyerharm said.

Pickers, grinners converge in Wichita

STORY BY SHAWN BRUCE

Audience turnout at 4th Annual Winter Bluegrass Festival disappointment to KBA

It was obvious there was something a little different about the conventioneers who had descended on the Wichita East Hotel.

Instead of briefcases full of insurance documents and schemes to get rich quick with no money down, they brought guitar and banjo cases. No one wore suits or fancy dresses — just blue jeans, hats and shirts straight out of the nearest western-style clothing store.

It was "pickin' and grinnin'" time as the Kansas Bluegrass Association brought its fourth annual Winter Bluegrass Festival to Wichita last Friday and Saturday. Those in attendance were treated to a wide array of bands, including the Manhattan area band Wheatland Express.

Plenty of jamming room was available in hotel meeting rooms, as well. Admittedly, the sight of bluegrass music being played under the glow of fluorescent lighting right across from a hotel gift shop seemed, well, a bit unorthodox.

But to those attending the Festival, it was not the setting. It was the feeling.

"In every stage, bluegrass is real," Mike McHugh, president of the KBA, said. "There's no smoke, no mirrors, no electronics. There ain't no place to hide."

Unfortunately, despite McHugh's words of wisdom, many people did find a way to hide. They just didn't show up.

Though no final figures were available, McHugh said attendance at the festival was way down from previous years. He said he had no idea why.

"Every one of these is a crapshoot," he said.

"You never know why people don't come. It's kind of like trying to predict the weather."

Because of low attendance at both this year's Winter Festival and other festivals the KBA helps sponsor, the budget of the organization takes a bath, financially speaking, McHugh said.

As a result, the KBA is now seeking funding from outside sources.

"Bluegrass is a recognized art," McHugh said.

"As such, we qualify for grants from Greyhound Charities and the Kansas Commission for the Arts. We're just starting to pursue that so we can upgrade the shows beyond what our customer base can support."

Back over in the jamming rooms, finance wasn't a big concern. Instead, five guitarists, two banjo players, three mandolin players, a fiddle player and a bass player were trying to agree on a key in which to play the classic bluegrass song "Sitting on Top of the World."

One of those guitarists, Wayne Graham of Perry, Okla., said that's just a part of bluegrass tradition.

"Bluegrass isn't really written down. It's passed on," he said.

"Everybody plays it their own way. That's what makes it fun."

Graham goes to as many bluegrass festivals as he can. He also brings his family.

"Bluegrass festivals are a thing I've always been able to do that with," he said. "Everybody's nice. You just have a good time."

For those looking for something real in an era of digital samples, electronic drums and electronically en-hanced vocals, a grizzled veteran and self-described "shade-tree picker" said he believes you just need to find a bluegrass festival. Anywhere. Anyhow.

"I like my music eye-to-eye and jaw-to-jaw," Bill Bonb of Wichita, said.

Bonb is a former president and charter member of the KBA and a veteran of festivals all over the United States.

"I want it the way it comes out of the instrument," he continued. " ... without any gingerbread or sound effects. That's what bluegrass is."

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Benefit now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

KSU left with a sour legacy

THE ISSUE

K-State has been left to take the punishment for the actions of its former track and field coach.

Former track and field coach John Capriotti owes this University an apology.

And for more reasons than one.

Capriotti's recent announcement that he paid Wildcat student athletes has put the current track and cross country programs in serious jeopardy. With the possibility of cut scholarships and exclusion from Big Eight competition, Capriotti has betrayed the very people he has been defending for so many years — the students.

This is a man who has called the Collegian on several occasions — screaming and cursing — upset that his programs have not been given enough coverage.

"It's not about me," he would say. "It's for the kids. I'm doing this for the kids."

From the surface, it appears that the only thing Capriotti has done for the kids is put their futures in question.

But the allegations concerning Capriotti go beyond paying athletes. He has been accused of scholarship stretching — allotting his athletes only a portion of the scholarship money they've been promised — and mind games.

And two female former distance runners said that Capriotti told them they'd be at their ideal weight when they stopped having their monthly periods.

Even though Capriotti, along with his hypocritical thinking and questionable standards, is now gone, it's nowhere near soon enough.

Capital! Punishment.

JOHN HAWKS

There are those who feel there is no place for the death penalty in a civilized society. I agree.

However, in a society that is "civilized," all the members thereof would behave civilly toward each other. There would be no crime, for all of the "civilized" citizens would obey all the laws of the society — those being reasonable laws enacted by the "civilized" government.

Thus far, there has been only one such "civilized" society among humans of the Earth. An ancient utopia, it arose millions of years ago. Our knowledge of its legal practices is limited, but our best information indicates that this society had no need of a government or of laws. Therefore, there was no crime. That is not to say that there were no tensions between free individuals. On the contrary, people of today would perhaps find our perfect society rather violent and unpredictable.

But there were well-established ways to deal with violence. Acts of violence were to be revenged in kind. Thus, each action had a reaction, and all acts received their due compensation. Murderers were killed.

With the rise of governments, new moral codes swept societies, and breaking the law became a sin.

But governments were institutions of the people, and they could not survive without addressing the safety of their citizens from violence. The old compensatory logic was adopted. "An eye for an eye" was the catch phrase of the time. Again, murderers were killed. Moreover, governmental apparatuses allowed true fitting of the punishment to the crime. Punishment became something of an art. Axe murderers got the axe. Torture and confession were an integral part of justice. Upon punishment, the criminal recognized his crime and repented of it.

In the "Age of Enlightenment," people dreamed of better ways to punish criminals. Too often, the laws of governments were abused or rewritten to cause punishment of those who held different opinions than the orthodox. Among thinkers, torture and punishment left the vogue.

Today, our justice system is the beneficiary of all of these trends. My premise is a bit wrong, of course — the first society was no more "civilized" than any of the rest, including ours. But in a way, it held the least illusions about justice. Today, we have confused the ideas of tolerance and justice. Using a punishment that is the same as the crime is not an irony. It is the way that society can firmly illustrate the horror of the original crime. The horror of violence and of crime is not something that should be locked away from our awareness in a prison. By using long periods of incarceration as our punishments, we have created an artificial separation between the crime and the punishment for the crime. In the past, the act and the punishment were viewed as one, and justice was apparent.

Today, instead of clearly demonstrating how uncivilized a crime against society is, we create a separate, privileged society inside our prisons, where all people are fed, housed and given opportunities for advancement equally. We have a situation in which, examining the cost of living, a prisoner often makes more from the state than a prison guard.

Today, the people of our society hunger for real justice. They cheer for criminals to receive the worst possible punishment, because they know that the horror of the act must be revenged by society in kind. If our society cannot find a way to control the horror, rather than seeding its spread, then we face a bleak future and a painful return to the violence of our predecessors.

We cannot delude ourselves into thinking that we are too "civilized" for the death penalty. Our civilization may, indeed, depend upon its use.

Free tickets will solve athletic woes

K-State's athletic department is flummoxed.

It is not seeing students turn up at basketball games. It is furrowing its brow about the tally of empty seats in Bramlage Coliseum. It is wondering why the struggles of basketball players are suddenly uninteresting to students.

It is looking for solutions.

Here is one. Forego tickets to all home basketball and football games.

There is no need for student tickets. Instead of tickets, small annoying pieces of paper, a student's admission ought to be his student ID.

You can call it free tickets, but it is not really free. Students are already paying $17 a semester to the athletic department. The amount is paid along with tuition and activity fees.

ED SKOOG

Something is wrong with the athletic fee.

When students are paying tuition, they are about to be reimbursed with professors, classroom space and a diploma. When they are paying the Student Publications Inc. fee, they are subscribing to the Collegian. The Lafene Health Center fee means health services. These are all producer-consumer relationships. Student-professor. Subscriber-newspaper publisher. Patient-doctor.

But with the $17 athletic fee there is no return, no relationship — neither a service nor a product.

Student fees should be for student services and products. The athletic fee is unjustified and should be withdrawn.

If, however, the student who is paying his athletic fees is actually buying tickets to all home football and basketball games, then some of the problems of the athletic fee would disappear.

This kind of athletic fee would solve the problems of the athletic department.

Nothing is ever going right for K-State athletics. It is always suffering, deconstructing.

The football team has first down, one yard away from the winning touchdown. Pride is swelling in the pacemaker chests of alumni. Students are sweating in the fall late-afternoon sun. Then the inevitable interception. Any team besides K-State wins.

Students are camping for basketball tickets. This is not tradition or esprit de corps. There will be booze. There will be rape.

Strange things happen when K-State plays Nebraska in Tokyo. Coins are falling from the sky on K-State opponents. Athletic directors quit or are fired. Track coaches throw money around. Nothing goes right.

Malaise, quagmire, dead end.

Few of us go to basketball games. They are not any fun and are too expensive besides. Give us the free admission we deserve and games become worthwhile.

Free tickets translate into fan support, parlay into a guaranteed crowd at ball games, into verifiable profits for the athletic department.

We become better sports at games, more responsible, less distracted.

With renewed spirit, we would treat Bill Snyder and Dana Altman less like aliens and more like coaches. We'd be able to keep good coaches like these for more than a few years.

Things would be going right.

At the present rate, K-State basketball will become outmoded, like Latin, ROTC and chaperones.

Free tickets are the only way to save it. And we deserve them.

Football and basketball games are a physical form of nostalgia, easily digested by alumni.

For nostalgia to become a cash donation to the University, the alumni need to feel that present students care as strongly about the major sports programs.

It is in the best interest of the University community for students to get in free to games as a matter of course.

Students need to play an important role in the department of athletics. We are responsible enough, and we pay enough money, that we ought to be heard.

There is a committee. It is the search committee for finding a new athletic director. It's full of administrators and influential alumni.

It should have significant representation from the students. Significant means at least three students on the team.

Student money does not come alone. It carries along a certain degree of student control. Them's the brakes.

Suit-wearing folk reading this should seriously consider this: 1) free tickets for a perhaps slightly higher athletic fee or 2) no athletic fee at all.

▶ PRELUDE TO A KISS

Piece resembled more an attack than review

Editor,

I am responding to the recent Collegian "review" of the KSU Theatre production of "Prelude to a Kiss," written by David-Michael Allen.

I have no objections to a negative evaluation of a KSU production, but this was not a review, it was an attack.

The title of the article was "Reviewer angered by misled Kiss cast." Actually, his anger was aimed toward the director, Kate Anderson. He indicated, because her interpretation of the play differed from his, that she was a bad teacher.

I would just like to point out that Kate Anderson has won the Outstanding Teaching Award for the College of Arts and Sciences, and the William L. Stamey Teaching Award. Her direction of the play "Any Day Wednesday" was selected for regional competition at the American College Theatre Festival in 1992.

Kate has served on several university committees to promote issues of women's rights. She teaches a very popular course entitled, "Women in Theatre," and several other acting and directing courses which are always filled to capacity.

At a time when the value of a good teacher is less and less appreciated at K-State, it is a shame for one of the college of arts and sciences' most highly honored teachers be denigrated in your paper by a graduate student in theater who has never participated in, or been associated with, any of her productions or classes.

Assistant professor/Theater

Review was right but 'review' was wrong

Editor,

I am writing in partial defense of David-Michael Allen's review of "Prelude to a Kiss." I think some of his critiques of the production were right on. I will disagree with Molly Weigel's opinion of Allen being too critical. I too saw "Prelude" on Friday night, and many of the things Allen wrote about, such as noisy set changes, disturbed me also. From the parts of the play I have read, it wasn't as magical or romantic as I thought it could have been.

However, Allen's personal slam on Kate Anderson and Scooter Nelson was unwarranted. I believe a strong idea in the theater and acting is to take risks. I am an architecture major, and in our program we are greatly encouraged to take risks. Here we can afford to take these risks because we are learning. This is education — learning from success and failure.

To say Kate Anderson is a bad teacher is very incorrect. I have seen results that prove how outstanding she can be. She merely took some risks in "Prelude" that, in my opinion, didn't quite work. Risks that, in turn, will educate her and the actors for future productions.

I have a hard time harboring any respect for a critic who isn't professionally critical. To sum this up, David-Michael, you were correct in your true critique, but as for the rest of your article, I can say this: In the words of Captain James Hook from "Peter Pan," "Bad form," David-Michael.

Interpretation of Freud all messed up

Editor,

Hawks — cute article, but if you are going to interpret anything according to Freud, you better get him straight first.

"Subconscious" is a common misnomer: it is the "UNconscious," which is not located "underneath [the] conscious [mind]." "Sub-" and "underneath" mislead us to imagine the unconscious to be subordinated to the conscious. Their relationship is not that of a hierarchy, but that of a binary opposition. Each is an entity in its own right.

Anybody studying literature and/or language should read up on Freud. Interpreting texts — of any sort — can be a lot of fun, especially when applying Freud's theories, but I feel one should be equally interested in doing so correctly. Freud's theories have been degraded by overuse, misuse and misunderstanding. Too bad you have decided to perpetuate the problem.

First half buries K-State in 77-64 loss

But Cats pleased with 2nd-half effort

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

LAWRENCE — Perhaps not all was lost over the weekend.

K-State fell for the third time in as many games with a 77-64 loss at the hands of the sixth-ranked Kansas Jayhawks Saturday in Lawrence. And the Cats — 15-7 overall and 5-5 in the conference — continue to fall in the Big Eight rankings.

But the common theme following the Cats' fourth loss in five games was a positive one. For the second half of K-State's eighth straight loss to Kansas, the Wildcat defense returned.

"Our team, I thought, battled back in the second half," Cat coach Dana Altman said. "We would have liked to stay a little closer in the first half, but we battled back."

Indeed, it was that first half that did the Wildcats in.

In that decisive opening half, K-State gave the Hawks back-door cuts, open layups and short jumpers. As a result, 11 of the Jayhawks' 16 first-half buckets were within nine feet, propelling Kansas to a 21-4 record and giving them a commanding lead in the Big Eight at 8-2.

"In the first half, Kansas was very sharp," Altman said. "But we gave some open shots that they just knocked down.

"I was so disappointed with the shots we gave up that it took a hard-playing second half to erase those memories," he said.

The Cats may have done that.

"We started getting back to what we were doing earlier that was getting us victories — playing defense," said center Deryl Cunningham, who tied a career-high 15 rebounds.

"We showed at times that we could shut them down and play defense. That's what we're trying to get back to."

What did K-State's defense do in the second half?

The Wildcats held Kansas to 41 percent shooting in the final 20 minutes, enabling the Cats to become the only Big Eight team to keep Kansas under the 50-percent mark twice this season.

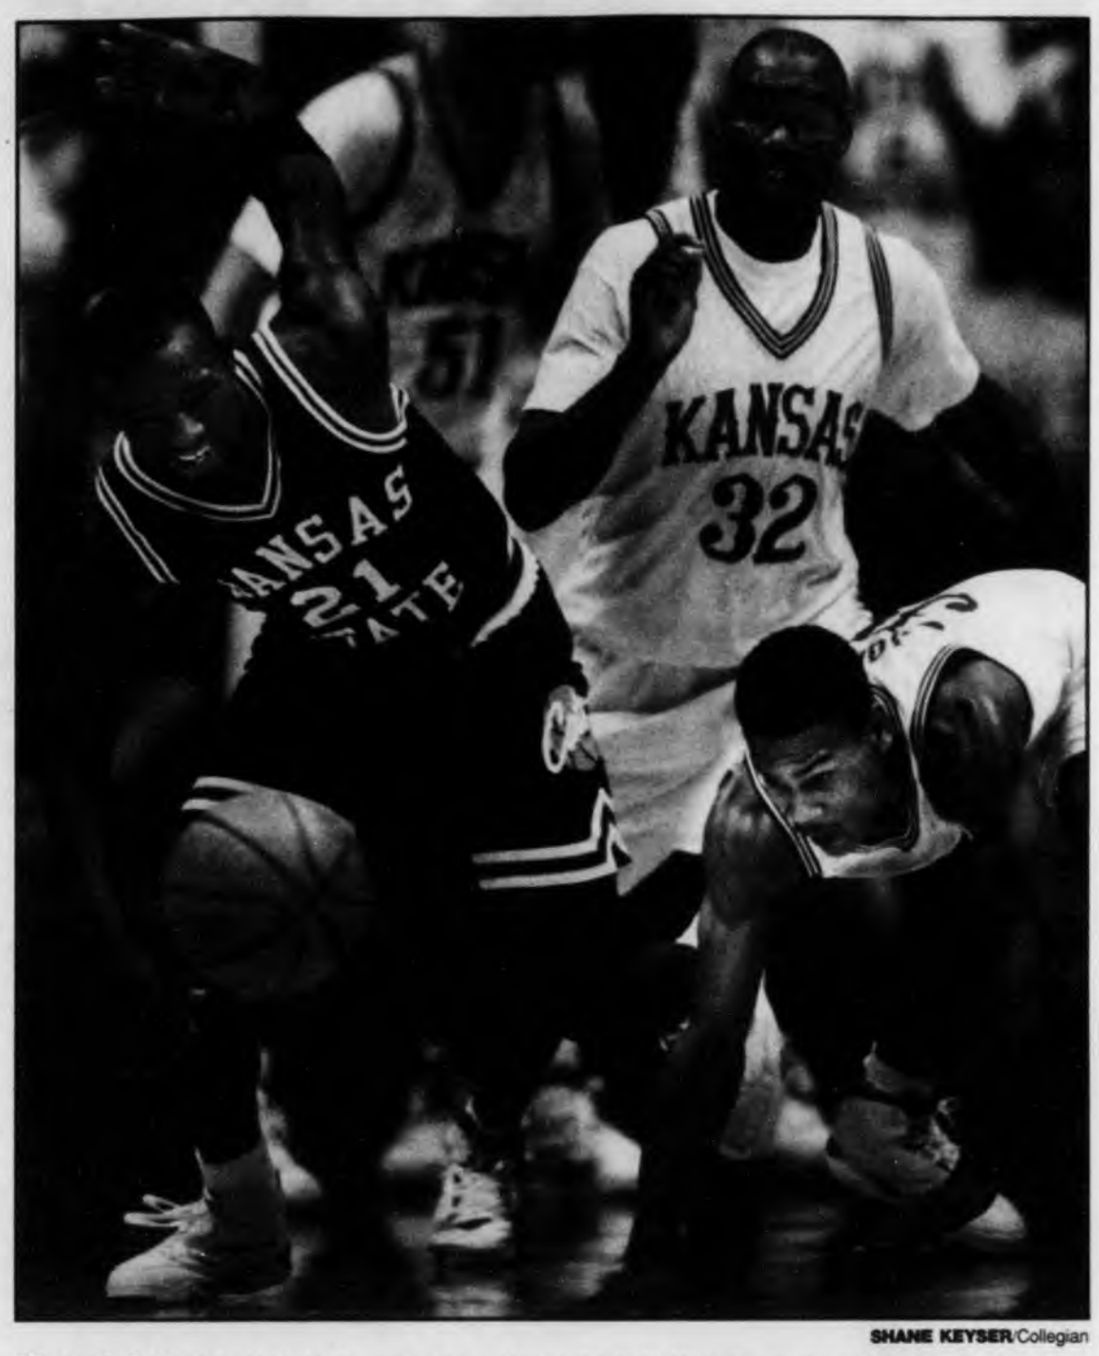
K-State outscored Kansas 36-34 in the second half and forced seven turnovers. For the game, K-State outrebounded the taller Jayhawks 35-31.

The defensive play was a much-needed effort after the Cats gave up 80 points or more in back-to-back losses to Nebraska and Colorado.

"In those games, we did not play hard at all," guard Anthony Beane said. "The fire kind of died a little. We weren't playing with a lot of emotion like we normally do.

"Against KU, the first half wasn't pretty. But in the second half, we kept fighting. We're getting the fire back."

Beane, who had a career-high 20 points, held Adonis Jordan to three. And Jordan's sole field goal came on a fast-break layup.



In the two games against Beane, Jordan — regarded as one of the best point guards in the nation — shot a combined four for 16 and scored just 15 points. Beane was 13 for 23 and scored a total of 34 points.

"I don't look at it like a one-on-one match," Beane said. "Adonis is a great player, but I just wanted to win — we weren't able to do that."

And although the Cats left the game with a rejuvenated defense, it wasn't enough.

"You could call it a moral victory, but I want to win — period," he said.

"I'm not into moral victories."

Wildcats lose 10-1 in season opener

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Wildcat baseball coach Mike Clark said before the season he expected every game on this season's schedule to be a challenge.

Sunday's road game against Arkansas was just that.

In the end, the Cats came away from their season opener with a 10-1 loss to the 3-0 Razorbacks.

The weekend series, which was originally slated to be a three-game set beginning Friday night, was cut to the single contest because of snow. Sunday's game was played with a seven-foot high mound of snow on the warning track in the outfield.

The Wildcat bats — almost as chilly as the 38-degree temperature — stroked just two hits in the nine-inning contest. K-State didn't get its first hit until the sixth inning, when senior Scott McFall doubled down the left-field line.

The only other K-State hit was an eighth-inning single by Jamey Stellino.

"It was like a team who hadn't put its spikes on for a month and a half against a team that had," Clark said.

Arkansas starting pitcher Brent Birch threw a no-hitter for five innings. Only three Cats reached base against Birch, and he struck out seven batters.

Meanwhile, Wildcat starter and last year's ace, junior Dan Driskill, was hit hard. He gave up nine runs and 10 hits in just 3 2/3 innings. Eight of the runs were earned.

But the Wildcats got strong relief from David Leonhart, a junior transfer. Leonhart pitched 4 1/3 innings and gave up just four hits and one earned run. He also recorded five strikeouts.

"David competed really hard today," Clark said. "And as the game wore on, we became more competitive."

K-State gets back into action Sunday against Missouri Western for the Cats' home opener. Game time is 1 p.m.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶WSU TOPS K-STATE NETTERS

The K-State tennis team dropped a close match, 5-4, to Wichita State in Manhattan Saturday.

The Wildcats split their singles matches with the Shockers but managed only one win in doubles play.

The Wildcats have little time to dwell on their loss to Wichita State. K-State will play host to South Alabama at 2:30 p.m. today at the Cottonwood Racquet Club, 3615 Claflin Road.

▶TRACK ENDS HOME SEASON

The K-State track and field squads finished their home schedule this weekend by playing host to the KSU Open.

Ed Broxterman won the high jump while Percell Gaskins placed second. Francis O'Neill won the men's mile, and Janet Magner won the women's mile. Also, Kathy Janicke won the women's triple jump.

Lady Cats fall in home finale

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

The Lady Cats fell short in their last two home games of the season.

K-State lost to Oklahoma, 87-65, on Friday, and to Oklahoma State, 63-53, Sunday.

The games put K-State at 9-15 overall and 1-12 in the Big Eight.

Lady Cat coach Susan Yow said the team had a good defensive effort against the Cowgirls — quite the opposite of what she said about Friday's loss to Oklahoma.

"I don't think we had any consistency," Yow said. "No hard-nose, work-ethic defense."

Even though the Lady Cats improved their field-goal percentage from 36.2 percent against Oklahoma to 39.1 against Oklahoma State, it was not enough to come up with a win.

And Yow said the inability to make the open shots was an important factor in the loss.

Indeed, the Lady Cats' premiere inside players — Shanele Stires, JoMoree Grattan and Leah Honeycutt — were a combined four for 22.

Despite the poor inside shooting, guard Kelly Moylan was six for 10 from the three-point line, tying her personal record as well as the school record for treys in a game.

Moylan finished her last home game with a game-high 20 points.

"If you told me she was going to shoot like that, I'd have thought we were going to win," Yow said.

Moylan attributes her good shooting to two things — a five-for-15 performance against Oklahoma on Friday and her Bramlage Coliseum finale.

"Coming off of a poor shooting game on Friday, I just wanted to leave Bramlage on a good note," she said.

Honeycutt said she was happy for Moylan.

"I'm glad at least one of us had a good game, but for me it was a disappointment," she said. Honeycutt was two for 10 from the field.

Cowgirl coach Dick Halterman said he gives credit to K-State's defense.

"I told our assistant coaches that I think K-State's style of defense is as good as anyone in the Big Eight," he said.

AIDS quilt, emotions on display in Topeka

STEPHANIE FUQUA
Collegian

We are proud of you. We love you. Most of all, we miss you.

Some panels were only sheets of muslin, with names spray-painted onto them. Others were elaborate, with pictures, teddy bears and poetry sewn into the fabric.

Kenny G. songs played over the intercom, and 20,000 names were read aloud, as almost 15,000 people visited the Names Project AIDS Memorial Quilt over the weekend. The quilt was displayed in Lee Arena at Washburn University in Topeka.

"I love you," and "I miss you" were common themes on the quilt panels. Some people took pictures of the panels, and others looked on with tears in their eyes.

"My first thought was 'why remember the names?'" Beverly of Topeka said. She declined to give her last name.

"But I realized if we don't remember the names, we won't remember them. If we forget them, then we forget people who have suffered.

"I have a cousin who died of AIDS. He shouldn't be forgotten," she said, as tears rolled down her cheeks.

Willie Age 2-1/2. Jamie Age 1-1/2.

Many panels included the names of children. One quilt said, "AIDS kills children too." It lay beside the panel bearing Ryan White's name. White was a hemophiliac who contracted the HIV virus through a blood transfusion. He made headlines when his school learned he had AIDS and refused to allow him to continue his education. White died in 1992.

"It makes me mad. It's senseless," Laura Hackett, Washburn student, said. "I'm a nursing student. So I look at it from that perspective. Hearing all the names of people who have died. This makes it real."

Music and Art were in my brother's heart and soul.

The quilt showed the toll AIDS has taken on the entertainment industry. Rock Hudson's panel was hanging on a wall. It only had a name and a painted picture of a rock.

Peter Allen was remembered with song titles and an album cover. Freddie Mercury's panel had a Queen logo and pictures of him in concert.

Far more than those, however, there were the artists who weren't famous. They were only remembered by a paint brush, a music note or a painting.

"I am awe-struck. I was there the first time they opened it in 1987," Brian Williams of Topeka said. "I've seen it before. I'm always afraid I'll find someone I knew."

I learned from you, I loved you, you are my friend.

There was also a panel of a person who was made famous only after he died.

The panel contained the names of Tim Barbo and Tom Schwarz. Tim's mother, Beverly Barbo of Lindsborg, wrote the book, "The Walking Wounded." She chronicled the life of Tim and his lover, Tom, and their deaths through AIDS. Barbo spent the last six months of Tim's life caring for him.

"It's beautiful," Martha Johnson of Topeka said. "It's marvelous how there are so many of them (panels), and each can be different. I don't have anyone here that's died of AIDS, but I think it's sad. I feel sorry for all the families."

Park walking acceptable cheap date

Others include videos, even burger joints

TRACY ARNOLD
Collegian

Borrow. Tell the truth. Use coupons.

These may not be the ten commandments of dating, but some students need cheaper alternatives to go on a date.

"Money is always a restriction when going on a date," Paul Bridges, sophomore in social work, said. "It costs five bucks to go to a movie, and dinner is even more expensive."

"If she don't mind, just take her to a burger joint. You can even take walks in the park on a date," he said.

Besides walking, students find other ways of cutting costs on dates. Heather Ballew, freshman in arts and sciences undecided, said she and her boyfriend share the cost.

"My boyfriend and I just go out one night a week or take turns paying," she said.

Ballew's boyfriend, Rick Hesseltine, junior in mechanical engineering technology, said truth is the best policy.

"My advice to someone would be to tell your date the truth. Explain to her that you're on a low-income date and make the best of it.

"If you're really worried about money, borrow it from parents, friends or sell back your books. You can borrow it from someone you don't see much so you have longer to pay it back," Hesseltine said. "What I do is use a lot of coupons," he said. "We also rent movies and go to the dollar movies."

Inexpensive dates, like starying home and dining by candlelight, are a must for students who do not have money to elaborate. Renting movies and walking in the park are popular things couples do.

Ballew agreed with using dollar movies and renting movies as alternatives to the more expensive dates.

"Almost every movie that comes to Manhattan eventually goes to the dollar theaters," she said.

The Campus and Varsity theaters only charge $1.50 to see a movie.

"About half the people who come here are on dates," said Stephanie Peterson, manager of the Campus and the Varsity theaters.

Renting videos not only helps cut down costs, but it also provides a more personal atmosphere.

"Video rental started as a lower-class form of entertainment. People without much money started rentals. This makes up most of the crowd who rents. Now the middle class is picking up videos because it's comfortable at home," Chris Strutt, owner of Prime Time Video, said. "It's also used in dating quite a bit. When you're dating someone for a while, it gets expensive."

Expense can also be cut down by coupons. Strutt said they have received a 2-percent return on coupons distributed.

"We weren't expecting it to be quite that high," he said.

The Aggieville Pizza Hut has gotten a response from coupons.

"Coupon returns were real high at the beginning of the semester. A lot of couples use these coupons," said Larissa Rivera, waitress and senior in modern languages and political science.

"You have to find ways to cut costs on dating," Bridges said. "Most of all you just have to be creative."

goals," she said.

With time, even the women who lost will realize their experience with the pageant will help them the rest of their lives, O'Kane said.

"I just know that there was some disappointment," O'Kane said. "I hope they all felt pride as well. Every experience can be positive and rewarding."

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Friends shouldn't be pushy about helping smokers quit

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I need some suggestions from you if you can give me some.

I have a friend I have known since kindergarten who needs some help. Her problem is that she has smoked since seventh grade. So it has been for seven years, and this year seems like it's been rough on her. She is now up to a pack a day. She says when she decides to have kids she will quit. I don't think she has the willpower to do this.

I have told her when she's ready to quit I would help her, because that is what friends are for. She appreciates my concern and helpfulness but said this would be something that she would have to do for herself.

Could you give me some suggestions on how she could quit, or maybe an address or an organization that could help her?

Thank you,
Concerned Friend

DEAR CONCERNED,

You sound like a good friend to have. Unfortunately, the decision to smoke and to quit smoking is a personal one. Friends and family usually have little luck in trying to help a smoker kick the nasty habit. I'd urge you not to nag her. If she wants to quit, she'll have to quit for herself.

If your friend is serious about quitting smoking there are many options available. The nicotine patch, pocket computers and gum are popular methods people use to curb their urge to light up. Some options, such as the nicotine patch, require that the smoker see a doctor before quitting. The best method I've found is not to light cigarettes. It sounds simple, but it works.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

ROTC instructor deemed outstanding

Award to be accepted in Washington, D. C.

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

Capt. Allen West, instructor for K-State ROTC and assistant professor of military science, recently received the Leo A. Codd Memorial Award for most outstanding senior ROTC instructor in the nation.

In early March, West and his wife, Angela, instructor in marketing at K-State, will fly to Washington, D.C., for the award presentation.

The award is given annually to one instructor who uses creativity, imagination and communication skills when instructing cadets.

West uses his creativity and imagination to replicate actual scenarios in an effort to make cadet training more realistic. He has sent cadets on squad missions to Tuttle Creek, and later this semester his students will carry out a night recovery mission to rescue a downed pilot.

WEST

Although these exercises may be more demanding than regular physical training exercises, he said the situations are more interesting to cadets. West said he tries to package the training in a way that will help cadets know their stuff.

Lt. Col. William Cook, professor of military science, said he has watched the transformation of cadet training become more realistic and demanding under West's guidance.

Evidence of West's progress came in the results of the cadets' performance at the advanced course. This 6-1/2-week course evaluates the leadership abilities of juniors in the ROTC program nationwide.

All of the cadets from K-State scored in the upper 50 percent of the camp, Cook said.

Greg Werkowitch, senior in modern languages and ROTC cadet, said West leads by example.

"He has not asked us to do anything that he is not willing to do himself," he said.

"West clearly stands out as better than average. Obviously, he's the best, or he would not have gotten this award," Werkowitch said.

West said he is happy about his award, but said he also realizes he must keep it in perspective.

"I was taught not to get complacent. I've got to keep pressing on because when I get my next duty station, this award is not going to mean anything to them. I'll have to start all over," West said.

From his stay at K-State, West said he wants cadets to learn pride and respect.

"But most of all I want them to know that being an officer is an honorable tradition, and it is something not everyone can do," he said.

He wants his students to feel a sense of accomplishment when they get their commission, West said.

Bill would increase state's liability in compact

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A Senate bill that would increase the state's liability in a five-state radioactive waste compact could face rough sledding because of uncertainty over locating a low-level waste dump.

Nebraska has declared it will not license a proposed site in Boyd County, near South Dakota. That has undoubtedly raised questions in the minds of some lawmakers as they consider the bill.

Kansas' four partners in the Central Interstate Low-Level Radioactive Waste Compact are Arkansas, Oklahoma, Louisiana and Nebraska. All have passed identical bills increasing their liability in the event of a mishap at the dump.

The Legislature considered the bill last year, and critics questioned why Kansas should increase its share of liability when state officials have little control over the site's management.

"I think it's something that at this point we need to do," said Sen. Don Sallee, R-Troy, chairman of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee, which is considering the bill.

The compact has selected Nebraska as the host state, and U.S. Ecology, the contractor, selected a site for the dump that includes part of wetlands in north-central Nebraska.

Nebraska Gov. Ben Nelson, who said the state would deny a dump license, has also filed a lawsuit to block construction of the disposal facility, citing intense local opposition.

So far, $44 million has been spent on the site, and not a spade of dirt has been turned. The total cost is projected at $122 million.

Federal law requires a state to be a member of a compact or develop its own waste-storage facilities. Kansas is currently sending low-level waste to a site in Barnwell, S.C.

JOB SEARCH

Clothes make the interviewee

LAURA HEIDE
Collegian

The interview is scheduled, and the resumé and data sheet are complete. Hair is washed, and nails are neatly filed. It is 30 minutes before the interview, and in a frantic state of mind you suddenly realize, "I have nothing to wear!"

Something this simple can be easily overlooked.

Marcia Schuley, assistant director of the Career Planning and Placement Center, said the question of what to wear is a common one.

"You should dress in something conservative," she said. "It doesn't have to be a navy blue suit.

"The students who come back the next year are not even wearing the blue suits because they are so tired of them. They hate them."

Schuley said pinstripes, small checks and tweeds look great.

"It could be a double-breasted suit, silk tie and a white shirt or a dress with a jacket and a discrete pin.

"Be distinctive by being different," she said. "However, we're not talking bright reds, purples or big plaids."

"There are two guides you should follow concerning what to wear," James Akin, director of the center, said. "First, your appearance should never be distracting."

Akin said not to wear big jewelry, an obnoxious tie or a loud color.

"Secondly, when in doubt, dress up a little higher than you think you may need rather than dressing down," he said.

A business wardrobe should be an investment.

"I think wardrobe is a really important thing to invest in," Schuley said. "You may need something for the interview and then go back for a sight visit. Have some mix-and-match pieces.

"It behooves you to visit an office of your profession," she said. "Go to information sessions to see what they are wearing. Do this before your interview season."

Schuley suggested not wearing something for the first time at the interview. Be sure you are comfortable in it.

"I've had people come in with price tags still hanging," she said. "People have something tailored, and it's not done on time. It blows them away, and they cancel the interview."

University files response to lawsuit

K-State responds to petition for judicial review, says sexual violence policy does not violate Constitution.

SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

K-State is claiming the University's policy prohibiting sexual violence is constitutional as written, and the University's actions against Mark Mazour, junior in architectural engineering, are not unreasonable, arbitrary or capricious.

In a three page answer to an amended petition for judicial review filed by Mazour on Jan. 15 in Riley County District Court, the University goes on to claim Mazour is not entitled to judicial review.

Mazour filed his petition after a University panel found he had violated the University's sexual violence policy during the fall 1992 semester. The ruling stemmed from an incident that occurred at the basketball ticket campout.

Although Mazour was arrested on charges of rape and sodomy, the Riley County prosecutors office declined to prosecute the case because of contradictory evidence and the fact that both parties had been drinking.

A four member panel was then convened by the University, per the sexual violence policy, and decided Mazour had violated the policy. That panel imposed sanctions on him that included performing 100 hours of community service and enrolling in a women's studies class during the spring 1993 semester.

After having an appeal denied by University president Jon Wefald, Mazour filed a lawsuit asking that the actions taken by the panel be set aside or modified, and that the policy be found unconstitutional.

Jennifer Kassebaum, University attorney, said, Mazour may not have the right to judicial review.

Kassebaum said according the Kansas Statute 77-617 that deals with the judicial review process, Mazour must have raised questions in his petition about K-State erroneously interpreting or applying the law and also about the University's authority to establish a sexual violence policy within K-State itself before he is entitled to judicial review.

Kassebaum said Mazour did not do so but said she did not want to venture a guess on whether the court would dismiss the suit based on that fact.

Mazour had no comment regarding the entire University response.

The University's response also said several parties named as defendants in the suit should be dismissed.

The petition filed by Mazour names Kansas State University, the Office of the President, the Office of the Dean of Student Life and the Panel acting under the University's policy prohibiting sexual violence as defendants.

Kansas statute specifically spells out that the petition should have been filed only against Kansas State University, Kassebaum said. She added that she was unsure why Greg Kieffer, Mazour's attorney, named the others as parties to the suit.

Kassebaum once again declined to venture a guess on whether or not the court would dismiss those parties. She said the judge can do anything he wants to do.

Kieffer did not return a telephone call asking for comment.

Mazour raised, among others, questions in his petition about bias on the part of Susan Scott, chairwoman of the panel, and also said he was not allowed to subpoena witnesses, and Kieffer was not allowed to address the panel or be present during the presentation of testimony or

Moving Van Goghs give final concert

Adios.

The Moving Van Goghs played its final show Saturday night, opening for Beyond Zebra at Rhythm & Brews.

Michael Leggs, bassist and singer, is leaving for Minneapolis at the end of the month. The other members of the band were surprised.

"The timing's bad, you know. Record companies are just beginning to look around this area," Brian Harris, guitarist for the band, said.

Harris, guitarist Mitchell Leggs and drummer Rich Suderman have spoken about continuing, tentatively under the tag Suffer Bus.

Around prom season in 1986, the opening band for the Pedal Jets failed to arrive at The Avalon, an old version of the upstairs portion of Snookie's.

Michael, Mitchell, Brian and then-drummer Dave Walker went down and asked if they could open for the now-defunct Kansas City band.

REVIEW

It turned out to be the Van Goghs' first show. They called themselves Ack! Ack! Ack! after the Minutemen song. and used the Pedal Jet's gear.

Their first show was upstairs, their last show was downstairs. Both as the opening act.

In between, they had five drummers, and made three tapes and a compact disc. They played hundreds of shows in Manhattan, Lawrence, Kansas City and other points midwest.

Other local bands have ceased to exist. Maple Eye, Dalai Lama, Cylon Raider, Ruth Is Ready, and Tuber all had considerable notoriety during their Manhattan existences. The Moving Van Goghs now join this roster.

The Van Goghs, however, have had a significant impact on surviving bands such as Bosom, Truck Stop Love and Roach Factory.

Here is the final song list from Saturday night as written down and taped to the stage: Cinders at the Station, Machines in the Garden, Summer Near Naples, Crybaby, Magic Lantern Show, Lightning Rod, D-Side, Black and White (not by Michael Jackson, but by the dBs), Mr. Greenjeans, Do you

Lafene will emphasize appointment format

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE
Collegian

Lafene Health Center will be emphasizing an all-appointment format, beginning in June, to provide clients with a choice of doctors and time of visits.

Larry Moeller, chief of staff and medical director at Lafene, said patients will be able to choose which doctor they want to see, and the date and time they wish to see that doctor.

He said same-day services will still be provided, but the intention is to distribute the work load more evenly.

"Part of the day will be same-day appointments," he said. "You don't have to plan your disease to get it taken care of."

Lannie Zweimiller, director of Lafene, said there will be no change from the present system.

"It is not a change, it is a greater emphasis on making appointments," he said.

He said the new emphasis is an attempt to better manage the flow of patients through Lafene's General Medical Clinic, and to minimize waiting time.

Students will benefit from shorter waits as well as being able to choose a particular physician who they are more comfortable with, Michael Burton, chairman of the Student Health Advisory Committee and junior in pre-med, said.

Burton agreed with Zweimiller that it is not a change, just a different emphasis.

"It's basically a more efficient use of time, not only for doctors but patients seeking care," Burton said.

Zweimiller said the decision to emphasize the all-appointment format was fully supported by the Student Health Advisory Committee after they discussed it for nearly a full semester.

After thorough background checks of health services at other institutions, including others in the Big Eight, the committee decided to accept the recommendation, Burton said.

"As a committee, we did our research, then felt it was a good recommendation," he said.

The all-appointment format is a common trend in most institutions and community clinics nowadays, Zweimiller said.

"It is the modus operandi now in university health centers," Moeller said.

Patients who request immediate attention will first be screened by a nurse, who will determine whether or not the particular patient requires immediate attention, he said.

"This will enhance care and deliver even more to K-State," he said.

Moeller said the staff will be split into small teams to enhance good communication and coordination, in order to make the new emphasis work efficiently.

"No system is perfect but we all feel that this is going to be definitely an improvement," he said.

On the average, about 300 to 375 patients visit Lafene each weekday during fall and spring semesters, he said. There have been as many as 500 a day.

Zweimiller said in the last two years, medical staff personnel have been added, but increased clientele has nullified the attempt.

"We cannot, and the student cannot, afford to continue adding expensive personnel as a resolution to the problem," he said. "If we can spread the numbers over the course of the whole day, we should see a decrease in the frequency of waiting times."

Moeller said the public will be made aware of K-State faculty salaries ranked lower than peers

DAVID OLSON
Collegian

The quality of education offered at K-State could soon begin to deteriorate.

A report released by Faculty Senate in December 1992 indicates that faculty salaries at K-State are considerably lower than those offered at its peer institutions.

University administrators said this could have a negative effect on the quality of education at K-State.

According to the annual report, which was prepared by the Faculty Affairs Subcommittee on Faculty Salaries and Fringe Benefits, the average salary of K-State's faculty is 16 percent lower than the average of its peer institutions.

The peer institutions — North Carolina State, Iowa State, Oklahoma State, Colorado State and Oregon State universities — were decided by the Kansas Board of Regents to be comparable to K-State in size and programs.

The report shows the average faculty salary at these universities is more than $48,400, while at K-State the average is about $41,500. K-State's salaries rank last out of the six, and an increase of more than 25 percent would be needed to match the highest average salary.

The report also indicates K-State's salaries have ranked last in the Big Eight for the last seven years.

Provost James Coffman said this gap is due to the fact K-State is budgeted at only 80 percent of its peers.

"To put things is perspective," Coffman said, "At K-State this 20-percent gap amounts to about $25 million for the instructional budget alone."

President Jon Wefald said the salary gap is not a new development.

"It has evolved over a long period of time," Wefald said. "The state of Kansas has not provided enough funding for faculty salaries in Kansas as our peer states have."

Wefald said this presents two problems. One is that the salary deficit makes it more difficult to recruit quality faculty. It also, however, makes it difficult to retain excellent faculty who are already at K-State, he said.

Coffman said there is already evidence of these problems.

While the Senate study found a 16-percent gap in salaries, the regents' figure is closer to 10 percent. Coffman said this is because the regents' numbers were adjusted according to the ranks of the faculty members, while the Senate used the average of all faculty.

The reason for the difference, Coffman said, is K-State has fewer associate professors and full professors than its peers.

The report lists seven recommendations for consideration by Gov. Joan Finney and the Kansas Legislature. In addition to increased funding for salaries, the Senate has also requested better funding for retirement benefits and an improved health-care policy.

Coffman said the Legislature is suggesting a 2.5-percent increase in salaries, but he is concerned that it will pass the increase, only to implement across-the-board budget cuts later in the session. He said this is what has happened three out of the last four years.

Albert Hamscher, professor of history, said he believes the salary gap has already caused a loss of quality faculty.

"In the last five years, I know of three members of the history department who left primarily because of pay," he said. "In my opinion, two of them were among the best we had."

Siren installed atop Durland, King halls replaces whistle

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

The whistle is out, and the sirens are in.

John Lambert, director of public safety on campus, said the campus tornado whistle that has been blowing at 10:20 a.m. the first Monday of every month will soon be obsolete.

Sirens were installed on Durland and King halls and were tested for the first time in February, he said.

"Those are the official ones, the whistle isn't official," Lambert said.

The National Weather Service recommends the sirens be tested at least once a month, and K-State has been doing that with the whistle for more than 20 years, he said.

The switch occurred because people complained they could not hear the whistle, Lambert said.

The siren installation was a cooperative effort between K-State and Riley County, said Monty Wedel, Riley County Planning and Special Projects manager.

"We provided the sirens, and they provided the work," he said.

The whistle, located at the power plant, was operated by the University. The sirens will be controlled by Riley County along with other tornado sirens around the community, Wedel said.

Pat Collins, Riley County Emergency Preparedness coordinator, said the sirens will extend the range of audibility.

"These should have a mile radius," he said.

The sirens are equipped with dual tone, and they rotate to extend their range, unlike the whistle, Collins said.

He said a short minute-long blast of the sirens means a test, but if the sirens run for three minutes that signals an emergency.

Students were in mind when the time frame of the monthly sirens was set up.

"Originally we wanted to make people aware," Collins said.

A transition time when students would be switching classes was chosen so they would hear it, he said.

Several students are still puzzled as to what the sirens mean.

"No one paid much attention, but you knew everyone heard it," said Amy Hulsing, sophomore in arts and sciences undecided. "I had no clue."

Kristen McGrath, freshman in elementary education, said it reminded her of the tornado sirens at home, but she wasn't sure what the sirens on campus meant.

Loss of an art landscape

Photos by Vincent P. LaVergne
Story by Star Hildenbrand

LEFT: A K-State student walks past the white 20-foot fork sculpture near King Hall while going to classes Monday afternoon. More than 20 years old, this statue, along with other artwork around campus, is as old as many students at K-State.

BOTTOM: Alone in the winter, the concrete fountain outside of Farrell Library casts a hard shadow from the midday sun. During warmer weather, students often study by the fountain between classes.

Like ghost stories about the Purple Masque Theatre, rumors surrounding K-State's outdoor artwork will float around campus indefinitely.

Most of the artwork is more than 20 years old, and as a result the artistic intentions have often been forgotten.

"Most of the artwork on campus does not have any symbolic meaning," Gary Woodward, associate professor of art, said.

Others disagree.

"The artwork probably has symbolism, but not in the way that you might think," Rex Replogle, associate professor of art, said.

"The artist may have had some symbolism in mind, but it could be a symbol that no one else is aware of."

Although it is not immediately obvious, much of K-State's outdoor artwork was built around the same time, using money provided by grants.

"Between the summers of 1969 to 1971, K-State conducted a project that was an art-in-situation workshop, which was designed to give students in art and landscape architecture hands-on experience," said Jessica Reichman, curator of K-State's Marianna Kistler Beach Museum of Art.

K-State received more than $19,000 in grants for the Educational Facility Laboratory of the Ford Foundation to help build a series of environmental artwork projects.

In addition, the University agreed to match Ford's grant for at least one of the three years.

This money provided the funds for art and architecture students to build their designs on campus during the summers and still receive academic credit.

"Many of the projects that were done during these years aren't even around any more," Replogle said.

Remaining projects include the log bench near Danforth Chapel, a 20-foot white, plastic, laminated fork near King Hall, the five cast concrete brick mosaics near Farrell Library, and the ceramic frieze above Lafene Health Center.

There is also a 19-ton, concrete and stainless steel structure between Seaton Hall and Holtz Hall, a relief frieze on the main entryway of Umberger Hall, a concrete fountain at Farrell Library, and the wood and metal artwork on the northwest corner of Willard Hall, said Richmond.

The other artwork was accidentally damaged or demolished for campus expansion.

"Some of the artwork that no longer exists includes the decorative painting on campus benches, a big mural on the side of a building which was visible from Claflin, banners in certain halls, and a photo mural in the Union, which became food-splattered," Replogle said.

If grants had not been provided, much of K-State's art landscaping would not exist. The idea to solicit the grants from the Ford Foundation was the brainchild of a local Manhattan artist.

"Charles Clements was the artist who got the grant set up," Replogle said.

"He conceived the idea and worked with it the first two years before leaving Manhattan."

Art and architecture students created designs during the regular school year. During the first several weeks of the summer, final selections were made by a jury of seven or eight people, including the president of the university.

"I enjoyed working with the project. During the first year we had a big group of students and faculty who were involved," Replogle said.

"By the third year, we had a little less interest so we had a smaller group. We actually had access to more money than we had students to build the projects.

"I only did it the last year, but I had a nice time."

Pageants set wrong standard

THE ISSUE

Pageants have dropped the word "beauty" from their titles but still judge on sexist criteria.

WE SUGGEST

Pageants would do well to reward contestants for their non-physical attributes.

With spotlights off, the tuxedos returned and the Miss USA, Miss K-State and Miss Manhattan tiaras resting on newly chosen heads, the validity of such pageants still escapes us.

We won't trifle with the argument that such events are degrading to women, for the contestants participate of their own free wills.

What is to be questioned is the purpose and criteria of entry into the pageants.

The supposed purposes range from "encouraging women to form ideas on current issues" to the building of poise.

Is our societal and educational system so stagnant that we must depend on pageants to help women form ideas on current issues?

Throw away the stereotype that all pageant contestants are bouncy and dumb. Most are highly intelligent, highly motivated women who often possess the long-admired quality of physical beauty.

Contestants and organizers have gone to pains to stress that these extravaganzas are not "beauty" pageants, but "scholarship" pageants.

That doesn't explain why there's a swimsuit competition. Also, we know that "poise" can be achieved through on-stage interviewing, but someone must refresh us as to why wearing evening gowns during this event is crucial to the process.

To use physical beauty, highlighted beneath the cut of an evening gown or swimsuit, as a criteria for judging one person against another is beyond reprehensible — it's insulting.

Keep the pageants, but dump the sexist categories that keep them from being truly respected.

LIVING THE LIFE

The popularity of the residence halls appears to be waning. The impending rate increase of 9.8 percent and the end to free laundry benefits have, I fear, encouraged many students to reject dorm life, a tragic mistake. Thus, I hope to chronicle the tragedy of such a decision and demonstrate the joys and benefits of dorm life.

The first night I slept in Haymaker Hall the rumblings of heavy construction above my bed roused me from my slumber at two o'clock in the morning. I went upstairs and knocked on the door hoping the image of a tired young man, hair discombobulated, eyes heavy, clad in briefs, would assemble sympathy in the hearts of the men building a loft above my bed. It did not.

JOHN HART

I went to back to bed, and for the first of many times that year, I envisioned myself repeatedly driving a long sword through my ceiling.

Early in my dorm experience, I learned that on the weekends, when the custodians take a break, it was wise to avoid the back stairs where the various casualties of the party scene often left an indelible mark.

I also learned the lyrics to every Garth Brooks hit, whether I wanted to or not, and was frequently reminded of them early in the morning or late at night.

Yet perhaps the most vivid memory I have of my dorm experience was the morning I almost collapsed in the shower because my body, which was stricken with a (partially dorm-induced) severe case of mono with hepatitis, couldn't adapt to the change in temperature.

Despite all of the trials I endured in Haymaker Hall, I would regard my dorm experience as one of the best times of my life. To record the positive aspects of a dorm experience, I knew I had to return to the hall I had not entered since my freshman year.

This last Sunday night I decided to pay a visit to two friends who live on the ninth floor of Haymaker. Trey Hock, freshman in biology, and Brent Jackson, freshman in English, history and theater, both attended Pembroke Hill, a private school in Kansas City. Trey and Brent demonstrated a mastery of the hospitality arts. As I relaxed in their luxurious brown vintage Haymaker chair and sipped a cup of rich, freshly ground English caramel coffee, Trey and Brent shared the pain, agony, joy and excitement of their dorm experiences.

"It teaches you tolerance. You get to meet a lot of people you wouldn't meet normally, or want to be around. You're limited if you don't do it," Hock said.

Dorm life is truly a celebration of diversity. The best part of dorm life are the relationships that are built.

"We've met computer hackers, trekkies, bull-riders, lacrosse players and a there's even a guy on the floor who got me into coin collecting," Jackson said.

"Interacting with people makes you understand what can and can't be said and what lines can and can't be crossed in terms of social interaction," Hock said.

"We've learned how lonely people can be," Jackson said. "Like guys looking at Ford with binoculars."

All freshman should not only want to live in the dorms, but be required to do so. Living in the dorms is not about feeling good or being comfortable, but becoming integrated into the college environment and learning how to relate to people.

Not living in the dorms for at least one year will violate the integrity of your college experience. The dorms cultivate character.

I won't deny an increase in the residence hall rental fees could be a burden for some prospective dorm residents, but the benefits of spending a year in the dorms will far outweigh the costs.

The business about paying for laundry services is a lame excuse for not living in the dorms. Any reasonable freshman would take his laundry home to mom.

Living in the dorms also adds excitement to many of life's more mundane activities.

"The dorms make going anywhere such a pleasure," Hock proclaimed.

Standards between cultures not relative

Editor,

Unless I am mistaken, John Hart, "moral relativism" has not yet trampled over your objective standards. If my memory serves correctly, there are things called laws that keep people from murdering each other and smoking in the K-State Union. The basis of law is that if regulations are not followed, harm (as defined by the culture) could come to people. If undue harm comes to someone because of laws, they are repealed. By this reasoning, the morality behind laws serves to provide for self-protection only and is independent of religion, as the Constitution declares it should be. Most people would not debate whether rape and child abuse are actions to be tolerated.

I seem to get the feeling that if you had your way, our legal codes would be of quite a different style. This assumed attitude I tolerate, though, because, akin to driving a monster truck or listening to pop music, it is not against the law.

Secondly, you state the evil Humanists wrongly teach "truth and standards are relative to culture." Unless all cultures today are identical, standards are relative to culture. They are not, however, relative between cultures. It is for this reason things such as public nudity and the use of mind-altering substances, accepted by some cultures, are not allowed here. If I remember correctly, Army personnel were quite unhappy with some of the restrictions put upon them by the Saudis during the Gulf War.

The only thing you have said that makes any logical sense is that the proper question should be "Whose values are going to be imposed on society?" The answer is unfortunate but obvious, the majority's. If the citizens of the United States wanted a fundamental Christian set of laws that was fair to as many as possible, we would have them.

New student service designed to inform

Editor,

I write to clarify information published in the Collegian article of Feb. 17, titled "Typically, students change majors." We appreciate the reporter's interest in academic/career issues, but regret the misrepresentation of programs.

The Academic and Career Information Center (ACIC), a new student service at K-State, has been created to enhance the expansion of career counseling services/career planning assistance, which has been offered through the Career Planning & Placement Center and University Counseling Services. The ACIC, located Holton Hall, Room 14, not the Holtz Hall basement as stated in the article, is designed to provide in a single location:

1) Programs and services to assist students with the career planning process;

2) State-of-the-art career information resources;

3) Assistance at critical points in students' academic careers (i.e. new students, undecided students, academically displaced students, students changing majors, etc.);

4) Assistance in the preparation of K-State students to enter the job market.

The ACIC's professional staff strives to enable students to make better informed decisions concerning selection (or changing) of his/her academic major and development of longer-term career plans.

ACIC Coordinator

Muslims fast for holy month of Ramadhan

Editor,

Muslims all over the world are observing fasting during the holy month of Ramadhan. Fasting is one of the five pillars of Islam and was prescribed to Muslims in the second year after the migration from MAkka to Medinah. The tradition of prophet Muhammad (PBUH) is full of statements emphasizing the importance of this pillar. When Muslims fast, they abstain from eating, drinking or sexual intercourse from dawn to dusk every day during the whole month of Ramadhan. They are also requested not to talk badly with or about anybody at all times, especially while fasting.

I would like to ask you to imagine yourself not drinking or eating for 16 hours for no reason at all. Can you do it? Would you do it?

When Muslims fast, they do so as a result of their sincere love and devotion to Allah. Fasting is something that does not appear on the person — nobody can see it or interfere with it. So, this worship is totally between the individual and his Lord.

Fasting, as described above, is a total change in daily life. This, of course, will teach you to adapt to any environment you are forced to live in. It is also an effective lesson in applied moderation and will-power. It helps man discipline his passionate desires and place himself above physical temptations so he will control his physical desires instead of being controlled by them. Definitely, there is no better way to cultivate a sound conscience in man.

▶ RESPONSE

Women's interest in the outdoors is high

Editor,

Ron Lackey's Feb. 10 column was wrong, dead wrong, about women's interests in the outdoors. As a hunter education instructor for the last 12 years, I have seen hundreds of young women take the hunter education course. They always do much better on the exams than their male companions. They leave the course with a high interest and enthusiasm for hunting. If they lose this 99 percent of the time, as Lackey says, then the blame rests on those who took them out the first few times.

The desire to pursue animals, whether to hunt, fish, trap or just see and photograph, is natural in humans. It does not depend on gender. If there is no interest in the outdoors, it is very likely that no one has taken the time to kindle the interest in hunting, fishing or wildlife observation. How many parents give their daughters rods and reels, shotguns or a guide to birds for their birthdays and follow these gifts up with instruction on their use? Do we really encourage young women to have an interest in the outdoors? All too often, the answers to these questions are not enough and we do not.

Several of my most enjoyable hunts this year were with women. I have seen these women walk up and down flint hills, crawl on their hands and knees, wade across streams, get stuck in shin-deep mud and even deeper snow. In spite of these difficulties, I do not remember hearing them complain. I distinctly remember that they enjoyed these experiences because they still anticipated success just around the bend or over the hill.

Outdoor sports enthusiasts need to actively recruit women and kids from single-parent families and introduce them to our sports. The future of recreational hunting and fishing may depend on how many women and kids are encouraged to hunt or fish, by those who are willing to be a thoughtful mentor. By what you said in your column, maybe you are not yet ready to make these introductions.

▶ PRELUDE TO A KISS

Review ended up murky and ludicrous

Editor,

What is all this nonsense about "students benefiting from the experience of these adult leaders" from David-Michael Allen's "review" of "Prelude to a Kiss?" What exactly is higher education, or any education, about, for that matter? It seems to me a ludicrous "supposition" for such an astute and knowledgable reviewer to have to bother to state.

I am unclear about what exactly Allen's review is trying to say. Did he not like the production? Did he find it, perhaps, less than satisfactory? Was he displeased? All, I suppose (if I were to make suppositions on a regular basis) are possible. However, I'm not really too terribly clear on how he came to those particular conclusions.

Oh, I do recall his stance on moving objects onto the stage during Peter's monologues, and the fact that he called the set design anything but "intimate and unobtrusive," but I'm still really not sure about the details or the processes of his rhetoric, which I believe to be a fundamental responsibility of a reviewer.

I do understand a review is an opinion, fortunately, of only one person. I do not, however, think a reviewer has the right to simply strike out and make accusations which have no support or relevance.

As for your blatant bludgeoning of Kate Anderson, I can only see that entire statement as ludicrous and unacceptable. Kate is a brilliant and talented director and instructor, held in high regard by her students, her cast and her colleagues. I found the review to be rude, hateful and vindictive, none of which I believe is a responsibility, or even a right, of a reviewer.

Criticism is criticism. So you didn't like the play. Say so. Everyone can deal with it. But to lash out with such "anger," well, quite frankly, it's just unacceptable. Completely.

THEATER

Children party, howl with '101 Dalmations' characters

MARK JONES
Collegian

The McCain Children's Committee was host to "Dalmation Sensation: 101 Ways to Have Fun," Sunday.

The children's party was in McCain prior to the production of the 101 Dalmations by the Arvada Children's Theater Company.

This was the fifth party sponsored by the committee. More than 175 children attended the sold out production.

"Education is part of our goal. We research what the production will be, and we try to build around that. Every favor, every game ... everything is keyed off what the program is," Sally Anderson, McCain Children's Committee chairwoman, said.

Party-goers were greeted with artwork by local grade-school students and the musical talents of Keith Wright, Manhattan, dressed as Roger from the book, playing the piano.

Children attending the party participated in various activities while characters from the book wandered around the party.

One of the activities for older children was "Where's the spot?" a game to find objects such as leashes, dog houses, balls and bones on a page overflowing with dalmation pups.

"They're killing it," Todd Lakin, sophomore in industrial engineering, said.

"I had the answer sheet supplied, or I couldn't have done it."

Pongo bingo, was also played. It is similar to bingo, except the children covered pictures of the story's characters instead of numbers.

The game helped the children familiarize themselves with the characters before seeing the play, Jennifer Rindt, senior in agribusiness, said.

Another activity was dog walk.

"We walked on dog prints when the music was on, and it stopped. They drew a number, if somebody was on it, they chose between a bracelet and balloon," Frank Weeks, a Wamego 6-year-old, said.

McCain was decorated to reflect the dalmations in the production following the party.

These decorations included helium balloons anchored by bags of dog food, and a concrete stair-well was transformed by pawprints made by local grade-school students and illuminated with black lights.

Children at the party also took on the look of dogs as each name tag was complimented with an authentic individually numbered, bone-shaped dog tag with the name of the event and date engraved.

The musical adaptation of the 101 Dalmations presented by the Arvada Children's Theater was based on Dodie Smith's 1956 book "The 101 Dalmations," about the adventures of a dalmation couple.

The London dalmation couple, Pongo and Missis, return home from a walk and discover their fifteen pups were kidnapped.

The evil Cruella De Vil had sent her pathetic goons Jasper and Saul to kidnap the pups and stash them outside London so she can turn their hides into a lavish coat.

Pongo and Missis turn to the twilight bark, a communication network of London area dogs, to spread word of their missing pups and ask for help in finding them.

In Arvada's style of participatory theater, the children in the audience were asked to help howl the message on the twilight bark.

Three quick barks, a long sustained howl and two short gruffs from the audience sent word of the kidnapping and a plea for help across London.

The message was heard by the Colonel, an aging senile sheep dog, who knew the whereabouts of the pups and offered his assistance.

When Pongo and Missis met up with The Colonel and his side-kick cat, Lt. Tibbs, to rescue the pups, they discover a total of 99 kidnapped dalmations to rescue.

The pups were snuck out of the house as their captors, Jasper and Saul, watched television.

When the goons discover the pups are missing, the audience became the fleeing dogs on their escape home to London.

Children in the audience rolled in imaginary soot to camouflage themselves and ducked in their seats to prevent being seen by Jasper and Saul.

When the group climbed into a truck to ride back to London, the audience bounced in their seats and swayed side to side as the truck traveled the rough road and made sharp turns.

Cruella and her goons followed the truck in her car, but the chase ended when the car wrecked. Cruella's fur coat was ruined in the wreck, and she was greeted with spontaneous boo's from the audience when she sought sympathy from Jasper and Saul.

With De Vil no longer in pursuit of the truck, Pongo and Missis took the pups back home to London.

Tubbs: 'I am still confident that we will win'

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

For Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs, it's time to get even.

Following the Sooners' 62-61 loss at the hands of the unranked Wildcats on Feb. 3, Tubbs said K-State was not as good a team as his Oklahoma squad.

"We're going to beat the hell out of them in Norman," he said immediately after the game.

"That's just Billy being Billy," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "He needed something to stir everything up a little bit, and that he did."

Tubbs will have a chance to back up his statement at 7 tonight at the Lloyd Noble Center in Norman, Okla., when the 15-7 Cats take on the 17-8 Sooners.

"That was not a good statement on my part," Tubbs said Monday afternoon. "That was probably something I should have passed on. I let my emotions take over."

And in doing so, Tubbs may very well have given the Wildcats something to hang on their locker room bulletin board.

"I'm pretty sure everyone will have it on the back of their minds," point guard Anthony Beane said. "We're going to try to — no, we will — use that as motivation to get us pumped up and make us want to fight even more."

And center Deryl Cunningham said the motivational factor might be the key ingredient for the Cats to snap their three-game losing streak.

"I hope so," he said. "I really don't care what it takes. We need some games to get into the tournament. We can't give up.

"I just want to get it done, period."

For that to happen, the Cats need to play the pressure defense they applied to Kansas in the second half of Saturday's loss, Askia Jones said.

"You could say we have a little incentive," he said. "But we're just going to have to play our game — defense and rebounding — to do the things we need to do to win."

But K-State hasn't seen that type of defense for a full game since a 68-66 win over Iowa State nearly two weeks ago. In their last three games, the Cats are giving up an average of 81.7 points a game. And this is a team that, for much of the season, led the conference in scoring defense.

When the Wildcats limit their opponents to less than 70 points, K-State is 13-1.

The Cats started the season by limiting nine of their first 11 opponents to 70 points or less. K-State was 9-0 in those games.

"I'm disappointed that we haven't been able to sustain the defensive intensity," Altman said.

And tonight, K-State faces the Big Eight's most-explosive offense.

The Sooners average a league-high 83 points a game in conference play

But Oklahoma is playing without Bryan Sallier, who is out with pneumonia. Sallier, who is second in the Big Eight with 9.7 rebounds a game, did not play in Oklahoma's win over Kansas.

"Bryan is very, very weak," Tubbs said. "I don't see him playing in the next two weeks."

The Wildcats, for the second game in a row, will meet a team coming off an upset loss. K-State played Kansas after the Sooners beat them in Lawrence and promptly fell 77-64.

The Sooners, after downing the No. 6 Jayhawks on Kansas' own floor, traveled to Boulder, Colo., where they were nine-point favorites.

Colorado pulled off an 84-80 upset.

That brings the two teams to tonight's contest. Each team is saddled with a 5-5 record and trying to break the three-team logjam for fourth place in the conference — a logjam that would be broken open if the Sooner team upholds Tubbs' promise.

And Tubbs said that is not necessarily asking for much.

"I just have to ask our team to rise to the occasion to back me up," he said.

"But I am still confident that we will win."

Cat netters fall 8-1 to South Alabama

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Suzanne Sim returns a shot during her doubles match against South Alabama's Helena Nilsson and Natasha Villarroel. Sim, along with her partner Linda Neethling, lost the match in straight sets, 6-3, 6-4. Sim posted the Wildcats' only win of the match, a 6-3, 6-2 victory over Nilsson.

But Bietau says he's happy with match

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The Wildcat tennis team dropped its fourth match of the season Monday night, losing eight matches and winning only one against South Alabama at the Cottonwood Racquet Club.

"For an 8-1 match, it really was hard-fought," Wildcat coach Steve Bietau said. "We had some real battles out there.

"They were better, and they just outplayed us. This is the best team we've played so far."

The sole Wildcat win came from the No. 3 singles slot. Suzanne Sim posted a 6-3, 6-2 win over South Alabama's Helen Nilsson.

"I played really good," Sim said. "I think I keep getting better."

Sim, who has won four of her five matches this season, also said the match against South Alabama was the best the Wildcats have played — despite the 8-1 loss.

"The match was a lot closer than the score," she said. "They're the toughest match we've played."

In No. 1 singles, Susana Labrador lost a close match to Estelle Gevers, 7-5, 6-4. And Linda Neethling, after winning the first set of her match against Joanne Crothers 6-2, lost the next two and won just five games.

"We had some real battles, and they pulled out all the close matches," Bietau said. "At most positions, we fought harder than we have all year."

K-State lost all three doubles matches without tallying a single win. But it was South Alabama playing well — not K-State playing poorly — that resulted in the final numbers, Sim said.

"The girls we played were really tough," said Sim, who, along with Neethling, lost her doubles match, 6-3, 6-4.

The Wildcats now head for the road for their next seven matches, starting with Utah on Friday and Brigham Young on Saturday.

"That's a big step up from South Alabama," Bietau said.

But he also said he is confident his team isn't too concerned about losing four of five matches.

"The players still have a long way to go," he said. "They recall what they accomplished and don't dwell on the score."

Loyola offers break from Big 8 schedule

Lady Cats hope for one more win before KU game

COLLEGIAN STAFF

The 9-15 Lady Cats will try to squeeze out another non-conference victory tonight, this time against the Loyola Ramblers. The 7 p.m. game will be played at Alumni Gymnasium in Chicago.

K-State started the season with seven wins in its first nine games, all against teams outside of the Big Eight. But the Lady Cats have managed just a 67-43 win against Iowa State in the conference, and K-State is 1-12 in league play.

Loyola, a member of the Midwestern Collegiate Conference, is 5-16 and saddled in an eight-game losing streak. Neither team has scored more than 77 points in any game this season.

Loyola is shooting just 42 percent from the field for the season, including a 29-percent mark from three-point range. The Ramblers are being outrebounded by more than six boards a game and turning the ball over 22 times each time out.

For K-State, the game could be a warm-up for Sunday's contest against intrastate rival Kansas.

"I think we'll have a good trip and come back to our arch-rivals," Lady Cat coach Susan Yow said.

The Lady Cats beat the Ramblers in the only previous meeting for the two squads, a 69-56 victory last season in Bramlage Coliseum.

The Rambler team is led by Stacy Kundinger, Ginny Hamill and Lori Esser. Kudinger leads the team in scoring with an average of 13.4 points per game and Hamill averages 10.1 points. Esser is averaging four assists and 8.7 points per game.

The three juniors combine for 52 percent of Loyola's scoring.

The University of Illinois-Chicago is the only common opponent for the two teams this season. Both teams were defeated by the Flames — K-State lost 61-60, and Loyola dropped a 65-57 decision.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶CYCLONES UPSET NO. 7 HAWKS

AMES, Iowa (AP) — Fred Hoiberg and Justus Thigpen each made a free throw in the final 25 seconds, and Hoiberg made a key defensive play as Iowa State upset No. 7 Kansas, 75-71, Monday night.

Iowa State remained the only unbeaten team in the Big Eight at home at 14-0.

Iowa State (16-8 overall, 6-5 Big Eight) rallied from a six-point deficit in the second half to win its 15th straight at Hilton Coliseum.

Kansas (21-5, 8-3) played without starting center Eric Pauley, who injured his left knee in pregame warmups and got only one point in the second half from Adonis Jordan, their No. 2 scorer with a 12-point average.

But Kansas stayed in the game behind reserve center Greg Ostertag's 16 points.

Thigpen led Iowa State with 17 points, Loren Meyer scored 15 and Hoiberg had 14. Walters had 12 points for KU, 10 in the second half.

K-State ticket prices fit conference norm

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Are K-State basketball ticket prices too high?

While the Wildcat athletic department has received criticism for raising basketball ticket prices during the last five years, a comparison of prices around the Big Eight suggests the K-State tickets still fit well within the conference average.

Season tickets for students currently run $75 or $95 for a combination football/basketball ticket. Faculty-staff season passes cost $152, while public prices run from $190 to $215.

K-State Associate Athletic Director Jack Key said while tickets to see the Wildcats may appear high — especially to students — the Cat student body gets one of the best deals in the conference.

"I think us and KU probably offer the best student seating of anyone in the Big Eight," he said. "I came from OU, and their student section only has seats on one side of mid-court.

"That's one of the things you'll notice when you go around the Big Eight is that, for instance, Colorado's student section is in the end-zone, where our students get mid-court seats."

Admission to Colorado's basketball games are free for students.

However, all students are charged a $33 athletic fee each semester. Football tickets are available to students for an additional $10.

"Our number may look high in comparison," Key said. "But schools like Colorado have a $66 student fee. As a result, they can offer free tickets.

"Still, they only drew 3,100 to their game with us, and I bet there weren't 500 students there," Key said.

The toughest basketball ticket in the conference is at Oklahoma State.

With only 6,381 seats available, Gallagher-Iba Arena has the smallest capacity in the Big Eight and offers the Big Eight's most expensive single-game and season ticket prices.

Frank Ross, assistant ticket manager at Oklahoma State, said a winning team, high demand and a small arena have combined for expensive prices.

"We have a small house, and people want to see a good product," he said. "Gallagher-Iba is not like Bramlage, where you have lots of room. We've also had a good non-conference schedule, which helped our demand."

Ross said while ticket prices have been relatively stable in the past, they went up $9 across the board this season.

For Oklahoma State students, the only option is to buy an all-sports ticket — good for football, wrestling and other school sports — for $54. The student may then decide to purchase a season basketball ticket for an additional $110.

Kansas' situation is similar to that of the Cowboys. Allen Fieldhouse has been sold out since 1986, and 850 people are on the waiting list for public season tickets.

"In 1989, we played Arizona State at home with 20-below zero temperatures, and we had 15,800 show up for the game," Bernie Kish, director of ticket operations, said.

"The fans were practically hanging from the rafters. That's typical of the support we've had at the University of Kansas."

Kish said that while every KU student who has requested a ticket has gotten one up to now, things may change in the future.

"Forty-five percent of our tickets go to students," he said. "That's about 7,000 seats, but the demand is so high we may interview of any witness except Mazour himself.

The University's response denies that accusation, but does not go into specific charges raised by Mazour. Kassebaum said that's standard procedure for any legal response.

According to Kansas law, the response must simply answer the petitioner's allegations by either denying them, admitting them or saying that they don't know, Kassebaum said.

She said the complete transcripts of the panel's actions will be looked at by the judge for specific evidence related to Mazour's claims.

In the response, the University also asks the court to award monetary compensation from Mazour for costs associated with preparing the transcript and time devoted to the case. Kassebaum said she could not yet put a dollar figure on what that amount might be.

Kassebaum refused to comment on whether or not there were attempts being made to settle the case out of court.

Linda Fox, deputy court clerk, said the case will be heard by Riley County District Judge Harlan Graham. No hearing date has yet been set, she said.

Lafene to increase emphasis on appointments

the new emphasis through advertisements in the Collegian, signs posted in Lafene, and direct communication between staff and patients.

He said there also will be signs in Lafene, telling people where to go for what services, and someone known as a "greeter" who will give advice and guidance to clients.

"We are working alongside the Health Education Department to publicize the new emphasis," Burton said.

Burton said he is encouraging students to provide feedback about the change to the Student Health Advisory Committee.

"We are here for students, and we are here to accept any positive communication that we can get from students and staff," he said.

The emphasis is not in response to any financial crisis at Lafene, Zweimiller said.

"There is none, we are in good shape financially," he said. "The bottom line is service to students."

It is important that students know that the staff understands there are times people need to be seen by a doctor right away, he said.

"We'll definitely accommodate these," Zweimiller said.

Despite increases, basketball ticket prices fit conference norms have to go to a lottery system to determine who gets them."

One university that has already had to go to a lottery system for student tickets is Missouri.

Six-thousand tickets are designated for students, but the demand is so high, seats are determined each fall in a lottery.

The Tigers recorded their 50th-straight sellout at Hearnes Center in Saturday's game with Nebraska, a new school record.

Iowa State's Hilton Coliseum has also sold out on a season-ticket basis this year.

"Last year's team wasn't expected to do that well, and we ended up in the NCAA tournament," said Sandy Sisson, an official at the Cyclone ticket office. "That's sparked a lot of interest in the team this year."

Three-thousand student tickets were purchased at $47, the second-lowest price in the Big Eight.

However, a student season ticket is sold in a 13-game package, which does not include five home games during the winter break.

On the lower ends of the ticket price spectrum are Oklahoma and Nebraska. Single-game tickets run from $8 to $12, and their season ticket prices are also among the Big Eight's cheapest.

Nebraska's ticket prices have gone up in each of the last two years, but assistant ticket manager Cindy Bell said they have still sold out all of their Big Eight contests.

"I can count on my hands the number of complaints we've had," Bell said. "As long as we win, no one cares. That's the biggest criteria."

Oklahoma has not had the same experience. Although the Sooners spent much of the pre-conference season ranked in the Top 25, walk-up and season ticket sales have lagged.

"It's been tough to call this year," John Walker, athletic ticket manager, said. "We did not sell out the Missouri game, and I can't tell you why.

"Weather and TV have been factors, but sometimes we predicted a big crowd and didn't get it."

Despite concerns about K-State's attendance, Key said K-State's ticket prices will go up $1 for football and basketball tickets next season, but not on student season passes.

"It was my understanding since the student fee came into effect that students would not pay more than $5 a game for basketball and $7 a game for football.

"That was written into the student legislation as part of the student fee."

K-State students currently pay $4.70 for a game with a basketball season ticket, $4.17 with a combination ticket.

While student season ticket sales were up 495 over last year to 2,670, the athletic department only sold 895 faculty-staff tickets, when they had expected to sell around 1,200.

The primary factor in the drop in faculty-staff was a 30- percent price increase. Prices for faculty/staff season tickets went up $22 over last season, but Carol Adolph, athletic ticket manager, said the prices changed for reasons beyond K-State's control.

"The IRS ruled that the discount for faculty-staff tickets has to be 80 percent of what the public is paying," Adolph said.

"Their prices went up a lot this year because of that IRS ruling."

FINANCE

Students' budgets suffer from credit cards, loans

SHANNON WILSON
Collegian

The sharp silver blades of the scissors might as well have been stabbed through your heart. One cut had not affected your livelihood so dramatically since birth.

If you cannot control credit card expenditures, you may have to force yourself to destroy your cards, said Ann Coulson, assistant professor of human development and family studies.

If you want to keep your cards, other steps can be taken to lessen the temptation of overspending, Coulson said. A student will not be as tempted to use credit cards if accessibility is reduced.

"Leave it at home," Coulson said.

Students often devise ingenious ways of creating obstacles to curb spending, Coulson said. One student put her card in a Ziploc bag full of water and froze it, Coulson said.

The magnetic strip of a credit card cannot be microwaved, so students have to wait for the ice to melt, Coulson said. The melting period gives the student time to evaluate the purchase, she said.

"If that's the only way students can control it, then they should freeze their cards," Coulson said.

Lack of control is why Michael Oldfather, associate professor of economics, said students have no business getting involved with credit cards.

"There's no reason they should have one," Oldfather said. "They really have put a lot of students in trouble."

Credit cards are not the only financial mistake students make, Oldfather said. Students also make unnecessary purchases when it comes to insurance, he said.

"There are hardly any students who should have life insurance," Oldfather said. "A lot of students are misled by insurance agents."

A modest savings program is more effective, Oldfather said.

Credit life insurance is another form of insurance students do not need, Oldfather said.

"It's often attached to a car loan," he said.

When students buy a car, the dealer will encourage the student to buy credit life insurance, which will pay off the loan if the student dies, he said.

"You don't have to buy it," Oldfather said. "It's not cheap, and it is largely unnecessary."

Another commonly made mistake is large amounts of student loans, Oldfather said.

"I would borrow as little as possible," he said.

David Hula, instructor in economics, said loans can come back to haunt a student.

"Don't borrow money to go to college unless you're absolutely forced into it," he said.

Students should get a job to pay for expenses rather than depend completely on loans, Hula said.

"It means more pain in your college years but less pain down the road," he said. "A lot of students take out more than they should."

Hula said the key is budgeting for necessities first.

"Any time you have a funding constraint, you have to (budget)," he said.

Students should track income and expenditures for a few months before trying to devise a budget, Coulson said.

"Students should say, 'I absolutely have to spend such-and-such amount for necessities,'" Hula said.

Anything left over becomes the proverbial discretionary income, he said. Everybody has to budget — some just have a larger base with which to work.

Hula said students usually get into trouble when they reverse the order of creating their budget.

"Budget for necessities first, no matter how painful it is," Hula said. "If you reverse the order, you'll find yourself in a huge financial bind."

The two keys to financial success in college are to take out as little student-loan debt as possible and budget for necessities first, Hula said.

"Those are the Hula hypotheses."

Although most students do not have money to invest, Coulson said students should start saving.

"I say that, and my students roll their eyes," she said. "Even if you're only saving a few dollars a month, you're starting a good habit."

Richard Baier, junior in political science and economics, has not fallen into any of the traps most of his peers have, he said.

"I had one semester where I was barely able to pay for necessities," Baier said. "Since that semester, I've become much more fiscally conservative. I also have to credit my parents for my financial responsibility.

"There are plenty of things I'd like to buy, but nothing that's financially feasible," he said. "I don't let myself fall into that trap — I've heard too many horror stories."

ESSENTIALS

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

He should have listened to his heart, not to his friends

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a very big problem with my ex-girlfriend.

Back in September, I started going out with the sister of my best friend (or so I thought). Everything was really cool. I even asked my best friend's permission to see her sister. She said yes. Later, I found out that my best friend changed her mind.

She hated the idea of me going out with her little sister. I found this out and confronted my best friend, but she told me not to break up with her sister.

Pretty soon, the two sisters started arguing about me. My best friend was saying a lot of bad things about me to my girlfriend and to my other friends. I took it upon myself to try to break up with this girl so I would not make my other friends angry but still make my best friend happy.

I have always regretted that decision.

Finally, after about two months of separation, I couldn't live with myself. I was always told to "follow my heart," so, I did. I finally realized that I truly did love this girl. So one day, at a party, I asked her to come back to me. I told her I did not care what other people thought about us, and I told her I loved her. We went back together and lasted about a month.

She was the one who backed out this time, but I know it was her sister's doing. She gave me the old time favorite line "I need some time alone."

Anyway, I really do love this girl, and I even think she is the love of my life. She has brought so much happiness and meaning to my life, but my ex-best friend will always be there to stab me in the back. What should I do?

Lost Love

DEAR LOST,

I don't blame your ex-girlfriend for wanting time alone. First, you broke up with her just to make your friends happy. Then she broke up with you. Her sister probably isn't helping matters, either. She probably sees the damage that dating you has done to your friendship with her sister and is reluctant to start over.

I would talk to your ex-best friend and your ex-girlfriend separately. If your feelings are as strong as you say for this woman, tell her. Explain to her that you listened to others when you should have been listening to your heart. If she wants to take you back, she will. If not, don't pressure her.

Have a talk with your ex-best friend. Being ex-best friends with someone requires a lot of energy. It's a silly thing to do. Explain to her that you have feelings for her sister and would like to date her again. But also explain that you value her friendship and would like to make up.

Your best bet is to be honest and sincere. Realize, however, that being honest and sincere may not bring back your girlfriend or your best friend.

Next time remember it's usually best not to date the siblings of best friends.

Professor creates fat-free popcorn

Aramouni gets grant, makes snack for diabetics

JENNIFER SWANSON
Collegian

There's good news for popcorn lovers.

A K-State researcher has developed a light caramel popcorn with half the calories of regular popcorn and no fat.

Fadi Aramouni, assistant professor of foods and nutrition, started working on the new caramel popcorn in 1990 and received a patent for it in December 1992.

Twin Valley Develop-mental Services, a nonprofit organization in Greenleaf, requested that Aramouni develop a sugar-free product for diabetics, he said.

He said he decided to make it fat-free as well.

Aramouni's popcorn can be considered fat-free because it has less than one-half gram of fat.

"We air pop the corn to avoid oil and used a fat and sugar substitute in the topping," Aramouni said.

DAVID MAYES/Collegian

Fadi Aramouni, assistant professor of foods and nutrition, received a patent for a sugar- and fat-free caramel popcorn in December 1992.

Taking the fat and sugar out of the popcorn caused some production problems for Aramouni.

"When you take out the fat, it is hard to get a good coating," he said.

There was also the problem of finding a sugar substitute that would give the same bulk and preservative effect, he said.

Aramouni said he had trouble getting the popcorn to look right and taste right at the same time.

"You want a product that tastes good first, and you also want it to look good," he said.

The project was funded through Kansas Value-Added Center with a $3,000 grant they receive from the Kansas Lottery, said Susan Goetsch, assistant director of the Kansas Value-Added Center.

The funds they receive from the lottery are earmarked for economic development, Goetsch said, and are used to provide assistance for people who are working on new projects in the food, feed, fuel and industrial areas.

"We provide grants and research funds to projects like this if we think they show potential to compete well in the market place," Goetsch said.

After Aramouni received his grant, it took him two years to get the product on the market.

One year was spent on development and feasibility testing, and the next year was spent on taste and shelf-life testing, he said.

"The popcorn has a shelf-life of more than six months," Aramouni said.

Twin Valley Developmental Services has received the first license to produce and sell the popcorn, which is currently on the market.

Since the recent Kansas City Star article, four Kansas companies, one in Missouri, one in Oklahoma and one national chain company have asked for samples and a license.

The Kansas Research Foundation checks the patent and licensing.

ITI houses global trade information

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

The K-State International Trade Institute can assist students, faculty and businesses in their international research.

The institute, located in the KSU Alumni Association building, has information about every country that has an embassy in Washington, D.C., Neelima Gogumalla, associate director of the institute, said.

On the last count they took, more than a year ago, there was information on 152 countries, she said. Since then many more countries have sent them information.

The institute's library provides a variety of information.

"We try to get as many resources in the library as possible, and we try not to duplicate it with other sources that are available at Farrell and the other regents schools," Gogumalla said.

The international trade directories at the institute give the address, phone and fax number of any company in the world. Gogumalla said background on the countries is updated on a monthly basis. She said the institute also receives numerous journals and publications.

"You can get a glimpse of everything that is going on all around the world," Pam Fulmer, administrative officer at the institute, said.

Background information on the countries included things like marketing plans, government legislation, trade needs and tariff regulations, she said. People who will be doing business or traveling overseas can also get information about cultural differences.

If the institute does not have what someone is looking for, they can contact the embassies and get it for them, she said.

"We have good contacts with the embassies, so, when we need something we let them know, and they get it to us," Gogumalla said.

The institute's three goals are education, research and service, she said.

"We do practical research for companies. We give them help dealing with exporting and find leads for them," Gogumalla said.

All the research and exporting advice is free. Academic research is also done at the institute. Right now a survey is being done on all Latin American multinational companies to see what kind of marketing system they have.

Fulmer said one of the most important aspects of the institute's service is the annual advertising magazine.

"It is for companies in the Midwest to get their names out among everyone else in the world and to try to get their business," Fulmer said.

Twenty-thousand copies of the six-language, full-color magazine are sent to more than 180 countries. Companies pay for the ads, but Gogumalla said it is only enough to break even.

The institute also works with the United States Agency for International Development. They sponsor business people from lesser developed counties to come to K-State for year-long non-degree programs.

K-State is the only regents school with a trade institute, she said.

Van Goghs give final concert think?, Wintermind, Taller than High, Antebellum, A.C.I.D., and God Bless You Anyway.

The Van Goghs played their version of Simon and Garfunkel's "Mrs. Robinson" Saturday night. They also played it when they opened for the Lemonheads in Kansas City two years ago. The Lemonheads recently released a version of the song. It is now in MTV stress rotation.

"We stole this one and now we're taking it back," Michael said onstage before playing it.

It is unusual for an opening act to play an encore. The Van Goghs' final encore was the Beatles' "I Want to Hold Your Hand."

"We're going out the way we came in, playing covers," Mitchell said.

Michael was most prolific, writing most of their songs. Brian and Mitchell wrote a few. Drummers along the way wrote fewer.

They all have, or are near receiving, degrees from K-State. Michael has his MA in English from here. He will enter the doctoral program at the University of Minnesota in the fall.

During the late 80s, the band occasionally played as the Solar Acid Wolves, garbing themselves in Christmas lights and tin foil for long psychedelic songs.

In the last two years they have written maybe five songs. This reduction in production has been a change from the earlier years, Harris said.

Things have been tense at times. Michael and Mitchell are twin brothers who knew Brian while growing up in Junction City. There has been inevitable stress, but the band held together for seven years.

The band's second drummer, Lyman Hardy, now lives in Austin, Texas, and drums for Ed Hall on Trance Records.

The fourth drummer, Eric Melin, plays for local rockers Truck Stop Love.

Above the door to Snookie's Rhythm & Brews, the opening closing band's name was misspelled.

"TONITE! BEYOND ZEBRA WITH VAN GOHS," the marquee informed entering rock fans.

The Moving Van Goghs' 4-song CD, "Octaphenia," is available at Vital Vinyl records in Aggieville.

Parking available if price is right

DIANE HUTCHISON
Collegian

Most students purchase their parking permits for the year. Permits for the reserved stalls are also purchased for the year. However, faculty and staff have to renew their permits each semester.

Graduate teaching assistants and research assistants, who have been appointed to a position, can also get a faculty/staff permit. They are charged $35 for the permit, the same as regular faculty.

Some faculty will pay more for the reserved stalls to avoid the hassle of finding parking spots. The permits for 10-hour reserved spots are $245, and 24-hour reserved stalls are $335.

"There are people willing to pay for reserved parking stalls," Dwain Archer, manager of Parking Services, said. "We have a waiting list of over 100 right now."

Archer said handicapped faculty and students are given the priority of reserved stalls.

"We try to get them close to either their place of work or study," Archer said, "but not necessarily next to that building."

There are only 450 reserved stalls on campus, but the permits last for the entire year. Archer said there are still plenty of faculty/staff permits available. Not everyone knows those permits must be renewed each semester.

John Mathew, graduate in engineering, found that his faculty/staff permit had expired Feb. 1 when he found a ticket on his windshield the next night.

"They were very prompt on that," Mathew said.

Mathew went to Parking Services to ask about the ticket. He said he didn't think it was right to get a ticket when he hadn't received a notice that his permit needed to be renewed.

"I told them that if they had sent the notice to me I would have renewed it immediately," Mathew said.

A supervisor at the window told him that notices had been sent out. When Mathew told her he was a graduate, she said they won't send notices to graduate students.

Archer said they don't send notices to students at all and that graduates are considered students.

"Graduates are not considered faculty until they receive their appointment papers," Archer said.

Some graduates do receive notices but only if they are listed on the computers as an appointed graduate.

"This year, if a graduate had a permit the semester before, we send them a renewal notice," Archer said. "We don't know that they are faculty until after the first time they buy one."

Mathew said he doesn't understand why they won't send notices to graduates. He said they could send the notice through campus mail because all graduate teaching assistants have offices.

Beat the hell out of who, Billy?

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Promises, promises.

A little more than a month after Oklahoma coach Billy Tubbs made his guarantee of victory over K-State — "We're going to beat the hell out of them in Norman — mark that down." — the Wildcats made the Sooner coach eat his words.

K-State 67, Oklahoma 63.

With the win the Wildcats became only the second team this year to beat the Sooners in Norman. K-State has now won three times in the past seven years on Oklahoma's home floor.

But it didn't come easily last night.

K-State had to battle back from a 16-point deficit in the first half to eke out the four-point win.

"We were down on the canvas in the first half," head coach Dana Altman said.

"We played about as bad and scared as we've played all year. We weren't organized, and we were tentative. It wasn't pretty."

After a timeout, K-State came back to trail the Sooners by four at halftime.

"We saw at halftime that we could win the game," assistant coach Pete Herrmann said.

"We got back to K-State basketball — defense and rebounding. The players just did an excellent job down the stretch."

Students gain experience, get paid

LORI SCHREIBER
Collegian

A grant is opening the doors for K-State to provide a cooperative education program in which students will be able to work in their field and get paid. The program is similar to an internship.

This is the first semester for the K-State comprehensive co-op program.

A Title Eight Higher Education Administrative Grant has enabled K-State to give all students the opportunity to benefit from co-ops.

Toni Herzog, co-op coordinator, said the grant is designed to pay for the administrative costs of getting the program started. The five-year, $128,202 federal grant is being matched by K-State on a progressive basis. It will be absorbed into the budget by the sixth year.

Herzog said a co-op differs from an internship in a couple of ways. A co-op experience requires the students work in several different areas of the company, and the students must be compensated for their work. This may or may not be the case with internships.

A co-op lasts between 10 weeks and a year.

Deanna Fuller, co-op employee relations specialist, said co-op students will probably get above minimum wage. Kenneth Gowdy, associate dean of engineering, said an engineering co-op student can make a starting salary of about $1,200 to $2,000 a month.

He said some of the disadvantages of a co-op are a

Professor patents process to combat E. coli bacteria

JENNIFER SWANSON
Collegian

A K-State scientist has patented a process that may be able to prevent future outbreaks of food poisoning just weeks after an outbreak in Washington, which left hundreds of people ill and two children dead.

Daniel Fung, professor of food science, received a patent on Feb. 16 for a technique that uses Oxyrase™ enzyme to stimulate the rapid growth of pathogens like E. coli 0157:H7.

E. coli is a bacteria which grows in the intestinal tracts of animals, Fung said. The 0157:H7 strain is being blamed for the food-poisoning outbreak in the Northeast.

His discovery is important, Fung said, because it is the fastest known way to grow bacteria.

It takes bacteria eight to 10 hours to grow to large enough numbers on their own to be detected. But Fung said bacteria treated with Oxyrase™ will produce a large enough population for detection in four to five hours.

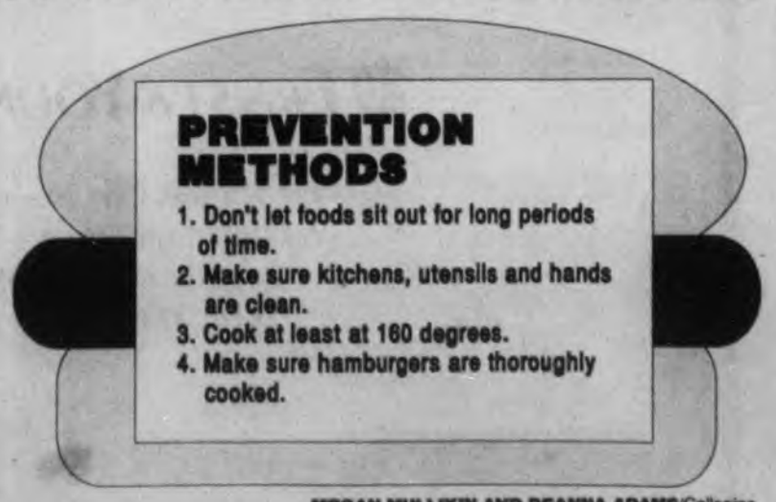
"Nobody on earth can detect one E. coli in food. You normally need eight to 10 hours before you can detect the harmfulness in food," Fung said.

It is important to realize the tests on meat are performed in a test tube under controlled conditions, which prevent environmental contamination, Curtis Kastner, professor of animal sciences, said.

Although the new process is not being used in slaughter facilities yet, Fung said it shows potential for use as a quick test for bacteria.

Its use would allow meat inspectors to know a problem exists before the meat leaves the plant and gets into the hands and mouths of consumers.

The test currently being used by the United States Department of Agriculture is expensive and takes a lot of time, Randall Phebus, assistant professor of food science, said.



"Most of the time is spent in letting E. coli grow," Phebus said.

E. coli can be introduced to meat from the animal itself, water supplies or from people, Kastner said.

"This is just one of many reasons that packing plant employees are required to wear clean clothes and boots and keep their hands clean and their hair covered," he said.

Even the best inspection and hygiene at packing facilities does not prevent some meat from being exposed to bacteria.

ON THE AGENDA

Garden City studied for diversity changes

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

Janet Benson, associate professor of anthropology, found the United States a different place after traveling abroad for several years during the 1960s and 1970s.

While she was gone, cultural diversity had surged, and the population had begun changing.

"It was like rediscovering my own society and finding out it had changed a great deal," Benson said.

Her interest in diversity, and her involvement in a community study of Garden City, led her to research the effect the changes had on immigrants in Kansas communities.

"I wanted to continue research in southwest Kansas," she said. "I saw a change in the American population."

Several ethnic groups live in Dodge City, Liberal and Garden City because of low-paying jobs supplied by meat- and poultry-packing plants, she said.

Benson said most immigrants are from Mexico and Southeast Asia, and few of them speak English.

"Communication is one of the main issues," she said.

The research, which began in 1989, is two-fold.

Decision makers in the communities were interviewed to see what they could do to better serve the new populations, Benson said.

The immigrants were also interviewed to find out how they communicated about crucial problems with a language barrier.

The research also focused on the lack of services the immigrants had and how they and the communities coped with such problems, Benson said.

"The problems are greater with families than single males," she said. "You can't have the workers without providing the services."

Among the services most immigrants lack is a decent place to live.

"It's hard to find quality housing," Benson said, because of the low wages immigrants receive.

Problems with medical attention are abundant as well, she said.

"People are afraid they will be fired if the plant finds out they are injured," Benson said.

Insurance is not issued until an employee has worked at a plant several months, but high mobility of workers makes it difficult to obtain, she said.

Education is another dilemma that was researched.

"Many of them are highly educated people," Wilfredo Gutierrez, graduate student in sociology, said. "If you don't speak English, then all the doors are closed."

Gutierrez was a field assistant in the research and a translator for the Spanish-speaking immigrants.

He said even though learning centers for adults offer courses in English, it is not always easy for the immigrants to participate.

"Some people are too tired because they are working very hard," Gutierrez said.

Benson said learning a second language takes years, and it is more difficult for adults to learn.

"You don't learn a language overnight," she said. "They need to have some type of clearinghouse."

Some type of basic information is needed, such as emergency information in different languages, Benson said.

Theater class helps disabled children through enjoyable therapy

"We use role playing to feel better about ourselves. I use my art of theater for a kind of therapy to help people."

NORMAN FEDDER
PROFESSOR OF SPEECH

TRACY ARNOLD
Collegian

"Happy trails to you, until we meet again. Happy trails to you, we'll smile until then."

These words from a Roy Rogers song are sung in a class called Theater for Special Populations. The special populations include emotionally, mentally and physically disabled children from area schools.

"The song does make students smile, and singing it is fun," Doyle Baird, senior in horticulture therapy, said.

Fun is a big part of the class. Student leaders come up with topics and then have the students in the class do skits. The class meets twice a week, but the children only attend once a week.

Rachael Wilkerson, senior in social work, said the children who visit are mentally challenged, have behaviorial problems or are in wheelchairs.

Children come from the Manhattan and Junction City school districts to participate in what is a type of drama therapy.

"We use drama the way a therapist would use psychoanalysis. It is the clinical use of improvisation," said Norman "Doc" Fedder, professor in speech and instructor for the class. "We use role playing to feel better about ourselves. I use my art of theater for a kind of therapy to help people."

Students, like Baird, find it therapeutic too.

"I think anything that is enjoyable and positive to anything in general is therapy. The class is enjoyable and relaxing," Baird said.

Burt Brungardt, senior in management and gerontology, said he is learning to deal with special populations as well as other children through the class.

"Children come in to do activities about their favorite things and activities. They have total free imagination. They do what they want," Wilkerson said.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Mauria Stonestreet, Cari Anne Short, Carl Elwell of the Threatre of Special Populations at K-State, and a sixth-grade student from Amanda Elementary School, perform a skit about a boy falling from a ferris wheel during class Tuesday. Challenged students use drama as therapy.

At the beginning of class, everyone gets a name tag to designate what group they will work in.

Leaders from the class begin with a warm-up activity. This can be acting out a skit of a favorite activity or even a favorite Disney character, as was done one class period.

After the warm-up, the main activity begins.

"One day we did a skit about an amusement park. We acted like we were riding a roller coaster," Wilkerson said. "We moved around and sideways and acted like we were going up a hill."

With all the fun come challenges too, Brungardt said.

"It's hard to get the kids to do what they're supposed to do. There are no real limits in the class," he said. "In a way, we have to manipulate them to come up with ideas for the activities."

Wilkerson also expressed difficulties in the class.

"Trying to get the children to do what you want without too many restrictions is difficult. It's hard to keep them quiet when they are supposed to be quiet," she said.

"Bring down the silence" is heard a lot in the class. It is the tactic used to get students and children ready to listen, watch and participate in skits.

"We try to get the kids to participate by interacting with us. We work to get their guard down and express themselves," Brungardt said.

The class was started around 1980, Fedder said. There were 12 students in the first class, and there are now 36.

Fedder started the class after coordinating a statewide festival for performing arts for retarded citizens. He had students help in the coaching of the retarded citizens.

"I saw the performance, and I was so touched that it had a great impact on me," he said.

He then talked to some colleagues who were working with developmentally disabled students on plays and told them he wanted to try a class for one semester.

He said he told them, "I don't know what I'm doing, but if you'd help, we'll see what happens.

"That one semester became 13 years," he said.

After a series of trials and errors, the class has become what it is today, he said.

"If I get nothing else out of the class, it's that I can have fun with children," Brungardt said.

Wilkerson said she enjoys the class because it allows her to act crazy.

"It's fun. It's a place to act crazy and stupid and nobody cares. It's a playland, an imaginary adventure," Wilkerson said.

Military respect begins at home

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — Military personnel must be ready to deploy worldwide, and a key element to their preparedness is how they are treated in their home communities, the commanding general at Fort Riley said Tuesday.

Maj. Gen. William Hartzog testified before the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee on a bill that would outlaw discrimination against military personnel in public accommodations.

He said there are about 50 complaints of discrimination against military personnel in the state every year.

"We certainly don't intend to imply that there's a watershed of discontent, because that's not the case," Hartzog said.

He said the bill was modeled after a North Carolina proposal.

Hartzog said the federal government will look at community support for bases when it considers closing them. He urged the committee to endorse the bill to send a strong message to the federal government.

Sen. Doug Walker, D-Osawatomie, asked Hartzog how the committee could reconcile such a bill with the military's past ban on homosexuals.

"The bill and the whole issue has to do with leveling the whole playing field with being a soldier and not being a soldier," Hartzog said.

He said President Clinton has addressed the issue of gays in the military, and said he would wait for guidance from him. Clinton has proposed eliminating the ban.

Major Gen. James Rueger, the state's adjutant general, also spoke in support of the bill on behalf of the Kansas National Guard.

Clark Lindstrom, spokesman for the Kansas Apartment Association, testified against the bill.

The committee's chairwoman, Sen. Lana Oleen, R-Manhattan, said the it pertained to public accommodations, including employment and credit worthiness but not housing.

Agency must fix its priorities

THE ISSUE

The Federal Emergency Management Agency spent three-fourths of its budget on national security and only one-fourth on disaster relief.

WE SUGGEST

FEMA must make responding to the victims of natural disasters its top priority.

The Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) needs to practice disaster response techniques upon itself.

It seems that for every dollar FEMA has spent responding to natural disasters during the past decade, the agency has spent $12 on a secret program designed to protect the government from a nuclear attack, the Palm Beach Post reported on Sunday.

In fact, national security programs have accounted for 78 percent of FEMA's budget from 1982 to 1991, dwarfing the 6.6 percent of the budget spent responding to events like Hurricane Andrew.

What that misappropriation of money has resulted in is an agency ill-suited to meet the needs of victims of Mother Nature's fury.

The city manager of Homestead, Fla., pleaded with FEMA to provide hand-held radios in the aftermath of Hurricane Andrew because the town had only one working telephone.

What he got was high-tech vans capable of sending coded, multi-frequency radio messages to military aircraft halfway around the world, according to Cox Newspapers.

Meanwhile, victims of the hurricane were forced to find shelter wherever and however they could, because no shelter would be available until days later when tent cities were finally assembled.

Simply put, FEMA needs to re-evaluate who it serves. In an era where the threat of nuclear war is almost a memory, nobody needs bomb shelters and radios with lots of fancy knobs and buttons.

Instead, FEMA should reallocate the money spent on those things so they are able to respond quickly and be well prepared to meet the needs of victims who have nowhere else to turn.

Klawonn contradicts herself in column

Editor,

I am writing in response to Kelly Klawonn's article "An Eye for an Eye for an Eye," which ran in the Feb. 17 Collegian. In her article, Kelly made a bad habit of contradicting herself. She starts by saying, "The death penalty is not an individual taking another life. It is a society and its institutions taking that life." However, only two paragraphs later she proclaims, "The death penalty is wrong because it is still one person killing another person." What's the deal? Pick a side and go for it. Don't waste my time flip-flopping on the subject and contradicting yourself. What's next? Will we find out that, although Kelly Klawonn fights for minority rights, her middle name is actually Kay?

Killers shouldn't be pampered by society

Editor,

In response to Kelly Klawonn's editorial "An eye for an eye for an eye," I would like to make a few opinions of my own be known.

First, Kelly, let's take this hypothetical situation. Let's say Kelly's mom is murdered — shot in the head 10 times. Not only was she shot, but raped, beaten and dismembered.

Now, here's where your plan comes into effect. "Let's keep him in jail all his life," you say. OK, I've researched a little and find that it costs much more than $10 a day for a prisoner to live incarcerated. But just for easy math's sake, we'll use $10. You're paying $3,600 a year to give the person that took your mother's "right to live."

On the average, a convicted murderer gets 80 months in prison, but you want them to stay there for life. If he stays for seven years, you pay $25,200 for your mother's killer. But if he stays all his life, and he murders at 23 and dies at 83, you have just given your mother's murderer $180,000. That's awful nice of you.

Now, let's see what the murderer got out of this and what he had to pay. He gets three square meals a day (which is three more than America's homeless), he gets clothes on his back, and he gets the satisfaction of knowing that he did the same thing to the American taxpayers, as he did to your mother — he raped them. Now all this devaluation of life he's brought to society has cost him little. It cost him 10 bullets of a 9 mm, which is a sum of $2.40. For $2.40, this criminal just took you and society for $180,000-plus and one human life that added to, not detracted from, society.

I'm tired of liberals talking of killers rights. Who is the victim here? Hypothetically, your mother will never have another right again. It makes me sick to see that in some parts of society, we can do any atrocity to the unborn child, but if you touch a killer, you're infringing on his rights.

In closing, I would like to say that if I ever had the cowardliness to take someone's life, may society put me to death and may my Lord Jesus Christ deal with me at the higher power, for I think both are extremely important.

Equal treatment not part of president's plan

Editor,

It's time for a change in America — it is time for the rich to pay their fair share of taxes and for the rest of the country to support their government with "broad-based contributions." Today, we must move forward to defeat the deficit and provide a fair health-care system for all Americans, as well as equal treatment of all citizens, regardless of how they live their private lives. With this change, our country will bring education to a level never seen before, and a justice system that is unequaled in the world. In America, we are finally breaking free of the old ways and moving on to tomorrow.

This is what the current administration would have you believe, and in many ways they are correct, but for the wrong reasons. In the past 12 years, the rich paid the taxes they were supposed to pay. They even paid a greater amount because the percentage of taxable income goes up as a person's income goes up. Because the rich were making money, and more of it, they are the ones who paid their fair share and not the people who didn't work in the '80s but received government money. Ask yourself, "Where did that money come from?" The answer is — from the rich and the working people of America who benefited from tax cuts and less government interference in people's daily lives.

Cutting the spending allocations of Congress will be the best way to reduce the deficit. If the government were not to increase taxes at all and leave spending at levels that were set last year, then the deficit would go down. So, President Clinton wouldn't even have to cut spending, he could just hold the line on it.

What is equal treatment of Americans? Shouldn't it be that all people are looked at solely based upon their ability to perform work? A person's history, public or private, should not give them a preferred status among others who are equally qualified.

Indeed, with Bill Clinton as president, the country will be in a condition it has never been in before.

Advertisements don't tell the whole story

Editor,

This is in response to the Department of Housing's ad in the Feb. 18 issue of the Collegian. It is an ad that is just one more example of Housing's current preference of good public relations over substance. It seems that Housing is going out of its way to keep students in the dorms by any means possible, provided those means don't actually involve maintaining quality services.

In 1989, I paid $295 a month in rent. In the Fall of 1993, incoming freshmen will pay $395 a month, a 34-percent increase in four years. And in that time, services have generally done anything but improve.

Four years ago, the hall provided a free linen exchange twice a week. In comparison, we no longer have a free linen exchange. We don't even get linen. Oh well, even if Housing won't wash our linen, we can still do it ourselves in the free laundry facilities. That is, until next year, when Housing starts charging for laundry.

Meanwhile, over in the dining halls, the quality of food has gone down, the portions have decreased, workers have been cut and the entire system has been remodeled to make it more inconvenient. If Housing is in such a hurry to cut costs, why are they carpeting the food centers? Easier to keep clean? Maybe carpeting the dining centers just makes for good public relations with visiting parents and dining-service-award bestowers.

Quite frankly, with cuts in services, I'm surprised that our rent has gone up at all, let alone at double the rate of inflation. Apparently, for some mysterious reason, students just don't want to live in the dorms.

Wake up and smell the coffee, Housing. You can't expect to get your greedy little hands on more profits if you drive all your potential customers away. I've lived on the same floor for four years and have two more years of undergraduate school, but I have no intention of returning to the dorms. I can do better elsewhere.

I live on a floor that generally has one of the highest return rates on campus, and even on this floor, Housing should consider itself lucky if it gets 15 percent of the people to return. They have no reason to.

Reasons for rate hike don't survive scrutiny

Editor,

As most people are well aware by now, the housing department sent a letter to its residents about the elimination of free laundry services. Here are a few reasons given in that letter and my responses:

1. "It is intended to pass on the cost to the user rather than pass it on to all the residents." — We are all users of laundry services, so, charging for the washing is not the answer. Assuming this charge was already in our housing bill, the charge for laundry should lead to a decrease in monthly payments. I don't understand why I should pay for the same service twice.

2. "It will help upgrade facilities." — If this one is true, more power to them. However, in the three years I've been here, I've seen an $80 per month increase in housing payments, and I have yet to see any improvements in our facilities. If the housing department hasn't used its resources for improvements thus far, why should I trust them to do so in the future?

3. "It will prevent misuse of washers and dryers." — This is referring to people not washing or drying full loads of clothes. The housing department does not realize that people will overload the washers and dryers in an attempt to save money. Overloading will cause these machines to break down more often, which will give the department a bigger headache than it already has.

I believe that the housing department needs to reconsider the logic of both charging for laundry facilities and increasing the cost of staying in the residence halls.

They will have a very low return rate for upper-class students if they refuse to consider our needs.

THE FINE ART OF OUTING

KELLY KLAWONN

My favorite place was in the basement, underneath my dad's drafting table. It was so dark nobody wanted to go down there. And besides, my dad scared everyone.

Hide-And-Seek. Such a fun game. Haven't played it in a long time. But today many gay activists are rewriting the rules to a new version of an old favorite.

The modern day game of Hide-and-Seek is now called 'outing' in gay circles. Like the earlier version, this adult version works much the same way.

Somebody hides. Somebody tries to find them.

Only in this real-life version, there is no base.

The practice of outing by certain organizations — particularly Queer Nation and ACT-UP — is controversial to say the least. Outing involves leaking or acknowledging to the press or public that a particular person is gay or lesbian, effectively bringing them out of the closet.

Coming out of the closet is a very private matter. Nobody can really make somebody come out if they don't want to. We can always lie.

Outing, however, forces people to make a decision to be honest or to hide. If they are honest and own up to their identity and their community, it is an outing well done. If they lie and try to hide their sexuality, then we know who is willing to align themselves with their community.

Last year at the Academy Awards, certain groups threatened to out a well-known star. Their reasoning was that popular, high-profile and powerful people need to come out of the closet to help legitimize and visualize the gay community.

For example, say a well-known movie star is at a big movie premiere. A publicity hound's wet dream. Well, our star, Doris Jeftoe — oops, my anagrams are showing — is known to be a lesbian. She has been seen at many a gay bar, been to many gay-only functions, and has frequently been in the company of quite a few family members. Yet, during interviews, she avoids the subject of her sexuality. Never setting the record straight. Never denying that she is a lesbian or a heterosexual.

The outing process begins with a leak to a newspaper, or television station, about the sexuality of a particular person. From that point, the media will begin asking questions. Probing for possible collaborators. And, hopefully, going public with their findings, or lack thereof.

While the most visible outings tend to take place in Tinsel Town, that is not necessarily where our attention should be placed.

Earlier this year, Coalition '93 — a gay transition team that advises Clinton — staged the attempted outing of Clinton Department of Health and Human Services appointee Donna Shalala. Shalala denied the reported accusations. She didn't say she wasn't a lesbian, rather that she doesn't lead an "alternative lifestyle." Huh?

Is she saying her lifestyle is not alternative? Is she straight? Is she a lesbian? Who knows.

Coalition '93 defended the attempted outing by reiterating the need for increased visibility among gays and lesbians in high-level positions. And a closeted gay man or lesbian wouldn't be an appropriate means of achieving that kind of visibility.

I don't believe we should be branded by our sexuality, nor do I think that our sexuality is, or should be, our most dominant trait. But to say that our sexuality is not an issue and not acknowledge one's sexuality is, quite frankly, a lie.

If we do not make it known that we are not heterosexual, then people will continue to make assumptions.

The rumors will circulate:

"Did you hear so-and-so is gay?"

"You know she is a big 'ol dyke?"

"He got married? I thought he was queer."

Rumors are useless. Outing forces people to confront the rumors as well as their own identity.

When highly visible and well-known people remain in the closet, and allow assumed heterosexuality to continue, it hurts the diversity of the entire community.

OTHER VIEWS

Seattle Post-Intelligencer on Janet Reno (Feb. 13):

Asked in hindsight what he would have done differently in his bumpy search for an attorney general, President Bill Clinton replied:

"Oh, I would have called Janet Reno on November the 5th."

That indeed would have spared the president's fledgling administration the embarrassment of having his first two choices, Zoe Baird and Kimba Wood, founder on the shoals of their employment of illegal alien housekeepers and nannies.

No such problem exists with Reno, a never-wed and childless 54-year-old woman who keeps her own house. ...

A Harvard University law school graduate, Reno has served with distinction for 15 years as Miami-Dade County's prosecuting attorney. She is particularly noted for her diligence and competence in pursuing cases involving political corruption, racial violence, child abuse and nonpayment of child support by absent fathers. ...

Perhaps her greatest recommendation comes from the acknowledgment of her integrity by defense attorneys and even her political foes. ...

It took him a while, but Clinton seems to have found an attorney general the nation at large will come to respect and admire.

REVIEW

Streetside exhibits diverse sound in albums

NEIL ANDERSON
Collegian

Bom, bom, dippy-di-di-dinda, doobada, doobada, dooby, dooby, dooby, dooby-doo-bop, shoo-ba, dip, dip, down, down, dibby-di-di-dinda.

This isn't everyday language, nor is it language ever used by most people. But for the oldies-doo-wop vocal group Streetside, it is practically their native language.

The essence of Streetside has been around for 12 years, with different members, but with the same commitment to music.

"We have gone from acappella and doo-wop to commercials, contemporary songs from Billy Joel and country music," Pete Kahler, Streetside member, said.

Kahler has been with Streetside from its beginning at Manhattan High School in 1980. The original five members were singing together in the bathroom next to the choir room, and they really liked what they heard.

They decided to form a singing group because they sounded so good together. The five original members were all seniors and members of Manhattan Pops Choir.

Other members now include Kevin Mott, Mark Kahler, Jason Weil and Jarrod DeVault.

When DeVault started about six months ago, he had to learn 40 songs in two weeks for his first performance with Streetside.

"It was tough. It still is tough," he said.

Streetside has performed at All-University Open House, Parents' Weekend, Homecoming, a K-State basketball game and a Welcome Back concert. They have also performed at the Kansas State Fair in Hutchinson eight years in a row.

Streetside finished its first album 10 years after the group had been created. The main factors in producing an album are money and enough demand for the album for it to at least pay for itself. The group needed a loan to put out the first album, and then put in 36 hours of studio work.

1,000 copies are made in one printing of an album. Streetside's first album is almost ready for its third printing.

"You don't realize the little things that you do in songs at shows, until you have to make it perfect for a recording," Pete said.

"It's a permanent record of the song."

The group released its second album, "Streetside 2," in September 1992.

The second album was done in half the time of the first album, Pete said.

For the third album, the group hopes to release tapes and compact discs. They might want to release a third album in another year or so.

Streetside focuses on vocals, with an advanced keyboard for background. The keyboard has built-in drums and sequences, and the ability to save the bits and pieces that are wanted for future use.

The largest show Streetside has done was opening for Spyro Gyra with 25,000 people in attendance.

The quickest and most profitable show was for the International Association of Auditorium Managers convention in Kansas City, where they sang the national anthem and made $400.

The group performs in Kansas, Missouri and parts of Nebraska.

"We travel light. We just have the keyboard," Mark said.

Streetside attributes its longevity to its appeal to all ages.

"At the shows, you see all ages, especially grade-school kids," Renee McKain, Pete's fiance, said.

You can get a feel for the crowd you are performing for and change to songs they like, Mark added.

Streetside has added more Elvis Presley songs to its song list because of his popularity. They also added female doo-wop groups' songs to the list, such as "Lollipop."

"Which is a killer, because you can't breathe while singing the song," Mark said.

Clinton delays spending increases

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — President Clinton and Democratic congressional leaders agreed Tuesday to delay Clinton's proposed economic stimulus-spending increases until lawmakers can vote on his more painful deficit-reduction package.

The move came after growing numbers of rank-and-file Democrats expressed concern that by voting on the spending boosts first, they would appear to be shirking — or perhaps even abandoning — the tougher votes on Clinton's proposed tax increases and spending cuts.

As a result, there will be two nearly simultaneous House votes sometime between mid-March and early April. First will come a budget resolution laying out unpopular tax increases and spending cuts, then Clinton's $16 billion in short-term spending increases on roads and other projects.

White House spokesman George Stephanopoulous said that in phone calls to House and Senate leaders, Clinton asked them to put the budget resolution on a fast track so they could lock in the spending cuts as soon as possible, and they have agreed.

"So, we will be moving the budget resolution as the first part of the president's economic package to make sure the president's blueprint for economic change is approved as soon as possible," Stephanopoulous said.

House Speaker Thomas Foley, D-Wash., conceded that this meant the stimulus package would be voted on a week or two later than had been planned, and the budget resolution would be voted on about a month earlier than anticipated. He said he expected votes on both measures to occur between mid-March and April 2, when Congress begins its Easter recess.

Foley said Clinton and top Democrats believe that before the stimulus investment package is considered by the House, it's important for members and the country to understand they've committed to the broad program of the president's initiatives, including the spending cuts.

Republicans immediately signaled that the new timetable was unacceptable.

William Pitts, floor assistant to House Minority Leader Robert Michel, R-Ill., noted that the budget resolution simply orders House committees to find savings in the programs they oversee. The actual votes on spending cuts and tax increases would come later in separate legislation.

"This doesn't guarantee any savings at all," he said.

The decision was made during a telephone call among Clinton, Foley, Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine and House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo.

Previously, lawmakers had planned to approve the emergency spending increases in March, with the budget following a month or so later.

Stephanopoulos said the new procedure will mean a slight delay in action on Clinton's stimulus plan, but that it was hopeful it would mean quicker action on the overall package.

He said he hoped Congress could move on the measure over the next few weeks, possibly even before Clinton formally submits his budget to Congress on March 23.

"We want the president's package passed as quickly as possible, and the Congress agrees," Stephanopoulos said.

In addition, the lawmakers are also considering moving up votes on the bill containing the actual tax increases and spending cuts spelled out in the budget. Instead of August, as previously expected, House Whip David Bonior, D-Mich., said the House vote on that package could occur as early as May.

The plans emerged amid a growing reluctance among Democrats to vote for spending increases before deficit reduction. Some critics have used the analogy that such a timetable would look like Congress was eating its dessert before its spinach.

"We want to make sure we eat our meal in the proper order," Bonior said.

Gephardt, when asked if the deficit-reduction vote could occur before August, told reporters, "I think it can happen before then."

Rep. Jim Slattery of Kansas is among several fiscally conservative Democrats who have told party leaders that the votes on higher spending and budget cuts must be held closely together.

"Otherwise, the perception will be, 'Here we go again. They're going to pass the spending increases without enacting the cuts,'" Slattery said.

Rep. Timothy Penny, D-Minn., said, "We need to convey to the public that something significant and bold has happened. If we spread this out over several months and do it in pieces, we'll likely end up with less rather than more deficit reduction."

Mark it down — Cats beat OU

SHANE KEYSER/Collegian

Vincent Jackson, K-State forward, looks to pass through the defensive trap of Oklahoma's Ryan Minor and Angelo Hamilton. Jackson did not start for the first time this season but came off the bench to score 14 points.

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

NORMAN, Okla. — Twelve minutes before the opening tip-off of K-State's Tuesday night game against Oklahoma, a chunk of insulation from Lloyd Noble Center's ceiling fell onto the court.

Two hours later later, the entire roof caved in for Sooner coach Billy Tubbs and his Oklahoma squad.

The Wildcats — losers of their three previous games — strolled into the Sooners' backyard and posted a thrilling come-from-behind victory.

And in doing so, K-State refuted Tubbs' promise that his team would "beat the hell out of" K-State in Norman.

"We've covered that, and I'm sick and tired of it," Tubbs said after the game. "I hope we can close that subject because I'm burned-out on it."

Case closed — Wildcats 67, Sooners 63.

Oklahoma and K-State, the top and bottom of the Big Eight in scoring averages, were indeed exact opposites from the field Tuesday night. The Cats shot a blistering 56 percent from the field — including 64 percent in the second half — and dwarfed the Sooners' 38 percentage.

"I don't think you can win many games shooting the way we did," Tubbs said. "One for 21 from three-point range isn't going to do it."

The win for the Cats improved their record to 16-7 overall and 6-5 in the Big Eight. K-State is now tied with Iowa State for third place.

"We had been struggling, and we knew it," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "This was a big win to put us back up. It was a really good road win."

The loss dropped the Sooners to 17-9, 5-6 in the Big Eight.

"We better get really busy real soon, or we can forget about the NCAA Tournament," Tubbs said.

But the second straight loss for Oklahoma was in question until the end.

K-State overcame a lackluster first half, in which they trailed by 16 at one point and were behind 34-28 at half, to post yet another unlikely win in this very unlikely season.

But the Cats did it with the ingredients that have been working all along — tough defense, which held Oklahoma to its lowest output since 1982, and solid rebounding, which outboarded the opponent for the 18th time in 22 games despite having the conference's smallest line-up.

K-State forced the Sooners into a 34-percent shooting effort in the final 20 minutes. For one seven-minute stretch, Oklahoma did not hit a field goal. In that time, K-State went on a 14-2 run that put them up by as much as seven.

But the Sooner pressure defense — that hounded the Cats into a season-high 26 turnovers — kept Oklahoma in the game.

The Sooners chipped away at the Wildcat lead, and with 4:17 to play, took a one-point lead of their own. Oklahoma led again at the 2:53 mark, but that was quickly erased by an Anthony Beane free throw.

Askia Jones then hit a pair of charity tosses, giving K-State a two-point edge, and Deryl Cunningham's pass set up Vincent Jackson for a lay-up with 52 seconds to play.

Oklahoma's Jeff Webster, who led all scorers with 26 points, answered at the other end.

But it was the following melee at K-State's side of the court that may have won the game for the Cats.

With the Sooners down by just two points, Bryatt Vann stole the ball from Jones. But Jones, flat on the floor, batted the ball away from Vann and right to Beane.

Beane then passed it back to Jones, now back on his feet, who in turn kicked it underneath to Cunningham for an easy lay-up. That put the Cats up by four with just 24 seconds to play.

The win for K-State may have alleviated the fears that the Wildcats lost the emotion that propelled them to a 4-1 start of the Big Eight season.

"People judge you by the way you overcome your obstacles," Beane said. "We can fight, and we knew that. We just wanted to show everyone that this wasn't just a dream season."

SPORTS DIGEST

▶BUCKEYES DUMP NO. 1 INDIANA

COLUMBUS, Ohio (AP) — Ohio State kept its streak over No. 1 teams alive and ended Indiana's chances at a perfect Big Ten season.

The Buckeyes, winners of three of their last 11 games, broke a 77-77 tie when Jamie Skelton hit his fourth 3-pointer with 40 seconds to play.

Brian Evans missed a 3-pointer to tie with 11 seconds left, and he was tied up on the rebound. The possession arrow favored Ohio State, and Lawrence Funderburke was fouled with 6.8 seconds left, hitting one free throw to clinch it.

Indiana (24-3, 13-1 Big Ten) had a 13-game winning streak snapped and lost the chance to become the first team to run the Big Ten schedule since the Hoosiers did it in consecutive years in 1975 and 1976.

The victory marked the third straight time that Ohio State (13-10, 6-8) has beaten a No. 1 team. The Buckeyes beat Iowa in 1987 and Indiana in 1983 in its last two meetings with a top-ranked team.

Indiana again was bothered by poor foul shooting as the Hoosiers almost pulled out a victory in regulation.

Skelton, who finished with 22 points, hit an off-balance 3-pointer with three seconds remaining to put Ohio State ahead 71-70.

With two seconds remaining, Indiana threw the ball the length of the court. But Ohio State's Derek Anderson was called for running over a pick. Chris Reynolds went to the line with two seconds on the clock and hit the first free throw to tie it, but missed the second.

AC/DC rock Sooners' world

BRIAN ANDERSON

NORMAN, Okla. — AC/DC rocked Lloyd Noble Center Tuesday night.

No, it wasn't the British heavy-metal group, but K-State's duo of Aaron Collier and Deryl Cunningham that shook the Oklahoma Sooners all night long.

When Collier and Cunningham combine for 15 rebounds or more, K-State is 11-2. The duo grabbed 18 rebounds against the Sooners in the Wildcats' 67-63 win.

Cunningham tied Askia Jones for the team lead in rebounding with 10 boards, and Collier had his best scoring night as a K-Stater. He tallied 20 points and connected on 10 of his 13 field-goal attempts.

"There was a point where he owned them," coach Dana Altman said of Collier's play.

"Aaron really showed his senior leadership tonight. He really hasn't gotten the credit he deserves this year.

"His interests are the team's best interests," Altman said.

Against Northeastern Illinois, Collier set a Bramlage Coliseum record for field-goal percentage by draining eight of his 10 attempts.

Collier said he felt he was confident in his shot.

"I'm capable of getting the good shot," said Collier, who has hit at least 50 percent in 15 of K-State's 22 games. "I felt confident in my play.

"I felt I had the hot hand. Everything I shot was pretty much going in.

"I got open and took the high-percentage shot," he said. "I just happened to be open."

Collier got the Cats going a couple of times in the game. He opened the game by scoring K-State's first six points.

In the second half, he gave K-State its first lead of the ballgame at the 13:23 mark and proceeded to stretch the lead to 48-43.

Collier, despite having his best game as a Cat, said he could have done more.

"It was not my best game. I wanted more rebounds," he said of his eight-rebound performance.

Cunningham, after pulling down 15 rebounds Saturday against Kansas, tallied 10, against the taller Sooners.

"We played good in the second half of the Kansas game, and I figured it would carry over to tonight's game," said Cunningham, who has 59 rebounds in his past six games. "Coach (Ken) Turner said to be aggressive and get the rebounds.

"I'm disappointed I only got 10, but I got into foul trouble early," he said.

Entering Tuesday's game, he was averaging 8.7 boards a game, second in the Big Eight. His 86 offensive rebounds leads the conference.

K-State rumbles to road win over Loyola

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

The Lady Cats broke into the win column again by dispatching the Loyola Lady Ramblers 63-52 in Chicago last night.

The victory gave K-State its 10th victory of the season on 15 losses, and netted head coach Susan Yow her 200th career victory.

"It's good any time you can win on the road," Yow said.

JoMoree Grattan and Shanele Stires paced the Lady Cat attack with 16 points each, while Leah Honeycutt added 12.

Stires also snagged a team-high 11 rebounds, while Grattan connected on seven of her ten field-goal attempts.

"I didn't feel like they were guarding me really hard," Grattan said. "It wasn't like the girls in the Big Eight."

K-State struggled early against the Lady Ramblers. The Lady Cats built a four-point lead over the first four minutes of the game, but Loyola used several Cat turnovers to grab a 14-10 lead with 11:36 left before halftime.

K-State turned the ball over eight times in the first half but had only three turnovers in the second.

Grattan kept the Cats in the hunt by hitting five for six attempts from the field in the first half. In the first 20 minutes, she tallied 12 of her 16 points.

"I just felt open," Grattan said. "I don't know what it was — after I hit the first shots, I felt more self-assured."

Yow said Grattan's performance was the highlight of the first 20 minutes.

"She was a big key for us in the first half," Yow said.

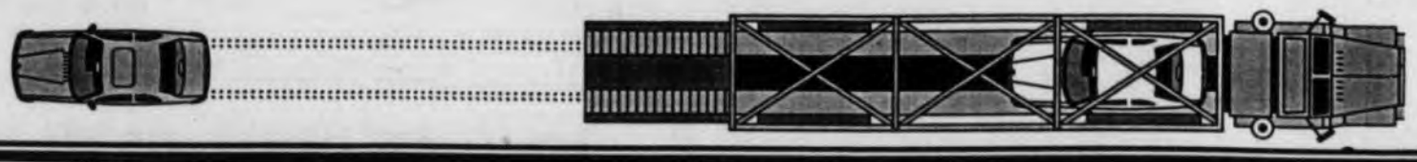
The lead see-sawed back and forth until Stires drained two free throws with 15 seconds left in the first half to grab a 31-29 lead, one they would not relinquish in the second.

Loyola and K-State traded buckets until a 10-2 run over a 3:28 span put the Lady Cats firmly in command.

The Wildcats held as much as a 15-point lead before finishing with the 11-point winning margin.

K-State now has some time off before they play their last regular season game at Kansas.

The Lady Cats will then travel to Lawrence to face the Jayhawks Sunday at 2 p.m.



K-State will then play in the Big Eight Tournament on Mar. 6-8 at the Salina Bicentennial Center.

Grattan said that she hopes the victory will give the team some momentum heading into their Sunday game at Kansas.

"It wasn't a surprise win — we felt like we should beat them," Grattan said. "But it was a nice confidence builder to get us ready for KU."

Program offers money for research

Awards are given to students to help finance cancer studies

STEPHANIE HOELZEL
Collegian

Looking into microscopes, filling test tubes, and growing various kinds of bacteria and viruses are what many K-State students do in Ackert Hall.

The Center for Basic Cancer Research has been offering students monetary awards for their help in studying and testing various cancer experiments.

Patricia Adams, administrative assistant for the Division of Biology, said the Awards Program has grown substantially since it was started in 1980.

"The first year we gave out only three monetary awards. This year we were able to give out 24 awards of $500 each. This increase has shown the remarkable growth of our donor program," Adams said.

Individuals from around the country give private donations to be used in the Award Program. These donations provide students with a stipend for their work in studying cancer.

"We have many people who give private gifts to the Center. We take this money and offer it to students. These students have to apply for the awards and show what area they will be studying in cancer research," Adams said.

Many students apply for the awards, but it is very competitive.

"Students have to approach one of the professors and find out if that particular lab has an opening. Then, with the help of the professor, they fill out the application and explain the importance of the area they wish to study. It is very competitive because there aren't many openings for students to get into," Adams said.

The Awards Program provides students with valuable experience in the study of cancer.

Cheryl Slaybaugh, senior in life science and pre-physical therapy, is an award recipient.

"I work in Dr. Chapes' lab. I started out a year and a half ago doing work for Biology 698. This year I received an award to work in the lab," Slaybaugh said.

Another award recipient is Scott Rottinghaus, junior in biology and chemical science. Rottinghaus has been working under Dr. Consigli since January 1992.

"I work under a graduate student in Consigli's lab. We are studying the structural protein in the protein coat of the polyomavirus. This virus is the one that causes cancer in mice," Rottinghaus said.

Students working in the labs have sent experiments into space aboard the Shuttle.

"We have sent experiments from our lab on the Shuttle. We do this to see how microgravity affects our experiments. Different reactions happen in space than on Earth," Rottinghaus said.

Medical journals also publish the findings of students and faculty.

"Right now, we are working on getting an article published from our area of study," Slaybaugh said.

Although no cure for cancer has been found yet, these students and others will continue with their experiments until some answer is found.

"We are only little parts of a big project. This project will continue for many more years, involving many more people," Slaybaugh said.

"This year we were able to give out 24 awards of $500 each. This increase has shown the remarkable growth of our donor program."

Bacteria can be reduced with proper handling of meats

E. coli can be isolated in one to four percent of all meat in the stores, Phebus said.

"You can say that any hamburger you buy might have E. coli, so you have to handle it properly," Phebus said

The bacteria in the meat is not always bad, said Dr. Marty Vanier, veterinarian and animal science research assistant.

She also stressed that food, especially meat, should be handled properly.

Proper handling methods include keeping hot foods hot and cold foods cold, keeping kitchens, utensils and hands clean and cooking hamburgers to an internal temperature of 160 degrees.

Vanier said it is not true that other cuts of beef, such as steak, need to be cooked to an internal temperature of 160 degrees to kill E. coli.

"E. coli live on the surface of the meat and don't bore into it," Vanier said. "By the time the center of a steak is medium rare, the outside has been cooked to a high enough temperature to kill any bacteria."

However, the grinding of meat to make hamburger spreads any bacteria, making it necessary to thoroughly cook burgers, she said.

"Bad bacteria may always be there, but they're usually outnumbered by good ones. When you get sick, something is out of balance," Vanier said.

possible delayed graduation date and being cut off from friends and family.

Financial compensation, real work experience and possible permanent employment with the co-op company upon graduation are some of the advantages.

"The experience is tremendous in terms of students getting to work in different areas of the profession," Gowdy said. "They learn what their interests are and what opportunities are available."

The College of Engineering has had a co-op program since 1963. Gowdy said co-op has traditionally been a part of engineering programs across the nation.

"Co-op is the experiential education program that gives students the opportunity to apply theoretical knowledge learned in the classroom to real-life situations," Herzog said.

She said the comprehensive co-op program will enhance the experiential work opportunities currently being offered to K-State students and allow more students to have these opportunities. Herzog said she is especially excited about working with arts and sciences majors.

"Even someone like IBM has a need for a fine arts major. Students just need to approach it with an open mind," Herzog said.

The new co-op office is located in Holtz Hall.

Wichita sports arena has few fans

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WICHITA — A proposal for a downtown sports arena overcame its first obstacle Tuesday when the Wichita City Council voted 7-0 to put the plan on the April ballot.

Wichita/Sedgwick County Officials of Partnership for Growth are preparin a campaign to help sell the public on a half-cent city sales tax to pay for a $61 million arena.

On the other side, a group called the Kansas Taxpayers Network is going to fight the plan to build an 18,000-seat sports arena.

County commissioners, who have complained that an arena could take business away from the Kansas Coliseum, made no effort Tuesday to stop the council's vote.

Council member Greg Ferris developed the arena proposal with the help of businessman Don Slawso. Ferris said the arena would attract top entertainers and sporting events and help revitalize the city's core.

Center serves international students

Variety of programs assists,encourages cultural awareness

ROBBIE SPEARS
Collegian

The International Student Center at K-State serves 1,121 students from 95 different countries in many different ways.

There is one student from Somalia, one from Zimbabwe, 69 from Taiwan and 212 from China. This is just the tip of the iceberg — there are many more students from countries all around the world.

Director of the International Student Center Donna Davis said the opportunity for American students to interact with international students is an important one because both can benefit.

"I think it is important because it adds the international dimension to the University and exposes everyone to a wealth of knowledge and a better understanding of each other," she said.

"There is no place in the world that anyone can go to interact with so many different people, but at a university."

Larry Thorpe, assistant foreign student adviser, said he tries to give the students some practical advice they need to get through all the red tape.

"There is a lot of paperwork involved. Students look to the center to help them go through most of the paperwork once they get here,"

Thorpe also said that the center helps maintain students' visas and immigrant status.

"We try to keep students updated on the new immigrant regulations," Thorpe said.

There are many programs and benefits eligible to the students.

"We help students apply for practical training and work toward finding a job once receiving a degree," he said.

People also look to the center for problems and concerns they have when adjusting to student life at K-State, Thorpe said.

"Sometimes, people come to us with personal problems they are having, and we refer them to others that can help them," he said.

Another program the center offers is the Conversational English Program.

"This program is designed to help international students who want to improve their English by getting together with an English speaking K-State student once a week and conversing," he said.

Thorpe said he thinks the conversation class provides a great opportunity for the international students.

"It's also a good way for students to learn about other parts of the world," he said.

Motaz Hourani, graduate student in business administration and president of International Coordinating Council, said he works a lot with the students and helps coordinate activities between groups.

"As president, my job is to basically coordinate between the different international organizations," he said.

Hourani said each different group has different projects and events to get together and discover more about different cultures. Overall, there are about 20 different international student organizations.

Hourani said students come to K-State for a variety of reasons.

"K-State is a great university. Different students come here on the basis of what they want to study," he said.

Hourani said international week is coming up in the first of April.

"I would like other K-State students to try to find out about different cultures by attending many different events," Hourani said.

"There is no place in the world that anyone can go to interact with so many different people, but at a university."

Huet-Vaughn appeals Army decision

Military court asked to overturn desertion conviction of Kansas doctor

ASSOCIATED PRESS

FALLS CHURCH, Va. — A military appeals court was asked Tuesday to overturn the desertion conviction of an Army Reserve doctor from Kansas who refused to serve in the Persian Gulf War.

Dr. Yolanda Huet-Vaughn, of Overland Park, served eight months in prison after she was court-martialed for leaving her medical unit when it was called to active duty in 1991.

During a hearing before the Army Court of Military Review on Tuesday, Huet-Vaughn's lawyer argued the trial judge had erred in excluding evidence that would have helped to explain the doctor's actions.

Huet-Vaughn said she believed she acted according to international law and had an obligation to alert the American public to what she saw as impending war crimes, said her lawyer, Louis Font, of Boston.

She was not permitted to fully testify about her intent and motivations, Font said. A number of other potential defense witnesses were not allowed to testify about her anti-war views and the lawfulness of the Gulf War, he said.

Hillary Richard, a lawyer for the National Emergency Civil Liberties Committee in New York, also argued on behalf of Huet-Vaughn and said it was a dangerous, unlawful, unconstitutional precedent to disallow such evidence that was vital to the defense.

A lawyer for the Army, Maj. Donna Barlett, contended Huet-Vaughn's motivations were amply aired at the court martial, and the disallowed testimony was irrelevant because much of it focused on the legality of the war.

Huet-Vaughn's motives, however noble, did not provide a defense for desertion, Barlett said.

If Huet-Vaughn's case is overturned, then any soldier could say in any conflict when war crimes might occur, 'I'm not allowed to go,' Barlett said. That's not a defense.

A three-judge panel of military officers took the case under consideration after oral arguments. There is no deadline for a decision.

If the conviction is overturned, Font said, the Army would have to decide whether to seek another trial or dismiss the case.

Huet-Vaughn was sentenced to 30 months, but the sentence later was cut in half. The Army granted her clemency and released her from a military prison in April 1992.

Huet-Vaughn, who practices medicine in Kansas City, Kan., attended the hearing and said afterward she would continue to press her case if the appeal was denied. The next step is the U.S. Court of Military Appeals.

"It is very important to defend the right of a citizen soldier to refuse orders when they feel that it is in violation of international law," she said. "Unless we support our citizen soldier in doing that, we could end up very easily with a situation like what happened in Germany" during World War II.

Roommates try something new

Members of opposite sex succeed with platonic living situation

STEPHANIE HOELZEL
Collegian

It's that time of year again, when students are beginning the search for the perfect roommate.

Some students decide that living with a member of the opposite sex is the solution to their living situations.

Jeff Paszkiewicz, senior in finance, lives with two women. His roommates are Kara Moody and Andrea Rowley, senior in economics.

It was strictly by accident that these three ended up living together.

"We were supposed to have another girl live with us, but she backed out at the last minute. We knew Jeff, and he was looking for a place to live, so, we asked him to be our roommate," Rowley said.

Explaining the living arrangements to parents was not always an easy thing to do, Paszkiewicz said.

"I had to take my mom to the mall in St. Louis, that way I knew she wouldn't freak out when I told her that I was going to live with two girls. I knew she was upset because she used my full name. I managed to talk her down and explain that they were only friends. Now she doesn't have a problem with it," Paszkiewicz said.

Rowley had a tough time convincing her mother the situation really was platonic.

"I told her that it wasn't any different than when I lived in the dorms. I lived in Goodnow Hall, and there were always guys around. She finally agreed and told me that she trusted my judgment," Rowley said.

Tom Kienstra, senior in anthropology, is in the same situation as Paszkiewicz. Kienstra also lives with two women, Kellie Pollock, senior in hotel and restaurant management, and Leslie Shepley, senior in arts and sciences.

"I've known Kellie and Leslie since our freshman year in the dorms. My parents didn't have a problem with the arrangement," Kienstra said.

Pollock and Leslie lived with another guy prior to Kienstra.

"We enjoy having a guy live with us. I don't think we could handle living with another girl. Guys add something different to the apartment," Pollock said.

Men and women living together platonically is much different than couples who live together.

"We all have our own rooms, and we do our own thing. All three of us have our own lives. It's rare when we're all here together," Pollock said.

Living with members of the opposite sex can be intimidating, at first, when it comes to dating. But, once the shock wears off, it really isn't an issue anymore, Rowley said.

"We don't lose dates because we live with someone of the opposite sex. Guys have been known to make jokes about it though, especially when they first find out who I live with," Rowley said.

With some platonic relationships, each roommate has his or her own life to live, Pollock said.

"Leslie and I have boyfriends, and Tom has a girlfriend. We spend a lot of time doing our own thing rather than being all together," Pollock said.

They also have bad times.

"We're pretty blunt, and we don't hesitate to let one another know when something is bothering us," Paszkiewicz said.

Communism lives on

Yeltsin is target of demonstration at Kremlin

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOSCOW — Rallying behind red flags and portraits of Lenin, more than 10,000 supporters of Communism marched to the Kremlin on Tuesday to denounce President Boris Yeltsin and urge the military to rise against him.

"The walls of the Kremlin are not shaking from our cries. The people inside are shaking!" hardline legislator Sergei Baburin declared over loudspeakers to the biggest pro-Communist demonstration in months.

Yeltsin was on vacation at his country home outside Moscow, and there was no immediate response from his administration to the outpouring of discontent.

Two years ago, equally large protests by Yeltsin supporters helped bring him to power. But his supporters virtually surrendered the streets to pro-Communists this year and last year.

Yeltsin appears to pay little attention to the opposition demonstrations, despite the importance of public opinion as Russia heads for a possible referendum on the powers of the presidency. A defeat in the nationwide vote in April could cripple his economic reforms or even force new presidential elections.

The rally came on Defenders of the Fatherland Day, known as Soviet Armed Forces Day until the Soviet Union collapsed in 1991.

Leading the march were 10 rows of officers in greatcoats and tall fur hats, marching in lockstep 15 abreast and singing revolutionary songs.

They were followed by mostly older Muscovites, pensioners and veterans, many wearing war medals on their breasts.

Also on foot, surrounded by admirers, were several men accused of leading the failed August 1991 coup, including former KGB Chairman Vladimir Kryuchkov and former Prime Minister Valentin Pavlov.

Police sealed off central Moscow to traffic, although the crowd — variously estimated at 10,000 to 30,000 people — was allowed to rally in Manezh Square, adjacent to the Kremlin. Riot troops in buses blocked the entrance to Red Square, but there were no clashes.

Some marchers cursed as they passed the Western cosmetics and clothing stores that have mushroomed in the past year on Tverskaya Street, formerly Gorky Street.

"We don't need this barbaric capitalism," said 67-year-old Ivan Chubukov.

"Under socialism, those who worked had enough to eat. Now it's the opposite. Those who work honestly can't afford to eat," said Yekaterina Kokoshina, 65.

Many of the marchers carried hammer-and-sickle flags and portraits of Lenin and Stalin.

Anti-American and anti-Semitic banners also were common. "Yeltsin Is an Agent of the CIA," said one. "The Russian People Are Victims of Zionism and Yeltsinism," said another.

Speakers at the rally accused Yeltsin and his defense minister of destroying the morale and combat-readiness of the army.

Russia's military has shrunk by half, to less than 2.5 million soldiers, amid budget cuts and rampant draft evasion.

Many marchers said they hoped the army would seize power.

"The military is the only way out. It should restore order. Civilians will just keep on arguing while the country falls apart," said Viktor Kosarev, 85.

In a TV interview on the eve of the holiday, Grachev denied the military was ready to revolt against Yeltsin.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Rejection is just a part of life

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I wonder if the fact that I am from Bombay, India, will change the way in which you view my problem, but I'll tell you about it anyway.

A couple of years ago, when I was in the 12th grade, I saw this girl in Bombay and fell instantly and madly in love with her. I don't know what it was about her that made me feel so strongly, but I can say one thing with conviction — I have never felt that way about another girl, neither before nor after. Please believe me when I say that I have known many attractive girls (and I don't look very bad myself).

I did not know anything about this girl, and two weeks of futile search failed to find any common link or acquaintance that could help me get introduced. I decided, unfortunately, to try the "direct approach" method as a last resort.

As you can guess, the result wasn't good. She turned me down — refused to even be friends with me, which was all I had asked her at the time. And she didn't even know me!

This incident has had a devastating effect on my life, and I can't get it out of my mind. Since then, I have not been able to bring myself to express my feelings to, or propose to, any girl toward whom I have felt romantically inclined lest I may, once again, suffer that acute sense of shame and disgrace at myself for being rejected. Any sense of self-respect, ego or pride that I still have would be totally destroyed if it were to happen again.

My problem is I realize I'm missing out on something I could have if it were not for this fear of rejection that pervades my being and has shackled me to being alone. I am unable to get myself out of this mental abyss. I would appreciate it if you (or anyone else who has been through a similar situation, I wonder?) could give me some advice on how to cure myself and be free of this problem.

Anonymous

DEAR CONCERNED,

Whoa! Give yourself a break. Being rejected once in the 12th grade by a girl you didn't even know does not mean you have to become a hermit.

Rejection is a natural, necessary and painful part of dating. Odds are that if you continue to date, you will be rejected again. Odds are also that you have rejected someone in your lifetime, too.

When a woman rejects your offer for a date, she is doing just that — she is not trying to clobber your ego or leave you emotionally devastated.

Don't give up. The next time you feel like asking a woman out, relax and just do it.

CONFIDENTIAL TO JUST FRIENDS?,

I wouldn't pursue a romantic relationship with the object of your desire. He has been an understanding friend at a time when other friends have forsaken you. If he is interested, he will make the move. Don't read too much into friendly conversation.

Opponents of suicide doctor want medical license revoked

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SACRAMENTO, Calif. — Officials began trying to revoke Dr. Jack Kevorkian's California medical license Tuesday for helping 15 people commit suicide in his home state of Michigan.

"This man is no angel of mercy," said Dixon Arnett, executive director of the Medical Board of California. "He is unfit to practice in this state or any other."

Kevorkian, reached by telephone in Michigan, called the action "nice Gestapo tactics" and said the California officials were worse than Nazis.

But the 64-year-old retired pathologist, whose Michigan medical license already has been suspended, said he wouldn't attend the California administrative hearings.

"Why bother?" he asked. "They don't listen to reason. They don't know me, and they don't know what I do."

Arnett and Assistant Attorney General Al Korobkin announced they had begun proceedings to suspend and then revoke the license Kevorkian received in 1957. They accused Kevorkian of unprofessional conduct in helping 15 patients, including two Californians, end their lives.

"This case is whether a physician has a right to assist suicide," said Korobkin. "That is prohibited in California. It is prohibited in most states of the U.S."

Kevorkian has been able to help people commit suicide in Michigan because the state had no law against it. But a temporary ban is scheduled to take effect March 30, and legislation that could move that date up advanced in Michigan's Legislature on Tuesday.

Arnett said the state Office of Administrative Hearings could suspend Kevorkian's license in as little as two weeks. Kevorkian could appeal to the courts. If he practiced medicine in California without a license, he could face misdemeanor charges and up to a year in jail.

"He is advertising that he is a physician by validity of his current California license to prospective patients-victims," Arnett said. "As far as we know he is not licensed in any other place. By suspending his license here, we are upping the ante for Doctor Kevorkian."

But Kevorkian said, "The license is immaterial to me as long as I can help suffering humans."

Kevorkian has promised to defy Michigan's upcoming ban on assisted suicide, and in Lansing, Mich., on Tuesday, the House Judiciary Committee approved Senate-passed legislation that could help Kevorkian's critics move up the effective date of the assisted-suicide ban.

Kevorkian's opponents have said they might use the bill, which would exempt hospices from the suicide law's felony provisions, to make the overall anti-suicide ban take effect immediately upon being passed and signed by the governor.

"This man is no angel of mercy. He is unfit to practice in this state or any other."

U.S. Postal Service can challenge stamp costs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A federal appeals court ruled Tuesday that the U.S. Postal Service can challenge proposed stamp prices in court over the objections of the president and the attorney general.

When Congress removed the postmaster general from the president's Cabinet in 1970, a key intent "was to give the Postal Service more independence from political pressures," said a three-judge panel of the U.S. Court of Appeals.

Explaining its order last month that effectively stopped then-President Bush from firing the Postal Service's board of governors, the panel said Congress never intended for the attorney general to be the final arbiter of stamp prices.

"When such disputes do arise, Congress has clearly expressed its will that the courts, and not the Department of Justice, resolve them," said Circuit Judge Patricia Wald.

Concurring in the 37-page unanimous decision were Circuit Judges Stephen Williams and Karen LeCraft Henderson.

The dispute arose in 1991 when the Postal Service decided to challenge in court a decision by the independent Postal Rate Commission to establish a new 27-cent stamp for computer-coded mail.

The Postal Service opposed the special rate, but the Justice Department sided with the rate commission. When a majority of the Postal Service governors decided to hire an outside attorney to press a court challenge, Bush threatened to fire them if they didn't back off.

Shortly before leaving office, Bush replaced one of the Postal Service's 11 governors, but he was enjoined by a federal judge from carrying out a mass firing. The appeals court, meanwhile, has given the Postal Service and the rate commission until April 16 to file papers in the underlying dispute over the discount stamp.

HEALTH CARE

Benefit delays cause problems for many

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WASHINGTON — A rare disease is strangling Carol Williams' organs and stealing her sight. She's 46 and afraid she may die before the government decides whether she deserves federal disability and health care benefits.

Now, President Clinton wants to spend $302 million this year to modernize Social Security computers and to pay overtime and extra workers. His goal: quicker benefit checks for hundreds of thousands of Americans, too sick to work, who now wait months for a decision.

"People die; people get evicted; people go without medical coverage. The delays are atrocious," said Peter McKee, a Seattle attorney who specializes in Social Security cases.

Clinton included the $302 million in his economic plan, which also calls for spending $1 billion during several years for automation by the Social Security Administration.

Ron Pollack, executive director of Families USA, said extra spending to process disability claims would be welcome relief.

"The waiting times have been extraordinarily long, and a lot of people have suffered terribly waiting for benefits. Not only were they without the income the needed, but it often meant they were not getting the medical attention they need," Pollack said.

Families USA, a consumer group concerned with health care costs, said people who seek disability benefits this year will wait an average of 189 days before the Social Security Administration rules on their initial claims.

But the agency said the average wait will be 110 days, down from 126 days during parts of last year. Its long-term goal is 60 days.

Williams, who has an autoimmune disease, applied for Social Security disability insurance in November.

State considers open admissions

Proposal would require students to meet requirements for acceptance

ASSOCIATED PRESS

TOPEKA — A legislative committee Tuesday took up an issue that won't seem to go away — setting admission standards for state universities.

Two university presidents and two Kansas Board of Regents members testified before the Senate Education Committee in favor of a qualified admissions bill.

The Legislature has rejected the proposal in the past, but Republican leaders have included it this year in an education reform package.

"I think this is an idea whose time has come," said Kansas State University president Jon Wefald.

Under the bill, students would have to meet one of several requirements to be accepted into any of the six state universities.

They would have to have a grade point average of at least 2.0 on a 4.0 scale in a college preparatory curriculum, score at least 23 on the American College Test and graduate in the upper third of his or her high school class. Also, everyone would have to hold a Kansas mastery of essential skills certificate.

The mastery of essential skills certificate does not exist at the moment. A bill that would create a test for 10th graders to earn the certificate has been introduced.

Under the admissions bill, up to 15 percent of the incoming freshmen class could be admitted without meeting the standards. The standards also would not apply to anyone 21 or older.

"There are plenty of safety valves for anyone who falls through the cracks for whatever reason," Wefald said.

Wefald and others said the main intent of the proposal is to encourage high-school students to take their studies more seriously if they plan to go to college.

Shirley Palmer of Fort Scott, a regent, said the standards would not reduce the number of admissions at any of the schools. The bill, however, would reduce the number of college failures, Palmer said.

"The whole philosophy is, let's help them be successful after they get there," she said. "We should not be sending our kids to college if they are not prepared."

She said Kansas is the only state in the nation that does not have some type of admission standards.

"To me, that's an embarrassment to the state of Kansas," she said.

Also testifying were Emporia State University President Robert Glennen and Rick Harman of Prairie Village, another regent. Opponents are scheduled to testify Wednesday.

The Legislature has been debating creating some minimal admissions standards for the state's universities for several years. Sen. Dave Kerr, R-Hutchinson, the committee's chairman, said there is always a chance the bill will pass this year.

"If it does, it will be by the slimmest of margins," he said.

Puppets teach children about disabilities

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Chris Phelps and Jeff Kautz, Pi Kappa Phi members from Maryland, give a puppet show to Bluemont Elementary School third graders Wednesday afternoon.

Demonstrations raise awareness, understanding

MICHELLE SMITH
Collegian

Two members of Pi Kappa Phi fraternity are putting on puppet shows throughout the country to raise awareness of people with disabilities.

The shows are targeted toward grade-school children. By the end of the semester, almost 6,000 children will see the show, said Jeff Kautz, sophomore in elementary education from Lenore Rhyne College in Hickory, N.C.

Kautz and Chris Phelps, a graduate of Touson State University in Baltimore, Md., have already performed for about 2,500 grade-school students. The program, called Kids on the Block, is part of the Pi Kap's national philanthropy, PUSH, People Understanding the Severly Handicapped.

The puppet shows were started in 1976 by a teacher in Columbia, Md., who had a child in class with cerebral palsy. She created the puppet Mark Riley, who suffers from cerebral palsy, to help explain the disease to the other children. The program has grown to include several disabilities, including blindness and mental retardation.

"Basically anything that's out there, they talk about it," Kautz said.

Pi Kappa Phi fraternity bought the rights to the Kids on the Block program seven years ago, but it is not the only organization to perform the programs.

"There are other groups out there that have the puppets and are doing the shows," Phelps said.

The show includes three skits with one disabled puppet and one non-disabled puppet in each skit. At the conclusion of each skit, the children are allowed to ask the puppets questions.

After the skits are finished, Phelps and Kautz hold training sessions to help the kids understand what it is like to be disabled.

To simulate having cerebral palsy, the children put socks on their hands and try to tie their shoes. The socks help demonstrate the loss of muscle control that is associated with the disease.

One of the activities to demonstrate blindness involves children trying to point at the sounds of a beeping ball with their eyes closed.

Melinda Rowe is one of the third-grade students at Bluemont School who saw the show. She said she only had few problems with the activities, but other students seemed to have more difficulty with them.

"It took him longer to tie his shoe than it took me, and he started after I did," Rowe said in reference to the boy sitting next to her at the program.

Other students chose a favorite puppet. Craig Bojorquez, also a third-grader at Bluemont School, explained why the puppet with cerebral palsy was his favorite.

"I liked Mark because he was in the wheelchair, and I have met people in wheelchairs lots," Bojorquez said.

Connie Schwandt, third-grade teacher at Bluemont School, said the program is a good reminder to the children that all people are not the same.

"We all have our differences, our strengths and our weaknesses," Schwandt said.

This reminder is especially important now that children with disabilities are being integrated into regular classrooms.

So far, the children are very accepting of the differences, Schwandt said.

Kautz and Phelps will be giving a program at 7 p.m. in Bluemont 101, said Aaron Green, sophomore in arts and sciences and philanthropy chairman for the local Pi Kap chapter.

Analysis to be made of Jardine

WADE SISSON
Collegian

Emotions rose to a fever pitch Tuesday night at a work session for residents of Jardine Terrace Apartments.

The session, sponsored by the Jardine Mayor's Council, offered residents a chance to express their thoughts about recent allegations of segregation at Jardine.

By meeting's end, the five Jardine mayors who were present at the session announced their decision to complete a door-to-door statistical analysis, to determine if segregation does exist at Jardine.

"We're going to try to do some kind of analysis to see what buildings have a segregation problem," John Askew, a Jardine mayor and senior in education, said. "If it's just two buildings, it may not be as big a problem."

Charles Walters, executive mayor of Jardine, said it was the council's responsibility to complete the analysis.

"All we have to go on now is what we perceive," he said. "We need facts."

Nine international students attended the session, as did Susanne Tunstall, the family housing coordinator at Jardine, for the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

Discussed at the meeting was the statement, which is attributed to Tunstall, that the rule in placing

Rental inspection resolution goes to Senate

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

A resolution concerning the inspection of rental property in Manhattan will be presented to Student Senate Thursday night.

If the resolution is passed, a representative from K-State will present it to the Manhattan City Commission at a meeting Tuesday night. This presentation would alert the commissioners to students' concerns and ask that they give the idea serious consideration.

"This is not something that I'm suggesting for the first time. I've presented it over many years," said Phil Anderson, instructor of speech and one of the authors of the resolution.

Anderson is also a landlord with 11 rental properties in the city.

He said he anticipates that the resolution will move from first readings into special orders, which would allow Senate to vote on it Thursday night.

The resolution addresses the lack of a mandatory rental inspection program in Manhattan, Anderson said. It also addresses the many K-State students who rent property that is unsafe according to the Building Official and Code Administrators International (BOCA) code.

"Right now, Manhattan does not inspect on a systematic basis, but only when there is a specific problem. It is a voluntary basis," Anderson said.

Many students who rent do not know the standards of what makes a dwelling safe or unsafe, he said.

There may be illegal aspects, such as unsafe gas space heaters that could cause fires and furnaces that are not hooked up correctly, Anderson said.

If the resolution is mandated, there is a question of who would pay for the required inspections.

One solution would be for the city commission to raise taxes or pass the burden of payment to the property owner, which in turn would be passed to the tenant.

Although that would raise rental rates, the tenant would have the satisfaction of knowing the dwelling is safe, Anderson said.

This resolution must be important to K-State students in order for the commissioners to listen, he said. Students must find out which commissioners support the bill, register to vote for the April election and vote for the commissioners who support a mandatory inspection.

Students who want to register to vote in the April election should do so before March 22. The election is April 6.

"The only way this resolution will be considered is if the students vote in April's election for the candidate who supports it," Anderson said.

In new business, Senate will be voting on a recommendation for the amendment of rules concerning the consumption of alcohol at KSU Stadium. Two bills concerning the increase of the Student Publications Inc. fee and a special allocation to the Tae Kwon Do Club will also be voted on.

Three bills will be addressed in first readings in Thursday night's meeting. The first bill is the revision of Student Governing Association campaign regulations and campaign expenditure regulations for the upcoming election. Approval of Business Administration Association constitutional revision will also be read.

The final bill in first readings is an advance to International Coordinating Council from the SGA Foundation account.

"This is not something that I'm suggesting for the first time. I've presented it over many years."

Campaign changes proposed

MICHELLE ROGERS
Collegian

Several changes will be proposed to Student Senate in Thursday night's meeting concerning campaign regulations.

"We tried to keep things broad so that Senate can focus on the specifics," Mary Farmer, junior in history and Elections Committee chairwoman, said.

The regulations had to be modified to include the recent approval of the student body vice president on the ballot and the Union Governing Board.

One change the Elections Committee will present to Senate is the use of banners.

"Only the president and vice president candidates will be able to use banners. There just aren't enough trees for all the candidates to use," Farmer said.

The areas used for the hanging of banners will be on a rotation basis and will be drawn out of a hat.

Another change proposed is the distribution of campaign materials. Candidates may distribute campaign literature on-campus or in any campus building, excluding residence halls and the K-State Union.

Perhaps the most controversial change will be party campaigning. This change would not allow candidates seeking office to be affiliated with a party on the ballot.

However, the candidates will be identified at each polling table as either being party affiliated or non-affiliated.

There will also be proposed changes in the campaign expenditure revisions made to Senate. The amount of money the presidential/vice presidential candidates may spend will decline.

Currently, a candidate may spend an amount equal to the tuition and fees paid by a full-time, in-state student for one semester.

The proposed change will state the combined candidates may spend, in the general election, the amount equal to the tuition paid by a full-time, in-state student for one semester.

Also, the amount of money a candidate for Student Senate, Board of Student Publications or Union Governing Board may spend would be equal to one-tenth the tuition paid by a full-time, in-state student for one semester.

Grad student gets job with Jay Leno

SYLVESTER CHRISTIE
Collegian

A K-State graduate is now an intern with a top talk-show host.

Paul Raehpour, a graduate student in radio and television, is working with Jay Leno, host of the Tonight Show on NBC, as part of an eight-week internship.

Raehpour said it is not a paid position, but he is using it for college credit and to gain more experience in working in television.

Cindy Jeffrey, associate producer/director at the Educational Communication Center in Dole Hall, said Raehpour is being exposed to all aspects involved in producing the Tonight Show.

"If it is one thing that got Paul this job is persistence and his own initiative. He kept calling the guy about it," Jeffrey said.

Raehpour said he got the internship because of his persistence and the fact that he knew a producer through a friend.

"I don't know how many calls I made. I must have called eight to 10 times," he said.

Raehpour said he has no specific job title, but he is involved with many aspects of producing the show.

"I gain experience here and there, nothing too great to speak about, but it is an exciting internship," he said.

Jeffrey said though it is not a paid position, the experience Raehpour is gaining is invaluable.

"He was on the show one night last week. We were so excited we all taped it," she said.

Raehpour said he got on the show out of luck, as he was involved in the rehearsal.

He said he was pulled from the audience by Jay Leno and asked to perform a funny dance for the audience.

Andy Crow, production associate at the ECC, said Raehpour will be able to meet people with power, especially the Hollywood stars.

Raehpour said he is using the opportunity to meet the stars as well as people working in the TV business.

Crow said working as a production assistant in Dole Hall is like being exposed to the real world of TV production.

The experience Raehpour gained here will be highly beneficial to him on his internship, he said. Raehpour worked as a production associate for one year in ECC prior to his internship with the Tonight Show.

KNOW ABOUT ISLAM

With approximately five million Muslims in North America, and since according to many scholars, Islam is the fastest growing religion in the world today, we thought you might want to know something about this faith.

Islam is not an emotive faith isolated from the human factual life in all its spheres. Neither it is a collection of religious rites practiced by " the faithful" individually or collectively.

Islam is a way of life-of a realistic human life in all aspects. This is a system that encompasses the ideological conceptualization which explicates the very nature of existence, delineates Man's place in the universe as well as the final objective of his human life.

The word ISLAM means "surrender," "yielding," "submission" to ALLAH (Arabic word for God, for which there is no plural or feminine). Unlike many other faiths, it does not derive its name from a person, a place, or a tribe, but from the very essence of its own nature. This is not to deny Man's free agency, but rather to realize ALLAH'S (God's) omnipotence and recognize His unquestionable and absolute authority.

Islam expounds and is concerned with the ethical foundations of our lives as much as it is with our social, economic, and political well being. As such the Islamic way of life is not a transient system which fits into a specific historical epoch, nor is it a local system set up for merely a certain generation or a particular environment. It is, in fact, a basic system, inherently universal, whose objective is the dynamic human life which must be exalted in the manner worth of both Man and his Creator.

The ISLAMIC creed does not in any way conflict with the "cause and effect" theory. In fact ISLAM urges to ponder upon the "cause" of practically everything. This harmonious universe, with its physical laws, natural rules and well orchestrated procession of phenomena must have, in the final analysis, an ultimate cause and prime creator. Some call it nature, other accident. Muslims believe it is the one and only universal ALLAH (God). He is one in the sense that He and He alone creates, administers, moves and changes everything. He is eternal, immutable, and unchanging.

Forget the lasers and damn the pyrotechnics.

Forget the stupid bird jokes about the Black Crowes and the Jayhawks playing the same show.

If it was solid rock-n-roll you wanted, it was solid rock-n-roll you got Tuesday night at the Bicentennial Center in Salina.

Crowes lead vocalist Chris Robinson took center stage amidst what appeared to be 100-watt Christmas lights and a massive fishing net, possibly fashioned from strands of hemp, considering the amount of pot rallies these guys have done during the last year.

The jester in green velvet strutted around the stage in pseudo Mick Jagger fashion. It's no wonder this man is so thin. He basically does two to three hours of aerobics every night.

The rest of the band isn't too lazy, either.

Guitarist Rich Robinson (Chris's brother) and guitarist Jeff Cease traded licks that could have cracked the concrete floor. You gotta love these guys when you consider that a good 30 percent of the show was composed of not-so-simple jam sessions.

CRAIG HACKER/Collegian

Lead vocalist Chris Robinson and guitarist Jeff Cease of the Black Crowes perform "Hard to Handle" at the Bicentennial Center in Salina.

This is the true joy of seeing the Crowes in show. They tack on rifts and solos where most bands would only shrug and move on.

Highlights of the show included "Hard to Handle," "Jealous Again" and "Thick N' Thin" off the band's first compact disc, "Shake Your Money Maker."

Chris wailed through "Jealous Again" with a ferocity usually reserved for the apocalypse. One has to wonder how he can carry on like this through an hour and a half performance without losing his voice and becoming tone deaf.

Architects to be selected

RANCE AMES
Collegian

A committee will be interviewing four architectural firms this week in an effort to select the firm to build the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum.

The selection process for the architectural firm began last November, Nelson Britt, director of the art museum, said.

In the first stage of the process, 44 firms submitted materials to be considered, Britt said.

"By late December, we had narrowed those 44 firms down to 20 in the second stage of the process," Britt said. "Seventeen of those 20 firms chose to submit schematic designs to be considered for the next stage," he said.

Tom Rawson, vice president for administration and finance, was on the architect selection committee for Farrell Library and is also on the selection committee for the art museum.

"The panel, which narrowed it down to 20 firms, was composed of two representatives from the art museum staff, two representatives from the College of Architecture and Design, and one representative from the facilities planning office.

"The panel who will make the final decision on the last four firms is composed of a representative of the KSU Foundation, myself as a representative of the University, the director of facilities for the Kansas Board of Regents and an architect from California who is familiar with museum design," Rawson said.

He said because this money was raised entirely from private contributions, there are no formal state guidelines for the method used to select a firm.

"The format for the selection

The first stages of the construction of the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum are getting under way.

Contrary to rumors, the designs will not call for the demolition of the southeast parking lot near the Higinbotham Gate.

"We set aside a zone that would be large enough to build the museum," Michael McNamara, associate professor in architecture, said. "We told the architects that parking and the trees are very sensitive."

Four architecture firms will be coming to K-State on Thursday to present their ideas to the jury, who will select the firm.

Nelson Britt, director of the art museum, said once the firm is chosen a contract will be negotiated.

"Once it is negotiated they will come back to campus and go through a predesign interview process. They will interview us,"

China can't fool the world

THE ISSUE

In an attempt to improve its image, China released several jailed dissidents last week.

WE SUGGEST

The world mustn't settle for shallow token actions from the Chinese government as proof of policy change.

When the Chinese government released several imprisoned high-profile dissidents last week, it claimed that it was anything but a foreign policy maneuver.

All this means is that China would never be good at poker, showing how it can't bluff its way out of a paper bag.

With the Clinton administration's intention to stress human rights in foreign affairs, and with Beijing obsessively courting the International Olympic Committee for the 2000 Summer Games, China has much riding on its image.

China's image, however, has been inextricably connected with the images the world saw transmitted from Tiananmen Square in 1989, when pro-democracy activists were crushed by a seething government, and a reported 10,000 participants were arrested.

The United States' response to the Tiananmen massacre consisted of a few stern, hollow threats and a handful of slap-on-the-wrist policy changes. Since then, China has found a way to keep its Most Favored Nation status, albeit with restrictions.

If the Clinton administration wishes to stay true to its word, it can't allow China to pass off a few token concessions as a 180-degree about-face.

Until the Chinese government realizes that the rest of the world holds the winning hand, it will refuse to put all of its cards on the table.

Until then we should control the pot.

THE ENGINE OF A SENTENCE

Be careful what you say around David. It might end up in the paper.

–Dr. Daniel Ray Frese
Physician. Uncle. Damn hippie (ret.).

DAVID EUGENE FRESE

There is a 49-year-old man in my basement on his hands and knees. Water from a leaky pipe on the cold cement is soaking through his jeans. Blood stains the agitator. Beams from the light in the man's hand elongate my shadow, making me 15 feet tall with spine curved in the basement rafters.

The washer its ownself is broken. Filled with Levi's 550 Zipper Flies, it will fill with soaped icy water, then stall. No agitation. Then one half hour later it will spin for 40 minutes straight and walk three feet from the wall, pulling pipes with its boxed celerity.

The man asked me what was wrong with the washer when I asked if he could fix it. I told him what I just told you.

"But what's it do?" he said over a good telephone connection.

In the basement, my mother is asking if I have studies and probably fearing I will ask her to do my laundry again; my sister is hungry, holding out for Taco Bell. My brother is washing dishes in a restaurant across town. It is Monday night. 9:30. I must remember to call the boss before she goes to bed.

Driving, Wednesday noon with a belly full of pizza.

It is the birthday of Pittsburgh Pirates shortstop John Honus Wagner (.329/2785). Born in 1874, Wagner was rumored to have been a heavy drinker, won eight National League batting championships and once crashed an automobile through a railroad gate.

"These houses look like Easter eggs," my friend says.

The radio says snow. A car is coming straight down Laramie, straight for us. I neither hit the brakes nor pull over so the driver can get past. Instead, I reach for the radio and turn it down.

"My dad does that," my friend says.

What? I ask, keeping an eye on the other driver coming closer, not diverging from her beeline.

"Turns down the radio in stressful situations," she says. "Hard rain. Snow. Big traffic. Like the stimulus is too much to process."

Slowing to 5 mph, I pull over. The old woman in the Cutlass goes by, keeping her good eye on me. The radio is off, and I am the chicken.

The oil pressure seems low, but the lifters aren't knocking or anything.

This I also tell the 49-year-old man on the phone. He has no idea what in the hell I am talking about. Neither do I. Cars do not lend themselves easily to my interpretations.

Under the hood are wires. Battery. Coil. Distributor. Plugs. This is my vague idea. Here, the man sees order. I, bafflement. A six-cylinder to me means better mileage and an inability to fishtail in loose gravel. To him, the world. The universe as motor.

I, myself, aspire to be a man of letters. The engine of the sentence driven across the page by fuel-injected verbs and modified nouns. Once, perhaps in my fourth grade year, he said it made no sense to study English in school.

Referees and umpires are the bane of my father's existence. Though he is the prototype Good Guy, he once refused to shake the hand of the Enemy Coach in White City because of a bad call at home plate.

Before he came to my house to fix the washer. We sit on either side of The Mother at my sister's basketball game. He is reserved, waiting for the coach to put Sis in the game.

A timeout. I turn to him and ask if he feels 50 yet.

Inadvertently, unconsciously, he looks down and says no. At the end of the timeout, he asks if I feel 24. Inadvertently, unconsciously, I smile and say no.

Sports is the algebraic lowest common denominator between our two fractions. I cannot communicate well in his terms of gears and motors and wiring, and sometimes it seems he struggles as well.

Conversations of school and life and impending marriage turn to How 'bout those 'Cats? Not looking too shabby now. Nope. Yeah. Yeah. How's Sis doing? She played quite a bit last Thursday. That's cool. Yeah. Yeah. Well, gotta go. Yeah. Thanks for calling. Yeah. Seeya. Yep.

Then thoughts of saying Happy Birthday turn to columns lamenting the father and a fixed washing machine.

Seabourn tends to stereotype Christians

Editor,

After reading Brad Seabourn's editorial on Feb. 11, "'Fundie's threat is very real," I was amazed at how misinformed and misunderstood Seabourn is about Christianity. Is it really that easy to get your own editorial column in this paper? If so, then why don't we call Bozo the Clown to write an editorial on the importance of etiquette in our society.

It's clear to me that Seabourn has stereotyped all Christians as the "Big Brother" types who are always looking over your shoulder, waiting for you to do something wrong so they can jump on you with their judgments. He couldn't be more wrong. Christians are commissioned by God to spread His word to all who will listen and accept it, and if he thinks it's hogwash, then he shouldn't listen. Those who will not hear His word will be dealt with by God in His own way.

If Seabourn were to truly study the Bible with an open heart rather than a mocking mind, he would actually receive a blessing from it rather than contempt.

I can only pity Seabourn and those who share his beliefs, for they are without hope and will never be truly happy.

True facts of Israel escape columnist

Editor,

Brad Seabourn's articles in the Collegian, even if sometimes controversial, cause his readers to think and discuss the topics he presents, and for that I thank him.

But, presenting his point of view, which usually is presented as the only worthy way of thinking, does not free even him from the basic ethics of journalism — an honest report of correct facts.

In his column on Feb. 18, he was bashing another country for allowing marriage of minors.

Facts Brad, facts.

First, no one can marry a minor in Israel without court permission, and no judge will permit the marriage of a 12-year-old, male or female.

Second, Israel became an independent state on May 15, 1948. Thus, it did not exist 52 years ago when this marriage took place. Yes, even you can open a history book and check your facts.

Final note, to use a little of your style — that sort of bad journalism "would be grounds for considerable eyebrow-raising and throat-clearing" from readers not only in Israel, but wherever people have some knowledge of historical facts.

Snow removal is a serious responsibility

Editor,

I would like to thank the campus maintenance crews for keeping the sidewalks and parking lots clean after the last two snowstorms. Great job!

I would also like to remind the students and faculty that there is a Manhattan City Ordinance that requires all property owners to clean their sidewalks within 36 hours of the last snowfall.

Students, please check your lease agreement. You may find that as a tenant, you are responsible for shoveling the walk and not your landlord/lady. The lease may have a statement as simple as, "Tenant is responsible for keeping grounds and trash area clean." This "keeping grounds ... clean" includes clearing snow from the walk.

If you have any questions, call your landlord/lady. If that does not work, I urge you to call Mike Campbell, the city building inspector at 537-0056. He will then contact your landlord/lady. He will then take further steps, if necessary, as there are penalties involved, usually fines.

Those of us who are tired of walking to school through snowdrifts, uphill both ways, may begin filing complaints with the city. Please clean your sidewalks.

Christianity: An intellectual suicide story

Among the many fallacies associated with religion, none is more widespread — or more disastrous in its effects — than the myth that there is an "absolute moral standard." Yet, this was again the subject when a columnist in this paper recently whined about how our society has fallen prey to the evil clutches of "moral relativism" and how it has lost the so-called "objective standards" of Christian morality.

I, for one, have heard enough.

BRAD SEABOURN

I say Christian ethics are founded on deception and falsehood, and they advocate a vicious and destructive set of moral principles which, by their very nature, work contrary to man's happiness and well-being. Stripped of their cryptic, biblical babbling, Christian ethics are actually more conducive to misery and despair than to happiness.

"If not traditional Christian values, then what?" you might ask.

The most obvious aspect to consider in answering that question is that man is a living entity, a biological organism, who faces the alternative of life or death. It is this struggle for survival that generates the concept of "value." Thus, what we "value" determines how we will act.

What, then, are the "right" goals for us to pursue? What are the "values" our survival requires, and how do we determine them? That is the question that the science of ethics attempts to answer, and that is why we do indeed need a code of ethics ... but not a religious one, and certainly not a Christian one.

I think many would agree that the ultimate human goal is "happiness." Christians would say this can best be achieved through the use of "religious morality." A discerning person would respond by saying that the best method is through reason and the use of a "rational morality." Christian dogma would have you believe that religious and rational morality are the same, but actually they are as different as life and death.

A rational morality is based on "standards," which are principles used to predict the consequences of one's actions; they are statements of "natural necessity." For example, one ought to do "x," if one wants such and such. In rational morality, there is no "ought" divorced from purpose. One does not "obey" a standard; one adopts and follows it in a given context, for a given purpose.

Religious morality, on the other hand, is based upon "rules," which are ultimately derived from the alleged commandments of a supernatural being. A rule is a "sanctioned" principle of action. A sanction is a physical or psychological means of coercion or intimidation used for the purpose of motivating obedience to a principle of action. Religious morality defends an absolute, universal moral order established by a god and existing independently of man. It is thus man's foremost duty to obey the dictates of this supernatural lawgiver.

The most obvious characteristic of religious morality is its authoritarian nature. While a standard appeals to the motive of desiring its goal, a rule appeals to the motive of fearing its sanction. To the question, "Why should I do this?" religion answers, "Because it is the will of God." To the further question, "Why should I obey the will of God?" religion answers, "Because he will reward or punish you accordingly, either in this life or in an afterlife." Religious morality thus relies on the crudest form of sanction: the threat of physical force — which is manifested by the Christian doctrine of hell. But that is not all.

Recall that a sanction may be psychological as well. A physical sanction causes the emotion of fear, but a psychological sanction causes the emotion of guilt. Religions (particularly Christianity) have long recognized the importance of inculcating a sense of guilt in order to motivate people to obey God's rules, and Christianity has effectively done so through the most effective sanction ever invented: sin.

Sin is disobedience to God, and for the Christian this represents something monstrously evil. Included within the concept of sin is a negative moral evaluation, so that the admission of sin entails an additional admission of evil or wrongdoing. This directly undercuts a person's sense of self-esteem, which adds to its effectiveness as a manipulative device. However, this concept ultimately leaves the Christian with the following example of circular reasoning: "One should not disobey God, because to do so is a sin. And what is sin? Sin is disobeying God."

Guilt and fear, not love, are therefore the fundamental emotions that Christianity seeks to induce. This stands in stark contrast to the rational conception of morality, where man is of central concern (not God), where man's life is the standard of value (not God's), and where moral principles function for human welfare (not God's).

One can only conclude that the so-called "traditional Christian morality" is truly vicious and enormously harmful. Unfortunately, this view of morality is adopted by many — with the result that millions of unthinking people practice a "morality" that amounts to emotional and intellectual suicide.

Hoopin' with the fourth-graders

VINCENT P. LaVERGNE/Collegian

Julie Sahlfeld, junior in elementary education, instructs her fourth-grade basketball team, the Huskers, at Lucky Junior High School. Although the Huskers fell behind 6-0 in the game, they came back to post an 8-6 victory. Sahlfeld coaches in the Manhattan Parks and Recreation winter league.

Student helps with youth basketball teams

SCOTT ABEL
Collegian

Julie Sahlfeld didn't want to leave basketball behind.

A four-year player at Beloit High School, Sahlfeld missed the competition that came with her time on the hardwood.

"I missed basketball a lot because now all I get to do is play intramurals," she said. "I jumped at the chance to do something else."

Now a junior in elementary education, Sahlfeld found another outlet as one of 12 K-State students who coach in the Manhattan Parks and Recreation winter basketball leagues.

The leagues have first to eighth graders of all skill levels who compete in Manhattan grade school gymnasiums.

"I thought that this would be a great experience," she said. "I thought that if I ever teach at the seventh- or eighth-grade level, I could coach junior high if a position was open."

Although she had plenty of playing experience, coaching turned out to be another matter entirely.

"I thought I could do this — I got fourth-grade girls — and I had played basketball, but I ended up talking to my high-school coach. 'What do I do, where do I start?'

"He said that you start with the basics. You start with dribbling. You start with passing — show them how to play defense."

In January, Sahlfeld and the other coaches divided the girls into a six-team league that played on Saturdays.

"For the first couple weeks we had peel-off name-tags. Even during the first few games, I was like, 'You, you and you — go out and play.' We've gotten down just about all of them now."

Sahlfeld said one of the most gratifying aspects is seeing the improvement of the players over the last couple of months.

"Oh my gosh, they've improved so much — in practice and in games. I just cannot believe it. Literally from one Saturday to the next."

Although there have been a lot of players who took it very seriously, she said social-time was the main agenda for some.

"There are a couple girls ... I don't know if they want to be your friend, but they linger around the practices and hang on you.

"You just want to say, 'shoo'. They're just there to gab with the other girls."

Even at the fourth-grade level, Sahlfeld also said the girls quickly discovered their preferred positions.

"They all want to play point," she said. "I don't care if they are 4-foot-7-inches, they want to play point guard.

"I tell them that they don't get the points there — it's a lot better to play down low, get the rebounds and a chance to make the point again.

"I think it's because they think they get the ball and get to dribble a lot. They go, 'OK, when do I play guard?,' and I'll say, 'maybe next quarter.'"

Although the leagues are winding up play for this season, Sahlfeld said she might like to coach volleyball in the fall and basketball next winter.

"I would like to pick up the fifth-grade girls next year — have the same ones and teach them a little bit more.

"I had one parent come up to me the other day and say that her daughter couldn't finish the season because of her ankle, and she said, 'I really appreciate what you've done for my daughter and this whole team.'

"It made me feel good, and made me feel like I was teaching them something — they had gotten something out of it."

COLUMN

Who said hunting season is over?

The weather sucks, the fishing sucks, hunting season is over, and you've got cabin fever — bad.

Do not be discouraged. There is always something to do in Kansas. As long as it is cold, the crows will stick around and provide some late-season shooting.

Here's how to do it. Buy one of those plastic owls — the kind you use to scare pigeons away. Then, through a mail order catalog, buy three or four crow decoys. In the game-call section of some catalogs, they will have crow tapes. This tape is simply a recording of crows attacking an owl.

You will need to steal your roommate's portable stereo, grab your shotgun, A LOT of cheap shells, and a good hunting buddy (either sex is fine).

Call around to the county landfills, and find out if they have any crows. Don't feel silly — you won't be the first crow inquirer of the season. Just ask them if they have any crows residing in their dump.

Drive to the landfill and find a landowner in the vicinity. You won't have any trouble getting permission to hunt crows — they're not exactly a protected species.

RON LACKEY

Find a spot where you can sit, preferably in the sun and out of the wind. If the wind is out of the north, sit on the south side of the shelter. If you are sitting on the south side of the shelter, try to hunt land on the north side of the landfill so you can see the crows coming. Vice versa if the wind is out of the south.

This will help two ways. First, the wind will be going toward the landfill, carrying with it the sound of the owl and crow tape, enabling even far away birds to hear the tape. Secondly, your back will appreciate your makeshift hedge-wood chair.

Place the owl decoy about 20 yards in front of where you will be hiding. The best spot I've found for a set is up on a fence post. Here it is easily seen by the crows, and it draws them down closer to you, making for some interestingly close, quick and difficult shooting.

If you are hunting with more than one person, don't worry about somebody not being able to get a shot. When crows decide to attack an owl, they do an odd thing. They split up, circle around and come in from different directions. So, don't be concerned if someone seems out of the way. They will get a shot.

Group the crow decoys around the owl about three or four feet away. Have a couple on the ground and a couple on the fence or in a nearby tree.

Stick the boom box with the tape, playing close to the set. Simply sticking the stereo in deep grass is usually sufficient. Don't worry about camouflage — the normally weary crow is too furious to look for danger.

Crows hate owls and will attack them viciously. Upon hearing this commotion, it's not unusual for the whole flock to come bombing into your dekes.

This is when the fun begins. Remember, take a lot of shells, be safe and find a good recipe for crow. Do not shoot anything you won't eat. If you need a recipe for crow, write me, and I'll send you one.

Crow season lasts until March 10, open statewide, and there is no limit.

Also this weekend at Red Rock Game Farm, a two-dog, two-man competition. The competition will be timed and most scoring will be done to evaluate the dogs. Red Rock Game Farm is still taking entries for the competition.

K-State soccer team has successful debut

Cats take 2nd in tourney after just 5 practices

TONYA FOSTER
Collegian

After only five practices, the K-State men's soccer team placed second in the first annual Mardi Gras Classic last Saturday and Sunday. The tournament was hosted by Louisiana State in Baton Rouge and consisted of 16 teams from across the country.

The Wildcats — the defending Big Eight champions — lost to Baylor in a shoot-out, 1-0. The single goal that Baylor managed was the only tally K-State gave up during the tournament.

Baylor was the runner-up in the national championship last spring.

"I think we did well for not practicing," K-State coach Victur Atughonu said. "We have a good chance to defend our title."

Goalie Jim Dailey said the team will be working hard to defend its title.

"It's something we'd like to do," Dailey said. "It's something we've been preparing for."

K-State tied Texas A&M at zero in the first round. In its second game, K-State defeated Sam Houston State, 3-0. In the third round, the Wildcats beat Florida State, 3-0. K-State dropped Lamar University, 3-0, in the semifinals.

President and left halfback Brent Carpani said K-State played against some great teams in the tournament.

"Lamar University and Baylor are better than some Big Eight teams," he said.

Dailey said the team did a great job.

"I was very impressed," he said. "We kept a nationally ranked team to 0-0 and lost in a shoot-out, which is anyone's game."

Defender Frank Weeks said K-State hung with the best of them — especially the goalies.

"Both of our keepers did a good job, as well as our defense," he said.

Dailey said K-State became a participant in the tournament because of its conference champions title.

"What Louisiana State did was call around schools they play in the regular season," Dailey said. "They found out we were Big Eight champs.

"LSU was impressed with us, and we have already been invited back."

Weeks said being conference champions gave the team added confidence.

"That was our confidence — to show that the Big Eight can play with anyone," he said. "The school did support us, and I would like to let them know the money was well spent."

STILLWATER, Okla. — Bryant Reeves' desperation three-pointer from mid-court at the buzzer sent the game into overtime, and Oklahoma State jumped out to a quick lead in before beating Missouri 77-73 Wednesday night.

Reeves' first career three-pointer — the 7-foot sophomore was 0 for 1 lifetime — came after Jevon Crudup's trey with two seconds left had given Missouri a 64-61 lead.

After a timeout, Reeves took an inbound pass just across halfcourt, wheeled and threw up a two-handed shot from 45 feet that banked in as the buzzer sounded.

Reeves finished with 27 points and 14 rebounds as Oklahoma State (17-5 overall, 7-4 Big Eight) won for the seventh time in eight games. Crudup scored 23 for Missouri (15-11, 4-7), which has lost five straight for the first time since 1973-74.

Oklahoma State seemed to have things in hand after taking a 41-26 lead four minutes into the second half. But then Missouri went on a 22-5 run to take its first lead, 48-46, with 6:42 remaining.

The game stayed close from there. A driving shot by Lamont Frazier gave Missouri a 61-60 lead with 1:06 remaining. Then Reeves hit one of two free throws with 24 seconds to play to tie the score.

Missouri worked for the final shot and got the ball to Crudup, who hit a 3-pointer from the right wing.

Nebraska, Colorado combine for 56 fouls

LINCOLN, Neb. — Bruce Chubick scored 11 of his 14 points after intermission, and Nebraska hit 19 of 27 second-half free throws to beat Colorado 76-67 in a foul-plagued game Wednesday night.

The two teams combined for 56 personal fouls, and they shot 78 free throws between them. Colorado was 30-39 from the stripe, while Nebraska hit 26 of 39.

Nebraska (18-8 overall, 6-5 Big Eight) looked to make it a blowout in the first half when the Huskers went on a 14-3 run and took a 27-14 lead with 9:58 left in the half.

But Colorado (10-13, 2-9) came back with a 13-1 spurt to cut the lead to 28-27 with 4:48 left. Nebraska led 36-30 at halftime.

Both teams struggled from the field early in the second half, but Colorado whittled the lead away and tied it at 44 on Randy Robinson's trey with 11:14 left.

Nebraska's Eric Piatkowski answered with a three-pointer to give the Huskers the lead for good. The Buffaloes were within two with six minutes left, but Chubick scored six points in a 9-2 Nebraska run that gave the Huskers a 65-56 lead with 3:06 left.

Piatkowski led Nebraska with 16 points, and Derrick Chandler added 12 points and 14 rebounds.

Robinson led all scorers with 20, while Donnie Boyce had 18, and Poncho Hodges 12 for Colorado.

▶WILDCATS SIGN ALL-STATE KICKER

Wildcat football coach Bill Snyder announced Wednesday that Chad Romano, a 6-foot 3-inch, 190-pound all-state kicker from West Palm Beach, Fla., has signed a national letter of intent to play for K-State.

Romano earned 3A all-state honors as a senior at Cardinal Newman High School after averaging 40.9 yards per punt. He also made six field goals, including a long of 41 yards. He averaged 40.3 yards a punt his junior season.

He also earned all-conference and all-district honors in both his junior and senior seasons. He turned down a scholarship offer from Michigan State.

"Chad has the physical size and tools to become a very good punter," Snyder said.

Romano moonlighted as a running back his senior season, gaining 950 total yards, and he is currently an honor-roll student who intends to study pre-law.

Todd, Chad's brother, is a kicker at the University of Iowa.

▶ROBERSON NAMED TO ACADEMIC TEAM

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Wildcat Jerrell Roberson is K-State's sole representative on the Big Eight Academic Basketball Honor Roll announced this week.

Oklahoma's Terry Evans and Missouri's Jeff Warren made the team for the third time. Also repeating from last year were Bruce Chubick of Nebraska and Greg Hester of Iowa State.

The first team consists of Evans, Warren, Chubick and two Iowa State sophomores, Fred Hoiberg and Julius Michalik.

To qualify, a student-athlete must be a regular competitor and have at least a 3.0 grade point average cumulatively or in the previous academic year. First-year and junior college transfers are eligible if they meet the criteria after one semester.

Four members of the Lady Cat squad made the women's team. Forward Kelly Moylan was the only player named to the first team. Lynn Holzman, Joey Ward and Stacy Neal were also chosen to the squad.

Coffin Break to play local bar on tour

Seattle-based band has different sound, a mixed bag of rock history.

KEVIN STRECKER
Collegian

The band Coffin Break has included Manhattan in its seven-state tour and will be performing Thursday night at Charlie's Neighborhood Bar.

"Coffin Break formed in Seattle some six years ago," Peter Litwin, guitarist and vocalist for the band, said.

"While we were in the midst of the burgeoning and much-hyped Seattle scene, we don't feel as if we really belonged with the rest of the sub-pop squad."

Coffin Break's sound differs from that of most bands that have emerged during the "Rainy City Renaissance."

"We're too punk and too melodic to associate us with the Seattle scene. We sound more like we're from California," Litwin said.

Drummer David Brooks said he believes the band's influences are a mixed bag of rock history, including Discharge, Motorhead, Elvis Costello, Husker Dü, the Who, the Beatles and Led Zeppelin.

Coffin Break has toured all across the United States since 1988. Their tour history also includes a stint in Canada in April of 1991, as well as a European tour in September of that year.

"Our fan base grows every year and especially with the new release of an album," Litwin said.

"Our latest album release was in October of last year and was titled 'Thirteen.' We decided to embrace bad luck with the number 13."

This superstition is not the only one the band subscribes too.

"There is reasoning for naming the album 'Thirteen.' 'Crawl,' our previous album, was continually delayed until it finally hit stores, six-months late, on Friday the 13th," Litwin said.

"It shipped pretty well, selling 13,000 copies. On our last European tour we departed on the 13th and returned on the 13th. It was also our 13th tour."

After all, the 13s it's no wonder this was the choice for the latest albums title.

"'Thirteen' will be released in Europe on the 13th and in the U.S. on the 31st, 13 backwards. Could this all be a coincidence?" Litwin said.

Though the number 13 is a running theme, the style of the bands music is not. The music on the new record is a bit slowed down from what they've played in the past, Brooks said.

"This is more of what you are going to hear on this tour,"

Opening for Coffin Break will be local band Roach Factory, recently back from a lengthy trip to Los Angles where they recorded a new demo tape.

Expectations are high, and those at Charlie's expect success.

"There is no way that the place won't be packed. They are also playing in Lawrence on Wednesday night, and I won't be surprised if people come down here just to hear them again," Andrew Holm, entertainment coordinator for Charlie's, said.

Concert benefits band members

MEGANNE MOORE

A benefit concert for the Chris Duarte Group is replacing the band's previously-scheduled appearance tonight at Rhythm and Brews.

Last Wednesday night, all three band members were seriously injured in an auto accident outside of Denver, Colo.

Bassist John Jordan and drummer Paul Mills have been released from the hospital with no permanent injuries, said Cleve, one of Chris Duarte's managers at Pet Sharks management company.

Duarte incurred serious internal injuries, broken ribs and shoulders. He was released yesterday.

The band's sound is a mix of jazz, blues and rock. Duarte has been compared to the likes of the late Stevie Ray Vaughan and Jimi Hendrix

The band had been touring its way from Denver to start a set of dates in Lincoln, Neb., when the accident occurred.

Cleve said the band's van was struck in the side by a semi truck in Adams County, Colo.

"I had talked to John about 15-20 minutes before the accident. So, it was a real shock," he said.

"I can't elaborate right now because we don't have all of the facts. We've got some very powerful attorneys looking into the situation."

In addition to the injuries band members sustained, about $2,000 in cash and some of Duarte's guitar pedals were stolen from the van.

"We're not real happy with the treatment the band has received from that rural community," Cleve said.

They were originally scheduled to play in Manhattan for the second time.

"As soon as I heard about the accident, I got this benefit concert together," Mitch Ulrich, owner of Vital Vinyl, said.

Playing the benefit are the Barnburners, Truckstop Love, Vitreous Humor and special guest Brother Jeb Bolan.

The admission is a $3 donation, and items such as hats, compact discs and T-shirts will be auctioned off. All proceeds will benefit the group.

Streetside Records will be providing the CDs to be auctioned off at the concert.

"I can't believe the great response from so many people. We truly appreciate this benefit," Cleve said.

He said the band will take a minimum of about five to six weeks off from touring.

"I know Chris won't be able to sit around for that long. We've canceled all dates up until mid-March. The group is planning on making its first appearance on March 18," he said.

Black Crowes, Jayhawks rock rafters in Salina

Notable songs from the Crowes latest release "Southern Harmony and Musical Companion" were abundant, yet the edge was not. Slowing it down with "Morning Song," "Seeing Things" and a new release titled "Title Song" released a bit of tension after the onslaught of earlier works.

Strangely enough, the song that impressed me the most, however, was a cover of Bob Marley's "Don't Worry." I would have thought this to be a stretch for the band, yet with the funk these men display live the cheesiness of the moment was kept to a minimal.

Opening up for the Crowes was true talent in its purest form.

If you haven't taken a listen towards the Jayhawks then do. This Minnesota mix of song orientated, guitar purity is refreshing.

Performances such as "Sister Cry," "Settled Down Like Rain," "Take Me With You (When You Go)" and their college radio climber "Waiting For the Sun" make their fusion of country and folk very unique and extremely enjoyable.

committee is similar to the way the state does it, for example, how it was done with Farrell," he said.

The final four firms will be on campus for interviews Thursday and Friday.

Rawson said they hope to choose a firm by Friday.

"However, if we cannot decide between the final two firms, we may visit their offices and some of their previous projects before making a final decision," he said.

Britt said he anticipates the art museum will be completed and open in the spring of 1995.

"We have already collected four of the $5 million needed for the project," Britt said.

Women compete for calendar cover

RANCE AMES

The tenth annual Delta Upsilon's Women of Kansas State Calendar Girl contest begins tonight at Snookie's Bar and will continue every Thursday night through March 18.

There are 24 women competing in this year's contest, said Michael Chance, sophomore in marketing and philanthropy co-chairman for Delta Upsilon fraternity.

There will be eight women competing each night for the first three weeks, Chance said. The judges will select four women each of those nights, and on the fourth week, all 12 winners will compete for the cover spot.

The woman who is selected for the cover receives $500 in cash and prizes, Chance said.

The 24 women were selected from more than 75 applicants. The decision is based on a questionnaire and interview process.

The money raised from the contest goes to the Villages in Topeka, Chance said. The Villages provides homes for troubled children.

Last year, the DUs made more than $2,000, and Chance said they are expecting to make more this year.

The contest consists of formal wear, casual wear and swimwear, all provided by the Loft, Chance said. The contest is a fashion show, not a bikini contest.

There is a fine line between having fun with the questions the girls are asked in the contest and being too suggestive, Chance said.

"We try to keep the contest as clean as we can," Chance said.

The calendar will go on sale at the beginning of next school year, Chance said.

"We will be selling them at fee payment and in the K-State Union Bookstore."

Michelle Oetting, junior in dietetics, is a contestant in this year's calendar girl contest.

"I wanted to do it because I used to be a cheerleader, and I miss being in front of people," she said.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

Floormates not as entertaining as they think they are

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have lived in the residence halls here at K-State for several years now, and I have found my experiences to be pleasant for the most part. I am generally a passive person, but these past two semesters I have been living on the same wing with four other girls who are not very considerate of others who also have to live here.

For example, at least two to three times a week they come home after everyone else is sleeping, and they run around, yelling their drunken responses back to each other and slam their doors every two seconds. Even in those rare moments when they are sober, they still do not know how to tone down their voices so we do not have to hear their conversations.

In the mornings, they take their portable radio to the bathroom while they are taking a shower and turn it up full blast so the wing has to wake up in the morning to "The Eagles Greatest Hits" or Prince.

There's more than what I have stated here, but I hope you get the general idea. They have been confronted several times about disturbing everyone else, but I do not think it phased them because they still persist to be inconsiderate. I want to confront them personally, but I believe they are the type to hold grudges, and I believe they would consider tampering with my personal belongings.

I hope the best solution is for these four inconsiderate girls to read this in your column and to take the hint and realize there are at least 30 other girls living with them who would greatly appreciate a couple of decent nights of sleep between now and the end of the semester.

If you have any other suggestions, such as how to shut them up without using electrical tape on their mouths, my wing and I would greatly appreciate it

TSOTD

DEAR TSOTD (WHATEVER THE HELL THAT MEANS)

If there's one thing that gets my goat it's inconsiderate people. Clip this column out and post it on your wing's bulletin board. As a former dormitory resident, I empathize with your situation. It is a constant problem in dorm life.

I'll address the noisy women on your floor now:

Look you annoying airheads, your lack of consideration for your fellow floormates is completely lame. This morning, turn down "Raspberry Beret" and take a good long look at yourself in the bathroom mirror. Do you realize that the rest of the people on your floor don't find you as entertaining and crazy as you do? In fact, they consider you to be immature and rude.

Change your behavior. Respect and consideration of others are good indicators of people's level of maturity and their character.

Now, back to TSODT (you must send me a letter telling me what the heck this means). If their rude behavior continues, talk with your floor supervisor or dorm director. You pay a lot of money to live in the dorms and are entitled to a certain amount of privacy and consideration.

First stages of art museum underway

Britt said.

After the predesign interview process is finished, the firm will begin making the designs.

The walkways will be an important part of the designs.

"We hope to see the walkways be part of the courtyard entrance to the museum," Britt said.

The museum will be called the Marianna Kistler Beach Art Museum after the primary donors.

"She and her husband donated a $2 million gift, and they are both alumni," Jessica Reichman, curator of the art museum, said.

Reichman said the walkways and the parking are not the only concerns. She said it has been asked that the building match the other buildings on campus, yet have it's own distinctive look. The primary concern is for space for the art collection.

"We want to plan adequate storage space, and project that need into future needs," Reichman said.

The art collection was previously stored in the Art Building. It was later moved to storage space in the KSU Foundation Building.

One final concern is for the display space for the art collection. Reichman said they want to see a flexible exhibition area.

"If we want to close an area down, we want to be able to do that without disturbing the viewer's experience," Reichman said.

Jardine to analyze segregation problem

students in apartments at Jardine has been, and will remain to be, first come, first serve.

The international students in attendance had doubts about the validity of the statement.

Abdellah Laytimi, graduate student in mechanical engineering, said he knows two students from Morocco who applied for housing at Jardine and received a letter from Tunstall saying they could have a furnished apartment.

But, when the students went to get the keys to the apartment, Laytimi said they found they couldn't have the furnished apartment.

"I can tell you why," Tunstall said. "They didn't have their families there and moved into a two-bedroom apartment. We can't move them into a two-bedroom until their families get there."

Tunstall asked what she should do when students request to be placed near their friends.

The response from everyone in attendance was immediate. The first come, first serve rule should be observed at all times.

"It will make our job easier because we bend over backwards and really give it a lot of thought," Tunstall said.

Another statement that sparked debate was one given by the mayor's council last week as its official position on the matter.

The statement read: "We, in having met with the family housing coordinator and the director of housing, have determined that applicants for residence in Jardine Terrace have requested to be situated with like applicants of like groups."

Huai Huang, graduate student in physics, said he was satisfied with his Jardine apartment but was insulted by the suggestion that international students want to be placed with other students of the same nationality.

"It seems like by accommodation you placed people together," Laytimi said. "If I drive through the streets, I'd see a lot of concentration of Indians, for example. People come here to learn different cultures, and not the same thing."

Tunstall said she wanted people who had concerns to talk to her.

"I bend over backwards to accommodate people, and I'm being punished for it," Tunstall said.

Senate approves fee enhancement

Lowell Coon, senior in biology, kicks a board in two while doing a flying sidekick during the opening minutes of Student Senate Thursday night. The K-State/Manhattan Sognahm Tae Kwon Do club performed the demonstration to show senators the need for their support and money. Senate allocated funding for the club.

Student Publications, KSU alcohol consumption dominate debates

MICHELLE ROGERS

After much debate, Student Senate passed a bill regarding the Student Publications Inc. fee enhancement in Thursday night's meeting.

This fee will increase the line-item fee from $4.80/full-time, $2.40/part-time, $.70/summer to $7.80/full-time, $3.90/part-time and $.85/summer.

The enhancement was proposed because of the increase of inflation and a drastic decrease in advertising revenue, said Sarah Caldwell, junior in English and ex-officio member of Senate.

"There was over a $76,000 loss in fiscal year 1993 in the Student Publications budget," Caldwell said.

Arguing against the fee increase was Stephen Seely, freshmen in agricultural economics and agriculture senator.

"All of the people I've talked to say they don't want the Collegian," Seely said.

"I tell them the Collegian might be cut to three days a week, and they've all said 'so what,'" Seely said.

There have been many attempts to cut costs by Student Publications in past years, said Kelly Levi, senior in journalism and mass communications and member of the Board of Student publications.

Those cuts have included reducing travel to cover events, decreasing the number of pages of the Collegian and cutting the distribution and circulation, she said.

Eric Henry, graduate in arts and sciences and arts and sciences senator, said, "If you have something that's top quality, you keep it."

Also passed in Senate was a resolution concerning the recommendation for an amendment to the rules concerning consumption of alcohol at KSU Stadium.

"This will confine the drinking to one area instead of throwing cans all over the stadium. This will lead to less littering," Mike Munson, junior in business and business administration senator, said.

The resolution recommends the Administration amend its alcohol and cereal malt beverage policy to allow the consumption of 3.2 beer before K-State home football games in the southeast corner of the stadium's east parking lot.

A special allocation of $284.08 to the Tae Kwon Do Club was passed in second readings.

This allocation allows the Tae Kwon Do Club to pay a national registration fee and purchase target pads, body shields, sparring pads, headgear, c-gloves, shinguards and boots.

Passed unanimously in special orders was a resolution for a mandatory rental inspection program in Manhattan.

Student Governing Association will send a representative of the K-State student body to the Manhattan City Commissioner's special work session in Manhattan City Hall at 3:30 p.m. Tuesday.

This resolution will strongly urge the city to adopt the most recent edition of the Building Officials and Code Administrators International (BOCA) code.

It also will urge the development of a comprehensive, mandatory rental inspection program for all rental dwellings.

Marines, snipers exchange fire in Somalia

ASSOCIATED PRESS

MOGADISHU, Somalia — U.S. Marines and Nigerian soldiers pounded at snipers with machine guns and grenades for five hours Thursday, shutting down relief activity in this devastated city with the heaviest shooting in weeks.

Three U.S. Marines and two Nigerian soldiers were wounded in the firefight in an area rocked by anti-foreigner rioting Wednesday that left at least six Somalis dead.

Sniper fire hit the hotel where most foreign journalists stay. U.N. headquarters and a relief agency a half-mile away also reportedly came under fire. Most of the shooting came from the Nigerians, who fired without restraint at any niche they believed might harbor a sniper.

In the southern port of Kismayu, about 2,300 U.S. and Belgian troops combed the city for weapons and rounded up fighters loyal to warlord Mohamed Said Hirsi, known as Gen. Morgan. He was under a midnight Thursday deadline to move his forces north of Kismayu or face Western attack.

At least 60 sullen fighters in dusty civilian clothes surrendered in Kismayu. They gave up 43 rifles and machine guns.

Relief workers in Mogadishu stayed in their compounds and aid deliveries were at a standstill for a second consecutive day. A deputy U.N. spokesman in New York, Ahmad Fawzi, said officials were not considering withdrawal of U.N. aid workers from Mogadishu.

The U.S.-led coalition came to restore order and ensure food gets to starving Somalis. But violence in Somalia this week has increased friction between rival factions and raised questions about the ability of foreign troops to maintain order in a nation loaded with weapons but without a government.

U.N. Secretary General Boutros Boutros-Ghali said late Thursday in New York that unrest will not complicate the planned transition to a U.N. command, in which most of the 17,000 remaining American servicemen and women would go home.

"I believe that the situation has been very much exaggerated ... and that the U.N. will be able to do our transition according to the schedule which has been established," he told the Associated Press.

Boutros-Ghali said Wednesday the transfer could take place in several weeks.

In central Mogadishu, the air smelled of gunpowder and smoke drifted along streets near a major traffic circle where Thursday's gun battle started.

More than 400 Marines searched for weapons in houses in the district after the battle, but apparently found little. Traffic returned to the streets after the shooting stopped.

CABLE TELEVISION

TCI to realign channels, lower prices

"I think it's great because some of the 36 channels in expanded basic service are unnecessary. Cable is too damn expensive anyway."

WADE WILLSON

Soon, cable subscribers will not be able to find their TV shows on the usual channels.

Beginning April 1, TCI of Kansas Inc. is realigning its channels.

"The channels are being rearranged for technical reasons," Ron Frazier, general manager of TCI Manhattan, said.

The cable company will group the broadcast channels together and move the satellite channels out of the lower channel numbers.

For example, CNN, one of the satellite stations, will be moving from Channel 5 to Channel 35 in the new configuration.

Another move will be WDAF, an NBC affiliate that broadcasts out of Kansas City. This broadcast station will be moving from Channel 36 to Channel 4.

The broadcast channels affected are KTKA in Topeka, KSHB in Kansas City and WDAF in Kansas City. The satellite channels affected are CNN, WGN and WTBS. All other channels will be in the same place they were before the realignment.

This also will allow the cable company to offer low-cost basic service, Frazier said.

The basic service will include only the broadcast stations, along with ME-U and KTWU (PBS). This service will be offered for $10 a month.

Satellite stations and broadcast stations are offered in the expanded basic service.

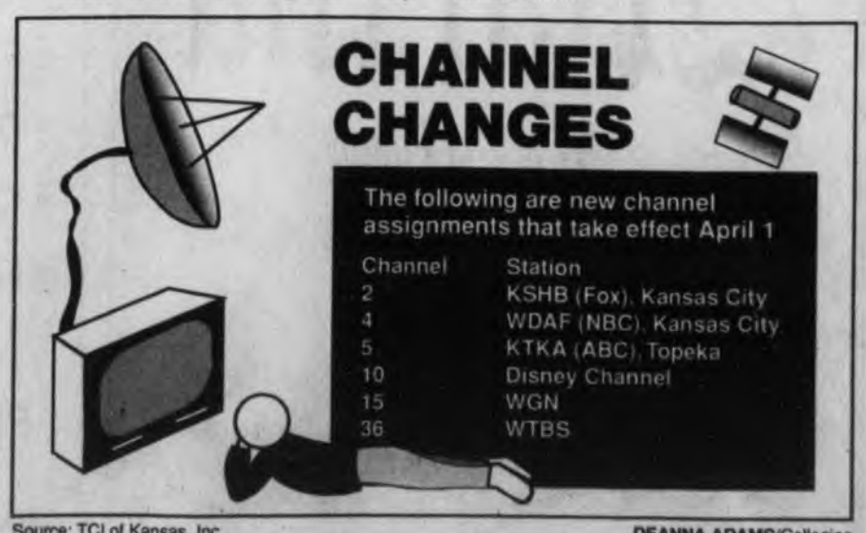
"The realignment also will give customers who subscribe to the basic service the option to get premium channels, such as HBO and Showtime, without subscribing to expanded service," Frazier said.

Wade Willson, senior in vocal performance, said he is considering going back to the basic service and adding one premium channel.

"I think it's great because some of the 36 channels in expanded basic service are unnecessary," Willson said.

"Cable is too damn expensive anyway, you keep it."

Willson and his roommates are currently paying $52 a month for expanded basic service plus Encore and HBO.



Other students also are pleased about the lower price for basic cable service.

Bill Featherston, senior in pre-nursing, said the basic service suits his needs.

"We only watch the networks. So the change is nice for us," Featherston said.

Andrea Brainard, senior in music education, said she would change to the basic service.

"With all the channels, we just do a lot of channel flipping anyway," Brainard said.

▶CAMPUS POLICE RECOVER BIKES, ARREST 3 FOR ATTEMPTED THEFT

WADE SISSON
Collegian

■ People who believe their bicycle may have been stolen may contact the K-State Police at 532-6412.

A vehicle searched by K-State Police Feb. 18 led to the discovery of six bicycles thought to have been stolen.

Campus police found bike parts in a car that had been stopped near Goodnow Hall at 2:50 a.m., campus police investigator Richard Herrman said.

According to the campus police offense report, the driver of the car, Robert C. Oshea, Topeka, was arrested for DUI and theft. Bond for Oshea was $800.

Campus police Lt. Richard Howard said Oshea did not have his driver's license and led police to an off-campus residence.

There, police found the bicycles in the back of a truck, he said.

Oshea's passengers, Travis W. Havenstein, Alma, and Larry D. Johnson, Mexico, Mo., were arrested for attempted theft. Bond for Havenstein and Johnson was set at $300 each.

All three were released on bond.

Campus police are now trying to contact the owners of the stolen bicycles, Herrman said.

The confiscated bicycles are identified as two Trek 21 speeds, two GT All Terrain 21 speeds, one Giant ATX 21 speed and one Cannondale 21 speed.

"We're urging people to look to see if their bikes are missing any parts or if they've still got their bikes so we can get a case," he said.

COMMENTS

"I just feel incredibly guilty. I don't know why. I feel so guilty about taking so many of these. I'm very moved and very shaky and very emotional. And I want to thank a lot of people, but the one person I want to thank is my son, for the love he gave me and the song he gave me."

RESEARCH

Pet bonds influence child development

"I think we are just starting to realize how important the relationship is between children and their pets."

JOHN LYONS
MANHATTAN VETERINARIAN

WENDY BARRETT
Collegian

The relationship small children develop with their pets has a strong effect on their human development, a K-State professor said.

Over the past six years, Robert Poresky, associate professor of human development and family studies, has done extensive research on the bond between children and their pets.

His research began following a grant from the College of Veterinary Medicine in 1986.

"I got together with James Coffman, who was then the dean of veterinary medicine, and we looked at the idea of doing the research," Poresky said.

After receiving a grant for the research, he devised a way to rate the relationship between pets and humans.

Using an empathy test he and his colleagues designed,, Poresky concentrated on studying the emotional and social skills of children between the ages of three and six.

In cases where the children had strong relationships with their pets, he found their emotional and social development to be much higher than children without pets.

Most of the animals involved in the studies were dogs and cats because they are the popular family pets.

Even though 90 percent of the families studied had a pet in the home, the cognitive levels of development varied greatly, he said. This was due in large part to the varying degrees of the human and pet relationship.

The important part of the study was not whether a pet was present but what kind of bond the child had developed with the animal.

Dr. John Lyons, a Manhattan veterinarian, emphasizes the importance of relationships between children and animals.

"I think we are just starting to realize how important the relationship is between children and their pets," Lyons said. "It is so important for our children to develop a human and pet bond because of the proven increase in human development."

BRIAN W. KRATZER/Collegian

Robert Poresky, associate professor in human development and family studies, sits in his living room with his cat, Fuzzy, and dog, Buster. Poresky has done research on the effects animals have on children.

The studies also showed an increase in responsibility when the child took part in caring for the animal.

"The realization that the animal has needs is very important to cognitive development," Poresky said.

The children who took an active role taking care of the pets and established a close bond to their animal scored very high on all levels. The weaker the bond between children and pets, the lower the scores tended to be, Poresky said.

"To determine their level of empathy, I would ask the children questions about how they felt in certain situations. I would ask them how their dog felt when they took him to the park to play,"

Six K-State students have been nominated for the $14,000 Barry Goldwater Scholarship.

The nomination is a great honor, Nancy Twiss, scholar advisor and assistant to the provost for scholarship development, said.

"The Goldwater scholarship is the premier undergraduate award of its type in science and mathematics," she said.

This year's nominees are Dale Embers, senior in modern languages; Keith Loseke, sophomore in math; Michelle Munson, sophomore in chemical engineering; Greg Roberts, senior in physics; Scott Rottinghaus, sophomore in biology and Tanya Williams, senior in chemical engineering.

The scholarships are nationally competitive awards established by Congress and are federally funded. Nominees for the scholarships are chosen based upon what each has done in the areas of science and science research, Twiss said.

"The scholarships will be awarded to those students who have the greatest accomplishments and goals in those areas," she said.

K-State holds the second best record in the nation among public universities for Goldwater scholarships. Its students have won 11 since the program began in 1989. The final winners of the scholarships will be announced in late spring, Twiss said.

Kansas has gas to burn

THE ISSUE

Attention toward the search for viable options for fossil fuels has waned.

WE SUGGEST

Kansas has a big stake in natural gas production and should promote it as the best alternative.

Energy conservation was the word on everyone's lips during the 1970s and '80s. Today, even with environmental concerns taking a high position on the political agenda, the case for responsibly using fossil fuels has dropped from the national scene. That's too bad because Kansas has much to offer.

The Kansas Energy Policy Committee recently released its long-awaited report that recommends the state take measures to encourage the conversion of local government and school district vehicles to compressed natural gas.

This may seem a little overboard, but in the long run the state could turn a renewed interest in natural gas into a profitable venture — the report said that natural gas production could make money for the state if the national usage increased.

Consider that Kansas has 9 trillion cubic feet of natural gas reserves, or 6 percent of the nation's total. In comparison, Kansas produces a little more than 1 percent of the nation's oil reserves.

In the midst of saving trees, dolphins and the ozone layer, we shouldn't lose sight of the aged idea that, as an alternative to fossil fuels, Kansas natural gas can go a long way in keeping our world clean.

TOM LISTER

Kicking the Wal-Mart habit

If I ever stick a gun to my head, I'm going to do it in Wal-Mart. It's not that I want to take anyone out with me, though. I just feel I should give those bored goddamn people something to talk about for a week.

"Brains and skull fragments on aisle eight. Brains and skull fragments on aisle eight ... Thank you. ..."

I want to give those underpaid shopping-cart attendants a chance to dip their souvenir handkerchiefs in my blood. The shoppers can gather around, wearing their plaid coats and ear muffs, watching eagerly as the whole mess is wiped away with a bleach-soaked mop.

I haven't been feeling that suicidal lately, though, and it's a damn shame. Because without a little excitement, Wal-Mart will continue to numb the minds of its shoppers.

It will remain the nursing home of the American consumer.

People can't think for themselves in Wal-Mart anymore. Individuality has been wiped out in the name of efficiency.

You learn this when you write a check there. Cashiers have nifty machines that fill out everything but your signature.

Even the automotive department has caught on. Instead of the old supply catalogues that listed numbers for filters and lights, Wal-Mart has begun to rely on a computer that works by touch.

I needed a headlight this past weekend and tried the machine. No thought was required whatsoever. I kept expecting B.F. Skinner to walk around the corner when I was done.

Maybe that's what workers at McDonald's feel like.

Tell me, folks, what's going to happen during a power failure? We'll all be standing there helplessly, like old men tugging at the waistbands of their sanitary diapers.

The employees are being hit, too. The guys can't grow their hair long or go a day without shaving. They're not allowed to smoke while they help you. They're forced to give us candy-ass farewells like, "Have a nice day!"

Gone are the days of Western Auto and NAPA, when the store smelled like car parts. Gone are the days when you could hear Bachman-Turner Overdrive over the PA system as you waited in line. Gone are the days of personality.

Instead, we're seeing an increase in the plebeian service industry. We're seeing workers who strain artificial smiles because they don't get health benefits working on a part-time basis. Increasingly, we're being helped by people with names like "Glen."

Even workers overseas are being hit. I've seen on television that 12-year-old kids in Bangladesh are producing shirts for Wal-Mart for sweatshop wages.

Do 12-year-olds in America work in factories? Hell, no. They shoplift at Wal-Mart.

More and more, Wal-Mart is bogarting customers away from small businesses. But there are a few small businesses still around, and we can see the fundamental truth they hold, that "no-bullshit" approach to shopping.

It scares me to see portraits of Sam Walton staring down at shoppers like Lenin. We need to stop this, people. We need to resurrect small businesses in America.

The other day, I needed some fresh boxer shorts, and I caught myself heading toward Wal-Mart. For a moment, I felt as if Ross Perot were sitting in the passenger seat next to me.

I stopped my car just short of the parking lot. You gotta fight the power.

THE PRODUCT OF ALL FEARS

"Democracies are necessarily controlled by public opinion, and failing of the means of obtaining power more honestly, the fraudulent and ambitious find a motive to mislead, and even to corrupt the common sentiment, to attain their ends."

— James Fenimore Cooper

SHAWN WOODFORD

Most historians would date the beginning of the Cold War to the breakdown in relations between the United States and the Soviet Union in the period following World War II. I think a more accurate date would be the outbreak of the Bolshevik Revolution in October 1917. It was then that a great fear gripped this country, a fear of the "Red Menace." It was a fear that led the United States to invade Russia in 1918.

It was fear that led the United States to pass the Espionage Act in 1917, and the Sedition Act in 1918. The Espionage Act prevented anyone from doing anything that might give aid to the enemy, incite insubordination, disloyalty or refusal of duty to the armed forces, or advocated treason, insurrection or forcible resistance to any U.S. law. The Sedition Act made it illegal to do or say anything that might be construed as "disloyal, profane, scurrilous, or abusive" about the government, the Constitution, the Army or the Navy.

More than 1,500 people were prosecuted under these laws. One filmmaker was sentenced to 25 years in jail for making a film about the American Revolution because it risked stirring up sentiment against our British allies. Socialists Victor Berger and Eugene V. Debs received similar sentences for advocating resistance to the war. While in jail, Debs received more than 1 million votes in the presidential election of 1920.

The Supreme Court upheld the acts, insisting that a "clear and present danger" overrode the right to free speech.

In World War II, both the freedom-loving United States and Great Britain were eager to make common cause with Stalin's Soviet Union to fight Adolf Hitler and Nazism. Nearly 30 million Russians died defending their country from Nazi Germany. To this toll, one can add roughly 20 million more who perished under Stalin's schemes of forced peasant collectivization and paranoid purges.

Perhaps 50 million dead and the razing of his country explain Stalin's desire to occupy Eastern Europe as a buffer after World War II. Instead, the United States, which lost less than one-half million dead, chose to perceive Stalin's actions as yet another example of Communist perfidy. By 1947, the former allies were yet once again eyeballing each other over a rapidly growing stock of baroque weaponry that now included nuclear weapons.

Once again, fear of the Red Menace gripped the country. In 1947, Congress enacted the National Security Act, which created the National Military Establishment, the National Security Council and the Central Intelligence Agency.

Under the goading of Sen. Joseph McCarthy, the U.S. House Committee on Un-American Activities hunted for evidence that Communists had infiltrated the government, leading to televised investigations of the State Department and the Army.

Anti-Communist hysteria led Congress to pass the McCarran Act in 1950, which made it unlawful to "combine, conspire, or agree with any other person to perform any act which would substantially contribute to ... the establishment of a totalitarian dictatorship." Despite President Truman's objection that the law would "put the government in the business of thought control," it was passed. Despite his exertions, McCarthy never uncovered a single Communist agent in government.

Fear of Communist aggression placed American troops into undeclared wars in Korea (33,000 U.S. dead) and in Vietnam (55,000 U.S. dead). Paranoia on the part of ex-McCarthyite Richard Nixon led directly to the Watergate scandal. Fearing damage to the prestige of the office of the presidency so soon after the Vietnam debacle, Nixon's successor, Gerald Ford, "pardoned" him to prevent a trial from taking place.

Fear of the spread of Communism in Central America led to the Iran-Contra scandal in the Reagan administration. On Christmas Eve, 1992, lame-duck President George Bush "pardoned" six individuals indicted for misconduct by Iran-Contra investigators, in order to prevent a politically embarrassing trial.

In 1989, the Soviet Union relaxed its grip on Eastern Europe, and in August 1991 ceased to exist as a political entity. Many Cold Warriors have proclaimed a "victory" over Communism.

But what have we bought with our "victory?" The military budget hovers at $300 billion annually, and attempts to cut it draw cries from defense workers who have become addicts to the military-industrial complex. Old fears persist, preventing the United States from sending adequate financial assistance to Russia, which is in distinct danger of suffering a relapse into authoritarian rule. Worst of all, freedoms lost to the "clear and present danger" remain lost.

The time has come to stop selling our souls to those who would protect us from our fears.

KSDB radio show misrepresented center

Editor,

I am responding to Sen. Stephen Seely's criticism (if not "bashing") of Lafene Health Center management.

Having money in the bank (much less a surplus) these days is a sign of sound financial management and fiscal accountability worthy of praise rather than harassment and accusations of "mismanagement."

The center has never been in better shape in terms of management and services than it is right now.

I wonder what proof Seely has to back up his statements of "constant complaints" and "bad decisions that are opposed by most students."

I listened to his "Purple Affair" radio program on Feb. 15 when he had two other senators "on panel" who shared his views. Seely certainly did not come across as neutral. Amidst all this "constant complaining," the program received only two phone calls, both pro-Lafene.

I've never met nor spoken with Sen. Seely, but he did use my name in his letter. I must admit he was right in that I hate any distrust of the health center, since I know it is unfounded.

However, I hate the misinformation that causes misconceptions that cause mistrust. Being a student senator is a position of power and persuasion, which I acknowledge. The burdens and opportunities of leadership include knowing the facts, not fiction, before making public statements that influence constituents.

Again this week, I find myself reassuring the K-State community that our staff is competent and caring, and also fiscally responsible. We are dedicated to your health and success. We have nothing to hide. Please feel free to visit and inspect us ... but with an open and reasonable mind.

Crimes of Russians hide behind smiles

Editor,

Gee whiz, Wally. Shawn Woodford said in the Feb. 19 Collegian that Russian (Soviet) Army officers can be our friends and American officers are pinheads.

These Russians that he met were so human they smiled. These officers no doubt smiled as they dropped toys made of plastic explosives to tear the arms and legs off of Afghan boys and girls, and then smiled again.

Yes, these smiling folk have just forced Lithuania into voting in a Communist president after the ex-Soviet Union cut off all food and fuel supplies. Those smiling faces understand what a little starvation, famine and pestilence can do.

General Semenov, that great humanitarian, smiles at the thought of 2,000 smiling Russian Army officers, working hand in hand with the Serbs, slaughtering Croats and Bosnians.

Maybe Woodford and Gen. Semenov have a great deal to share and laugh about after all.

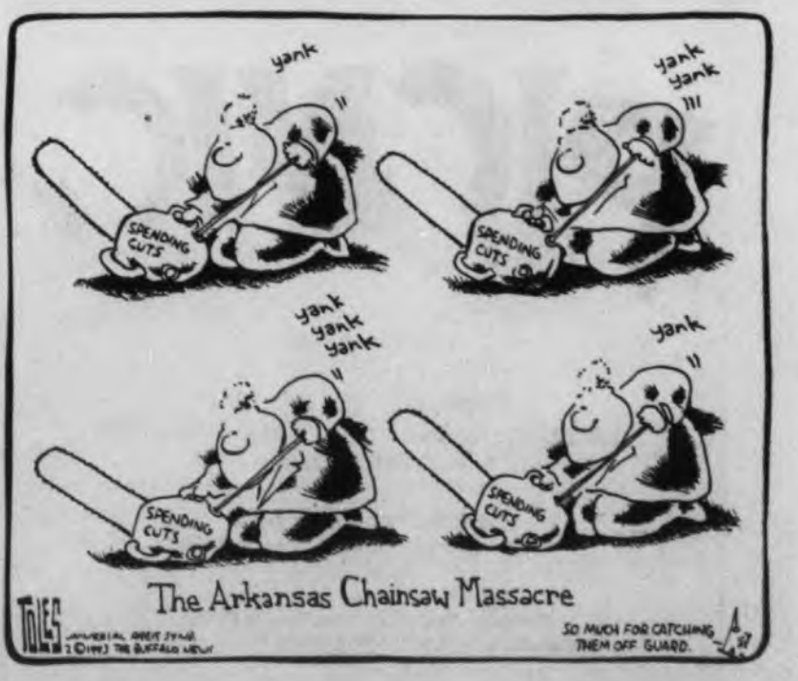
K-State basketball has returned; fans haven't

Editor,



After viewing the Nebraska-K-State game, I have come to some startling conclusions. One thing that surprised me this year was the fans. Here is a clue for the fans who do show up. The team feeds off the crowd's energy. When you cheer loud, they play better. When the team makes a good play, the crowd gets louder. When this is a give-and-take relationship, the team does well. This year, the fans seem to sit back and say "Entertain me. If you have the lead, I will yell for you, but if you get behind, I am going to bitch about how bad the players are and that the coaches suck."

What the coaching staff has done this year has been nothing short of a miracle. Those guys took a bunch of players and turned them into a team that never says die. The will is always there even when the legs are tired and the shots aren't falling.

Yes, it's clear that K-State basketball has returned. The athletic department has hired some great coaches, and the coaches have recruited some great players. But alas, it appears that the toughest job of all lies ahead. That is the job of recruiting fans who are knowledgeable and willing to cheer and lead their team to victory. Only then will the phoenix that is the offspring of the purple pride and K-State basketball truly fly.

BY RICHARD ANDRADE

"We'll have the egg drop soup and a can of your best lubricant, please."

"We hope through our efforts we can raise the sex level of the entire nation. We hope through our efforts we can strengthen our country."

So says Wen Jingfeng, proud manager of China's first sex shop, the "Adam and Eve Health Care Center" (not to be confused with Lafene Health Center, children).

Their slogan? "Get rid of ignorance; head toward science." Cold Shower City, let us tell ya. This guy knows how to get a person feelin' all lusty and everything.

Anyway, you will find no magazines, edible underwear or battery-operated devices of any kind in Jingfeng's establishment. Adam and Eve carry mostly lotions and tonics that use traditional Chinese herbal recipes.

That doesn't mean, however, that you won't find the aerosol can of "Well Men Gem," which is supposed to increase sexual pleasure, or the happy-sounding "Men's Cheerful Tissues," which promises to enhance sexual performance.

By the way, the "Cheerful Tissues" come in a variety of designs to tastefully match any bathroom/bedroom decor.

We're very surprised to see her at breakfast each morning, truthfully

Last Sunday, Jeanne Louis Calment shakily leaned over her birthday cake and blew out three bright candles, which is strange because she's 118 years old.

Calment is listed by Guinness (the world-record people, not the Irish beer company) as the oldest living person whose age can be reliably verified.

The birthday festivities were held in a nursing home in Arles, France, where Calment had met painter Vincent Van Gogh.

Everything was going fine until the poor woman tried to get the party rolling by singing a few songs. At age 118, blowing out three candles and then trying to do anything else without the benefit of a few hours of sleep is extremely reckless. Oxygen was administered and, after a few tense moments, the party resumed.

Unfortunately, by this time, Calment had forgotten where she was and what she was doing.

You say it's your b-day, it's Tex Avery's b-day, too

Happy birthday to you, happy birthday to you, happy birthday dear Tex Avery, happy birthday to you.

That's kinda like something we'd sing to perhaps the greatest cartoon director of all time.

Frederick Bean "Tex" Avery came into this world via Taylor, Texas, on Feb. 26, 1908. Who could have foreseen, back then, that this kid would be the pioneer of the notorious Avery cartoon double-take (eyes out of sockets, jaw crashes through floor, feet slap against head, piercing scream — you've seen it)?

Avery revolutionized the burgeoning animation industry by injecting a strange humor that combined wild exaggeration, tawdry gags and sexual innuendos.

He started work with Walter Lantz of "Woody Woodpecker" fame in 1936, then moved to Warner Bros., where he worked with the likes of Chuck Jones and Bob Clampett. It was here, in January 1939, that Avery's directorial debut premiered with "Golddiggers of '49," starring Porky Pig.

After a stint at Warner, Avery caught on with MGM Studios where he produced every major non-Hanna-Barbera cartoon from 1942-55. Some of these classics include "Daredevil Droopy," "Bad Luck Blackie," "Ventriloquist Cat," "Swing Shift Cinderella" and "Droopy's Double Trouble."

Avery milestones include inventing the character of Daffy Duck and coming up with the famous Bugs Buuny "What's up, Doc?" catchphrase, both during his stint at Warner Bros. studios.

Tex Avery retired from full-time cartoon production in 1955 and died of cancer on Aug. 26, 1980.

The Joy of Java & The Karma of Caffeine

STORY BY MIKE TANI • ILLUSTRATION BY MIKE NIEMANN

Coffee, that magical brew that many people can't seem to live without.

Either black or with cream, sweetened or not, a good cup of java is hard to beat.

Taking the remains of pulverized dried beans, filtering hot water through them and then drinking the concoction may not seem so appealing to some people. But then why has coffee been such a commodity for hundreds of years?

What's the story with coffee?

Names like Arabica, espresso and cappuccino suggest a wide and varied history for the little bean that helps start the day off right.

Coffee, and its equivalent in most languages, comes from the Arabic word "kahwa," which suggests the origins of the drink. Many legends are associated with its discovery. One of which is the story of Kaldi, an Arabian goatherder, who one day found his goats dancing in the meadow. He noticed the goats had been eating from a red berry bush. So, he tried a few and found himself dancing with the herd.

A monk from a local monastery happened upon the frolicking crowd. Being a man of science, he experimented with the red berries. He discovered that the beans within the berries, when dried and boiled, were quite tasty and helped him to stay awake during evening prayers.

While the story of Kaldi may or may not be factual, it is generally believed that the drink originated in Ethiopia. Beans from the Arabica tree were harvested, dried and then cooked in water, which was then drunk while still hot.

The drink, as we know it today, came into general use in Africa and the Middle East during the 15th century. It was quickly accepted and took the form of a social pleasure, enabling the first coffee houses to be established.

As coffee entered trade routes and made its way to Europe, the idea of the coffee house took hold, creating popular traditions like the French cafe. However, the introduction of the stringent beverage was not welcomed with open arms. Its immediate popularity in Italy caused priests to shun the drink, calling it the "wine of Satan." Pope Clement VIII, however, enjoyed the drink so much that he baptized it as a Christian beverage.

Coffee caused controversy in England as well. In 1674, women formed a group called the "Keepers of the Liberty of Venus" to protest the time their menfolk spent in coffee shops. They claimed coffee made their husbands infertile. The men promptly replied, printing handbills and news articles to vindicate their performance and the virtue of their drink.

Controversy over coffee is certainly not as active in today's society. While some people may argue over health concerns, coffee has never been so popular. With more than 50 countries exporting coffee, it is one of the leading commodities in international trade, bringing in more than $10 billion annually.

Americans alone drink more than 430 million cups each day. Manhattan represents a good cross section in that figure.

"We sell over fifteen pounds of coffee every day," Bonnie Zach, manager of Espresso Royale, said.

"That's enough to serve 500 people."

People drink coffee for a variety of reasons. Some might just enjoy a good cup o' joe, others for the caffeine high.

"I drink coffee because I was brought up with it," Bud Wiesedeppe, junior in philosophy and political science, said.

He said he is a regular at the Espresso Royale.

Some people disapprove of coffee because of its high amount of caffeine.

"We want everyone to be able to appreciate coffee," Zach said, "that's why we offer all of our drinks decaffeinated."

Thanks to the wonders of modern science, coffee lovers can now revel in a vast array of flavors and styles. Espresso, the Italian word for "quick brew" is a strong, dark coffee, filtered through steam. Cappuccino is a drink that mixes espresso and frothy milk.

A number of flavored coffees are also available on the market.

The new rise in popularity of the coffee house has hit hard all across the country. Ten coffee shops have recently opened in Kansas City, including Javagia and the Classic Cup. Some see it as a passing phenomenon.

"I think it's a fad" Carrie Beets, junior in women's studies said.

"It's a return of the Beat generation."

Zach disagrees.

"Research shows that the coffee house is not a passing trend," Zach said.

"I think the coffee house is establishing itself as a tradition, much like it has in Europe."

For hundreds of years, people have been going to coffee shops to enjoy a hot cup of coffee and spend time with friends. Plans for the Revolutionary war were thought out in a coffee house in Boston. Writers like Hemingway wrote their best works over coffee.

For being such a little bean, coffee has had an enormous impact on our lives.

Brew it. Drink it. Enjoy.

"Glengarry Glen Ross" — go see something else

CHRISTINA CARBAJAL
Collegian

It's disappointing that such outstanding actors as Jack Lemmon and Al Pacino are stuck in the movie "Glengarry Glen Ross," which tediously deals with the lives of real-estate salesmen.

Pacino and Lemmon play Richard and Shelley, who work for Premiere Properties. The salesmen offer consumers the chance to invest or buy land. But there is more to just selling the land. Richard and Shelley, along with the other salesmen in their department, are constantly pressured to make as many sales as they can. Some of them even resort to pursuing underhanded tactics on their way to the top.

Lemmon, a veteran actor, handles his character with depth. He captures his character's desperation and persistence as he attempts to end his selling dry spell.

Pacino, as Richard, also immerses himself in his character. He portrays Richard as the successful salesman, but the threat that Richard, like Shelly, will lose his edge is always present.

Still, their performances cannot outshine the movie's drawn-out dialogue. All these salesmen do is endlessly bicker or complain to each other about trying to make more sales so they won't lose their jobs. The dialogues are supposed to explore how far they will go to get that top sell.

SHOW TIMES

■ "Glengarry Glen Ross" will show at 7 and 9:30 p.m. Friday and Saturday and at 7 p.m. Sunday in K-State Union Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75.

Yet, their bickering and complaining are so monotonous that it makes the viewer wonder how much it matters if they do get anywhere with their lives.

Sure, these characters are trying to keep from drowning in their jobs, but who cares?

This movie is also a turn-off because these conversations between the characters always have to end in the same profane word or variations of the word.

It may be natural that people will occasionally utter profanities in certain situations, and this may be a way to illustrate how these characters express themselves. But when there is a profane word ending almost every sentence, it mars any kind of merit the movie could have had.

CATS' GAME CANCELED

Wildcat baseball coach Mike Clark announced that the home-opening series has been canceled due to inclimate weather. K-State was scheduled to play a doubleheader Sunday against Missouri Western at Frank Myers Field. No make-up date has been scheduled. K-State's next home game is at 3 p.m. next Thursday against Northern Iowa.

NCAA Tournament again a reality

J. KYLE WYATT/Collegian

Deryl Cunningham, Wildcat center, reaches for a rebound during the Cats' 67-63 win over Oklahoma Tuesday night in Norman. Cunningham finished with a team-high 10 boards and leads K-State with 9.9 rebounds a game. His 86 offensive boards is tops in the Big Eight.

But visiting Cowboys have won 4 straight

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

The last time K-State was in the NCAA Tournament, the Berlin Wall collapsed in Germany, and the San Francisco 49ers beat the Denver Broncos 55-10 in the Super Bowl.

Indeed, the Wildcats lost in the first round of 1990's March Madness to Xavier, falling 87-79 in Indianapolis.

But with an upset victory over Oklahoma Tuesday night, the Wildcats, now 16-7 and 6-5, have re-kindled that Tournament fire.

"We've got three games remaining," senior Aaron Collier said. "We figure if we snag two, we'll be in pretty good shape."

K-State has an opportunity to post one of those wins Saturday afternoon at Bramlage Coliseum, with a 3:10 p.m. game against the 17-5 Oklahoma State Cowboys.

The Wildcats need those two wins to assure them of a winning conference record and a place in the upper echelon of the Big Eight. An 8-6 record in one of the toughest leagues in the nation would all but assure them of a tournament berth.

"How many is it going to take?" Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "I'm not even going to try to figure out how many it's going to take.

WILDCATS
Record: 16-7
Big Eight: 6-5
FG pct: 45.6
FT pct: 65.0 3pt pct: 34.3
Scoring average: 73.0
Opponent's scoring avg: 67.4

PROBABLE STARTERS:

		Height	PPG	RPG
F	Vincent Jackson	6-4	13.2	4.6
F	Aaron Collier	6-6	9.5	6.0
C	Deryl Cunningham	6-7	9.8	8.4
G	Anthony Beane	5-10	9.8	2.9
G	Askia Jones	6-5	13.1	4.0

"With the power ranking and all those things that they consider, I just don't know."

If K-State wins just one of its three remaining games, the Cats would be on the bubble. And their weak non-conference schedule has contributed to a weak power ranking. Seven wins might not be enough.

"I think the team that gets to 7-7 will definitely have to be considered," Altman said. "Anybody who's at 7-7 will have a good opportunity."

But if the Wildcats want to get that seventh win in Saturday's Raycom game, they'll have to get by one of the league's hottest teams.

The Cowboys, winners of four-in-a-row and seven of their last eight, are second in the Big Eight with a 7-4 mark — just a game behind Kansas.

And Oklahoma State is riding a momentum swing that was capped with an improbable victory Wednesday night against Columbia. Center Bryant Reeves caught a pass at half-court with two seconds to play, and threw up a 45-footer that banked in, sending the game into overtime.

The Cowboys won, 77-73.

"I just fumbled the ball when I was supposed to catch it," Reeves said. "The only thing left to do was throw it up."

Oklahoma State was the victim of a game-tying three-pointer the last time these two teams played. Anthony Beane connected from 25 feet on Jan. 9 to send that game into overtime.

K-State won, 75-62. It was the Cowboys' second home loss in three years.

"When you hit a shot like that at the buzzer, it gives you a lot of momentum," Cowboy coach Eddie Sutton said, who is one win shy of career victory No. 500. "We had it happen to us earlier this year when Beane hit that shot.

"But it gave us the momentum this time."

COWBOYS

C	Bryant Reeves	7-0	19.2	10.1
G	Randy Rutherford	6-3	13.1	4.2
G	Brooks Thompson	6-4	15.0	3.9

The Cowboys are led by Reeves, whose 19.2 points and 10.1 rebounds per-game averages have made him the front-runner for the Big Eight Player of the Year.

"Every time down, he's an offensive threat," Altman said. "Right now in the league, there's no one doing more for his team than Reeves."

Can any one person stop the 7-footer?

"None on our team."

A win for K-State would give the Cats their first four-game sweep of the Oklahoma schools since the 1972 team accomplished it.

That team went to the Elite Eight of the NCAA Tournament.

Track teams to battle for Big 8 crown

DEREK NELSON
Collegian

The K-State men's and women's track and field teams will be on the hunt for conference titles this weekend, as they travel to Ames, Iowa, to compete in the Big Eight Indoor Track and Field Championships.

Before the season, the conference coaches picked the Wildcat men to finish third and the women to finish second.

"That's the way it may turn out, but we've still got to run the meet this weekend," K-State interim coach Cliff Rovelto said. "They could just tally the results from the season and determine a champion, but they don't."

Rovelto said he expects a lot of high scoring to be done, but by just a few teams. In the women's race, K-State will challenge Nebraska for the league crown. In the men's competition, Iowa State, Nebraska and K-State are listed as the front-runners.

He said K-State is not hampered by any serious injuries right now.

The women will rely heavily on Gwen Wentland this weekend. Wentland, who will participate in the pentathlon, long jump and high jump, is the conference's top-rated high-jumper and second-rated long-jumper.

Besides Wentland in the long jump, Rahma Mateen and DeeDee Tribue have the conference's third and fourth best efforts this season, respectively.

The middle-distance runners and long sprinters must also score a lot of points for the women to be successful, Rovelto said.

He said he is counting on Irma Betancourt and Paulette Staats to perform well in their events. Betancourt has the fifth best conference time in the 800-meter run and the fifth best time in the mile. Staats has produced the second-best 1,000-meter time and the fourth-best mile in the Big Eight this season.

On the men's side, Nebraska is again heavily favored.

"Nebraska has to be the favorite," Iowa State coach Bill Bergan said. "They return power in a lot of events."

"Nebraska's depth is good at every single event," Rovelto said. "They also have great quality at most spots."

As with the women, the middle-distance races are important if the K-State men plan on scoring high, Rovelto said.

The Wildcats are led by Francis O'Neill, who has a conference-best time in the 1,000-meter run and the second best time in the mile. K-State's 4X800 relay team holds the best conference mark of the season.

One event the Cats are looking to sweep is the high jump. Wildcats have recorded the top three marks in the conference. K-State record holder Itai Margalit is the Big Eight's best, and Percell Gaskins and Ed Broxterman are close behind.

"I expect a lot out of the high-jumpers," Rovelto said. "But all we can do is go in and compete hard."

Lady Cats hope to finish season with win over KU

BRIAN ANDERSON
Collegian

The Lady Cats will try to stop the Kansas Lady Jayhawks from beating them for the fourth straight time — which would tie their longest winning streak against K-State — Sunday afternoon at Allen Fieldhouse.

To prevent the 17-8 Jayhawks from matching that four-game streak, Lady Cat coach Susan Yow said she hopes her team improves its shooting, while maintaining its aggressive defense and rebounding.

"We have to keep them off the boards and have a great defensive effort," Yow said of her 10-15 squad. "We need to shoot the ball better over there. We need to shoot above 47 percent from the field and shoot well from the free-throw line."

K-State's 2-3 zone defense limited Kansas to 36 percent shooting in the teams' first meeting this season, a 58-51 Kansas win. K-State also outrebounded the Jayhawks, 46-32.

"It was a game this season that we held an opponent to one-shot attempts," Yow said. "They had very few second and third shots at the basket. That was a concern for us before the game. We emphasize to the players to keep them off the boards offensively. We did a nice job of boxing out in our zone defense.

"We had a nice defensive game against them," Yow said. "We dictated the tempo of the ball game. The only way to do that is through defense."

Lady Hawk Shannon Kite had other ideas.

Kite's six three-pointers helped Kansas fight back for the Jan. 31 win at Bramlage Coliseum. Kelly Moylan and Yow both said that Kite was the difference in that game.

"She was the key for them last time," said Moylan, the senior who will be playing her last regular-season game. "We have to be cautious when she's on the floor."

"Kite hurt us in that game," Yow said. "Her threes were the key factor to the game."

Shanele Stires contributed for the Lady Cats, scoring 21 points and grabbing 16 rebounds.

"I enjoyed the first game quite a bit," she said. " It's the closest thing to a championship game.

"It's a big game because of the rivalry and the hype that goes along with it," Stires said.

Yow said the team can win.

"We are capable of getting them upset," Yow said. "We need to keep the game close — around the five- to seven-point range — until the last five minutes of the ball game if we have a chance to win."

And Moylan said it's all mental.

"If we have the right state of mind, we'll do well," she said.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶NETTERS HIT THE ROAD

The Wildcat tennis team will hit the road for the first time this season, hoping to win its second match. K-State faces Utah today and Brigham Young Sunday.

The Utes bring a 5-2 record into today's match and are led by senior Stephanie Ball. Ball is 6-0 this spring

BYU is 5-0, and the Cougars are ranked 27th in the nation. The Cougars have beaten Big Eight teams Kansas and Oklahoma State.

For K-State, this weekend's matches are the first of a seven-match road trip that will keep the Cats away until April 11.

▶CHIEFS NAME SMITH

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — The Kansas City Chiefs on Thursday named defensive end Neil Smith their franchise player and cornerback Dale Carter and nose tackle Dan Saleaumua as transition players, under terms of the NFL's new free agency system.

All-Pro linebacker Derrick Thomas, who is signed through 1993, was unprotected.

Franchise players cannot negotiate with any other team, but their current team is required to pay them a salary equal to the average of the five highest-paid players at their position.

▶MORRISON FIGHT SET

LAS VEGAS (AP) — Former heavyweight champion George Foreman will meet Tommy Morrison June 5 in Las Vegas, promoters said Thursday.

The Las Vegas site is undetermined.

The 44-year-old Foreman is the No. 1-ranked heavyweight by the International Boxing Federation and is 72-3 overall with 67 knockouts. Foreman is 27-1 since beginning his comeback in 1987, after a decade out of the ring.

Morrison, from Kansas City, is 35-1 with 31 knockouts. He is ranked fifth by the IBF and No. 6 by the WBA and WBC.

Golden Key recognizes outstanding GTA

RANCE AMES
Collegian

Golden Key National Honor Society was the host of a banquet last night honoring an outstanding graduate teaching assistant, providing Golden Key students the opportunity to recognize K-State faculty and administration.

"The purpose of the dinner is to honor the faculty and administrators who give us students the means to achieve," said Blake Logan, senior in management information systems and Golden Key chairperson for the dinner.

"Without your contributions, a student is only as good as a textbook," he said.

The recipient of the outstanding graduate teaching assistant award was Alan Grant. He has been a graduate student at K-State since Aug. 1990. Grant teaches money and banking for the department of economics.

"Golden Key feels it is important to recognize excellent GTAs who do so much for students, but often go unrecognized," said Jim Spencer, senior in accounting and co-chair of the GTA selection committee for Golden Key.

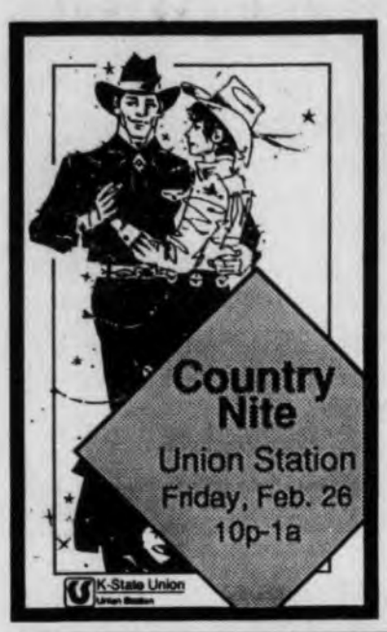
Golden Key sent out letters to all department heads to gather nominations for the GTA award, Spencer said.

"We received 12 nominations from the department heads," Spencer said. "We then invited those GTAs to submit a resume, a one-page paper on their teaching philosophy and the student evaluations."

This is the second year that the outstanding GTA came from the department of economics.

"It is quite an honor to know that you are appreciated like this," Grant said.

"Student feedback convinces me that Alan does a great job in the classroom," James Ragan, head of the department of economics, said.



After recognizing the outstanding GTA, administrators and faculty members were asked a question about a current topic or issue in their fields of expertise.

"The question and answer session allows the students and faculty and administrators a chance to interact out of the classroom atmosphere," Logan said.

There were 15 administrators and faculty members at the dinner along with more than 30 students, Logan said.

"We strive to get a faculty member from every college and also several administrators," Lance Lewis, co-advisor for Golden Key, said.

"The dinner gives the students a good opportunity to talk with faculty from other disciplines that they may have little experience with."

REVIEW

Psychedelic images seep from "The Wall"

CRIS ARY
Collegian

When it comes to the psychedelic, absurd and just plain strange, nothing in cinema can come close to "Pink Floyd The Wall."

"The Wall", somewhat of a rock opera, revolves around a man named Pink, played brilliantly by Bob Geldof, lead vocalist of the Boomtown Rats.

Pink is in a constant struggle with himself and society. It's a struggle that hurls Pink into a severe depression.

At first Pink reflects back to his childhood and searches for some father figure.

He knows about his real father and how he was killed in the war, presumedly World War II. That leaves him to depend on his mother, who seems to neglect him.

The rest of the movie deals with many facets of Pink's trials and tribulations through life. This includes his failure at relationships, school and manhood.

However, the real concentration is on issues of war. Violent war scenes fill the screen, and almost every scene of "The Wall" centers around this theme.

Geldof is extremely moving as Pink transforms into a Hitler-type leader of a neo-Nazi movement.

His big scene centers around a large rally where women and skinheads gather to salute Pink.

Riots ensue as Pink's followers try to take over. Violent scenes of brutality, vandalism and rape incur.

The movie concludes with Pink finally breaking through the wall and finding himself among the world.

SHOW TIMES

■ "Pink Floyd The Wall" will run at midnight tonight and Saturday in the K-State Union Forum Hall. Admission is $1.75.

"The Wall" combines live footage with excellent animation. Director Alan Parker brings Pink Floyd band member Roger Waters' screenplay to life beautifully.

The soundtrack, of course, is Pink Floyd at its best. Each scene's mood is based on the song being played. For example, the song "Brick in the Wall" stirs a riveting scene of the institutional conformity of education.

If you like psychedelic images that can confuse, yet stimulate your mind, "The Wall" is the film for you.

Festival promises jazz variety

CRIS ARY
Collegian

The K-State Union will showcase some of the best in local jazz, as New Currents brings its third annual Jazz Festival to Union Station at 2 p.m. Saturday.

The festival will feature nine different bands, lasting until around midnight.

Admission to the festival is $4, and the money goes toward other festivals, Eric Brunt, senior in electrical engineering and president of New Currents jazz appreciation group, said.

"We'd like to charge nothing, but we put the money into next year's festival," he said.

The festival will bring good exposure to the jazz scene here in Manhattan, Brunt said.

"It was lacking of this kind of music when we started. The festival is a good opportunity for bands to get exposure," he said.

Many of the performers said they agree.

"It will expand Manhattan's jazz horizon and give students more knowledge of jazz. A lot of kids on campus haven't been exposed to this kind of music," Henry Ashwood Jr., saxophone player for the band Hypertension and senior in music education, said.

Mike Brown, junior in physics, said Manhattan may be a little low on jazz music, but its excellence has always been high.

"When Manhattan has a jazz performance, it's always beyond what you expect musically," he said.

Eight of the nine bands are from this area. These bands include Hypertension, the KSU Jazz Combo, Unplugged, Mr. Direction, Heavy Wood, Creative Mind, Imagine That and Soup of the Day.

The Neal Davis Band will come in from Omaha, Neb., to perform.

Brown said he will perform in five different jazz bands in the festival.

"I have to stay busy, and five bands, that's getting busy," he said.

Brown said he feels each of the bands he plays in has a different, distinct sound to it.

"There will be extreme contrast between bands," he said.

One of his bands, Mr. Direction, plays cool jazz and some fusion. Brown said about 90 percent of the band's material is original.

His second band, the KSU Jazz Combo, will feature more traditional jazz with a little more flavor.

Unplugged has a more radical flavor of jazz sound.

"People won't hear this stuff too often," Brown said.

Heavy Wood will feature more mellow jazz than the others.

"Everyone will enjoy this music. It's something that you might hear in a coffee shop," he said.

Brown's fifth band, Soup of the Day, will bring the festival more hard-core fusion.

"Most bands sound like they're playing with fire. We play with atomic energy," he said.

Another band, Creative Mind, will play fusion jazz, but also feature a wide variety of sounds.

"This is a new experience for me. I'm looking forward to hearing the new bands," Tim Perry, Creative Mind guitarist, said.

Ashwood said his band, Hypertension, will feature several types of jazz, from funk to fusion and reggae — a little something for everyone.

"They're going to be forced to like something," he said.

Brown will have a free jazz clinic at 1 p.m., preceding the festival. There will be other clinics on Saturday.

The jazz festival is sponsored by UPC's Eclectic Entertainment committee.

"We're pretty excited. We didn't get to sponsor it last year. It's a good deal, and it's nice to work on something like this," Ernie Fields, Eclectic Entertainment chairman, said.

Brown said he agrees.

"It's always worth your money. Manhattan has the potential to be the jazz center of the state," he said.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?
by Cassandra Duveaux

Display of affection sends her screaming into the night

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I have a very serious problem that I pray you can help me solve. Last Friday evening, I attended a small gathering at my best friend's house where there was an abundance of alcohol being served. Needless to say, most of those in attendance were highly intoxicated, and the handful of friends I had come to party with had wandered into shadowy corners or respective bedrooms with the men they had chosen to spend time with that evening. I found myself left in the company of my friend's older brother that I had gone out on one date with previously, but had not wanted to pursue a relationship with.

He began to get a little handsy and started to bombard me with dozens of lewd and foul suggestions that the two of us might explore together. I declined as delicately as I possibly could without slapping him, but somehow our lips met and I found myself embroiled in a passionate embrace. At this point, I wanted to go no further, but much to my chagrin, I discovered that he had dropped his trousers in anticipation of carnal pleasure. When I refused any further contact, he "took matters into his own hands." He proceeded to masturbate right in front of me! I managed to escape before the deed was complete and ran screaming into the night.

Although I've tried desperately to block this hideous event from my mind, my friend's brother lives here in town and is often over at her apartment when I stop for a visit. He acts as if nothing out of the ordinary happened. Should I attempt to confront him with his dastardly deed? Should I continue to spurn his advances and act as if nothing happened? My best friend does not even know that the two of us went on a date, let alone this! Should I tell her that her own brother is a pervert? Cassie, I don't want to ruin my friendship with her, but I can't stand the sight of him any longer.

No Penis Envy Here

DEAR NO PENIS,

Sounds like you need to get some new friends. A "small gathering" where everyone in attendance is "highly intoxicated" and making out or having sex in "shadowy corners" and bedrooms sounds like a breeding ground (no pun intended) for disgusting, lewd animals like the man who assaulted you. Yes, assaulted.

Don't worry about being "delicate" if you truly want nothing to do with this man's advances. Say no, get up and leave. Since he is your friend's brother and a former date, it is understandable that you didn't feel the need to avoid being alone with him under such circumstances in the first place. Next time, you obviously know better.

From my experiences, public masturbation is not a natural response to rejection. And yes, I would tell your friend about her brother's behavior so she will better understand your uneasiness around him. Perhaps she'll have the smarts to tell him to get help. I wouldn't bother confronting him. Unless he grows up sometime in the near future, he's not worth it.

Letters to Cassandra may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie 116, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

Cassandra reserves the right to edit the content for the purpose of conserving space. Unless otherwise specified, all letters will be open to the public. Correspondence designated as "private" or "not for publication" will be maintained in the strictest confidence.

Snipers trade fire with Marines

Marine Col. Fred Peck, the U.S. military spokesman, said the firefight appeared to have started as a battle between rival Somali groups. He said Nigerian soldiers guarding the area became involved, and Marines rushed to help.

The shooting began at the traffic circle and spread along a main road to the hotel housing most foreign journalists. Almost two dozen Nigerian soldiers guarding the hotel directed a heavy barrage against suspected snipers.

One Marine attributed 90 percent of the gunfire during the battle to Nigerian troops. A Nigerian officer said his men wanted to drive out the snipers.

Journalists saw one dead Somali who was shot in the traffic circle. Three Marines suffered minor gunshot wounds, while two Nigerians also were hit by bullets, military officials said.

During rioting Wednesday, protesters threw rocks at the hotel and threatened to attack it as part of protests against foreign troops and other foreigners in Somalia.

The rioting began after Mohamed Farrah Aidid claimed the U.S.-led coalition allowed Morgan's men to attack supporters of an Aidid ally in Kismayu. About two dozen people are believed to have died in the fighting Monday in Kismayu, about 300 miles south of Mogadishu.

Pets, children share special bond

Poresky said.

"Most of them would say the dog was happy and had fun, which showed that they were developing emotions."

Poresky determined the child's empathy level by talking with the child but assessed the pet bonding level by speaking to the parents.

Parents were asked what they thought about the relationship between the pet and the child. They were also asked about the child's responsibilities in caring for the pet.

Parents said children who had a strong bond with their pets were very cooperative and helpful. Those children who didn't have a relationship with the pets were less cooperative and harder to get along with.

Poresky also said he found an increase in intellectual functioning in children with strong ties to their pet.

In 1989, he traveled to Monaco for a conference on the relationship between humans and animals. Poresky was a featured speaker at the three-day conference and has since traveled around the United States giving speeches on the human and pet bond.

He has created several reports about his findings. He said they all have a universal factor.

"The relationship humans develop with animals is very special," he said. "It helps us all grow in ways we sometimes don't even realize."

Marlatt Hall residents celebrate YAK

Marlatt Hall staff member Brian White, junior in marketing, fills a cup with beer from a keg for Susan Stimac (center), junior in elementary education, and her friend, Katie Cornish, junior in nursing, from Avilia College in Kansas City, Mo. White was manning the second-floor bar during the Yakfest Saturday night.

Dance, keg party focuses on providing social gathering for hall residents

"I personally visited with the students and told them this was not a responsible way of conducting business. Unfortunately, the tickets had already been sold."

"Yakfest," a Marlatt Hall disc jockey, dance and keg party, was hosted on the second floor Saturday night with tickets promising party goers all the 3.2 beer they could drink.

"It's more or less a party or dance," said Brian White, junior in general business administration and creator of Yakfest. "It's not focused on serving as much as just being a social event."

While the first stages of party planning included the usual dance with prizes, food and soda, White said the recent increase in housing rates gave residents grounds for this type of celebration.

"Basically housing was talking about the retention levels, how to keep people in the dorms and all that, so we decided on this big social gathering," White said. "They used to have alcohol parties 10 years ago. We can have an alcohol party as long as guidelines are met."

Consent for the party was channeled through the Marlatt Hall Governing Board, K-State Association of Residence Halls, the University and the Department of Housing and Dining Services.

"It's been allowed for 20 years with approval since the early '70s provision," David Yoder, Marlatt director, said.

White said residents had meetings with the hall governing board first, then the KSUARH and next with the housing department.

"The students in Marlatt came up with the idea," Chuck Werring, director of the housing department, said. "Then it was up to the hall governing board and the Association of Residence Halls group to pursue it and go over it for approval."

The KSUARH is the governing body of the residence halls that sets policies and procedures.

"The ARH voted to and amended the policies," said Derek Jackson, director of Haymaker Hall and KSUARH adviser. "It was not to suspend the policy. It was unclear whether or not to they could make the jurisdiction over the party or not. It involves the question as to whether jurisdiction is OK to suspend."

White said he thought up the catchy name Yakfest, while working on a Macintosh computer and noticed a yak icon.

"Housing didn't like the name connotation," White said. "We were trying to make an image that correlated with the name of the party so that students would remember it in future reference. The hidden connotation was not even around. People could take it the wrong way, but we just thought the name went with the picture, and the picture looked neat."

While the promotional ads for the party stressed responsible drinking, tickets displayed a bold-faced "Beer Bash" heading, with a beer mug and longneck image promising "All the beer you can drink."

"I personally visited with the students and told them this was not a responsible way of conducting business," Werring said. "Unfortunately, the tickets had already been sold."

Yoder said the tickets detracted from the party's original purpose.

Freedom of Information laws to be recognized during month

NICOLLE FOLSOM
Collegian

The public's right to obtain information about all federal government business, with slight exception, is a national policy set up by several freedom of information laws.

March is recognized as Freedom of Information Month.

"I think freedom of information is uniquely important now," said Susan Stanfield, speech instructor and director of the debate team.

She said people in the United States are changing and part of that change should include being aware of what they have access to.

Carol Oukrop, director of the A.Q. Miller School of Journalism and Mass Communications, said overall K-State is blessed.

People are allowed to do their jobs accordingly and there are very few problems that exist about freedom of information on the campus, she said.

Oukrop said freedom of information is crucial in pursuing critical discussion and information about principal players in the government and what goes on in the nation.

"It's talk not only about government and decision makers but also about social concerns and social issues," she said.

Myrna Daly, Cooperative Extension publications coordinator, organized a presentation co-sponsored by the journalism school and the professional and student chapters of Women in Communications Inc. to acknowledge FOI month.

Assistant Lifestyles editor of the Salina Journal and K-State alumna, Becky Fitzgerald, will speak about the controversial article she authored featuring two gay Salina men and their marriage ceremony.

Her presentation will be at 7:30 p.m. March 31 in K-State Union 206.

▶VET MED DEAN RESIGNING IN 1994

SHAWN BRUCE
Collegian

The dean of the K-State College of Veterinary Medicine announced Thursday plans to resign.

Michael Lorenz, dean since 1988, said his resignation will take effect July 1, 1994.

University Provost James Coffman said he did not want to speculate about Lorenz's reasons for resigning. He said, however, his job was a demanding one.

"You burn a lot of chips in a job like that," Coffman said.

Lorenz was conducting tours at the veterinary college Sunday and could not be reached.

Coffman praised Lorenz's work and said outside funding and the number of both students and faculty in the college have increased since he arrived.

"He's done a tremendous job of bringing the college forward," Coffman said.

Coffman said Lorenz announced his resignation early to ensure the University would have time to conduct a thorough search for his successor and because he has some projects he hopes to complete before leaving.

Coffman said a search committee will be organized this spring and a national search for Lorenz's replacement will begin no later than August.

Forum offers look at city commission candidates

WADE SISSON

Manhattan City Commission candidates answered questions at a forum Saturday afternoon in the City Auditorium.

Residents and members of local organizations submitted questions for the last of three forums before the primary election on Tuesday.

Edith Stunkel and Gene Klingler are seeking re-election to the commission. Sydney Carlin, Stanley Crowder, Steve Hall, Paul Palenske, Bob Rogers and Tom Whalen are seeking first terms.

"The different groups thought it would be a good thing for the community because it gives us a broader view of the candidates," said Delesa Rhodeman, a member of Handicapped People Obligated to Physical Equality (HOPE) and Southside Neighborhood Association.

Candidates began the forum by introducing themselves and listing their qualifications and reasons for running.

"Our city is going to face some significant economic questions in the near future," Hall said, citing proposed projects such as airport expansion, a juvenile detention center and an industrial park.

Whalen said his previous involvements such as the Riley County United Way, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and the Little Apple Task Force all required good leadership qualities.

Carlin said she is concerned about the job base in Manhattan and in prioritizing the needs of the city.

"We must take a long look at what Manhattan needs," she said.

Town hall meetings to get more public input are a priority for Palenske. He also said city

Grant approved for messy intersections

Bluemont, Tuttle Creek crossing to be improved

STEPHANIE HOELZEL
Collegian

The Kansas Department of Transportation has approved a grant that will improve existing intersections at Bluemont Avenue and Tuttle Creek Boulevard.

Before the grant was approved, a detailed study of the intersection was done to see how the traffic flow could be lessened and re-routed.

"A $15,000 study was done to see what improvements could be made to take some of the pressure off of the intersection. Several solutions were found to solve the problem," Jerry Petty, Manhattan director of community development, said.

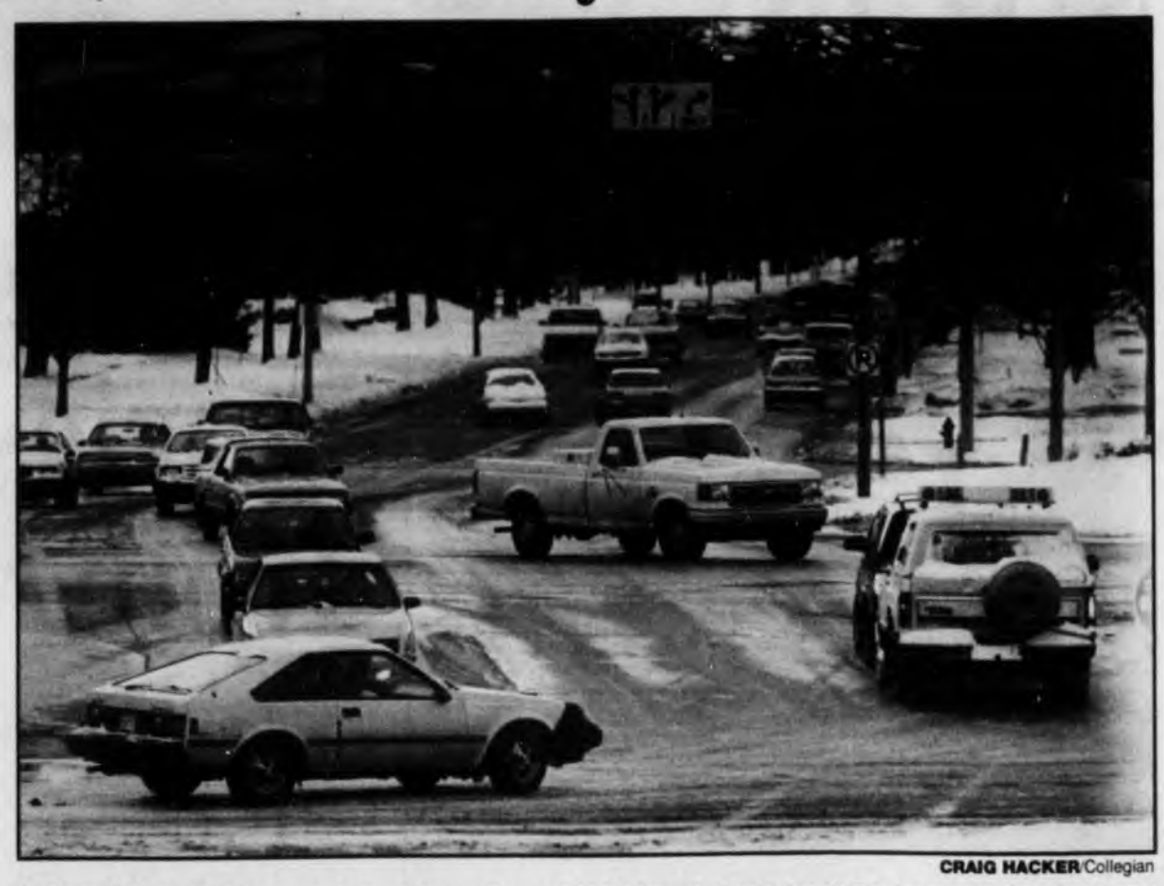
The study was financed by public and private money, Petty said. The city of Manhattan, Pottawatomie County and Eastside Business Association each contributed $5,000.

"It's rare to see private organizations get involved in things like this. EBA came to us with the money and asked us to help them do a study," Petty said.

The results of the study showed that the lack of adequate stacking distance between Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Bluemont Avenue and Frontage Road is the main problem.

"There are two possible projects that are being considered to alleviate the problem. One is opening up the Leavenworth Street intersection and the other is straightening out McCall Road and tying it directly to TCB," said Chuck Williams, assistant director of public works and transportation.

Petty said a T-intersection will be made at McCall Road and Tuttle Creek Boulevard. This intersection also will have a traffic signal to make it more convenient.



At the Leavenworth Street intersection, the street will extend across Tuttle Creek into Frontage Road.

"It has been designed so that these two intersections will be easier for people to use. Hopefully, these intersections will take the pressure off of Tuttle Creek Boulevard and Bluemont," Petty said.

So far, everything has been done to make the intersection run as smoothly as possible.

"The lights are as efficient as possible, and there is only so much you can do with timing in a situation like this. When the intersection was created more than 30 years ago, they didn't account for the growth of the town, and they also designed it poorly," Petty said.

Although there will be no immediate action, construction is tentatively scheduled for 1995.

Terrorism makes U.S. debut

THE ISSUE

The World Trade Center bombing reveals a vulnerable United States.

Saturday, a bomb thought to have been planted by the Irish Republican Army exploded in a busy market area of London, injuring 14 people, including 3 children.

That same day, a crude explosive packed with steel nails detonated in a crowded coffee shop in Cairo, Egypt, killing four.

American readers read news like this and are apt to shake their heads in sympathy, then move on to the movie reviews. The terrorism that seems commonplace in almost every other country couldn't seem to touch us in the cozy confines of America.

Now it has.

When evidence showed that Friday's World Trade Center disaster was triggered by a car bomb, the cracks in our veneer of security began to spread.

As a nation, we have been extraordinarily lucky. We made it through such anxious times as our conflicts with Libya and Iraq, countries with extensive terrorist networks.

Our national security agencies are incredibly capable, mammoth organizations. But how do you stop anyone wanting to park a car wired with explosives?

Let's hope the World Trade Center tragedy doesn't encourage others in the advantages of terrorism of America, and let's wake up as a nation and realize that we really aren't any safer than the north London child shopping with his mother or the Swedish tourist sitting at a Cairo cafe.

REVOLUTION

JOHN HAWKS

That time of year is fast approaching again. Aspiring students have already begun to announce their candidacies for Student Governing Association offices. Our trees will be coated with little colored sheets of their dead brethren.

And I am prompted to ask myself, "Why?" Apparently, my lack of understanding is shared by an overwhelming majority of the student body. Given that SGA is supposed to represent us, I would say the lack of student interest in its actions is bad. A major problem with the system of SGA governance is the failure to attract students representative of diverse interests to run for office. It is an indisputable fact that a disproportionate number of student senators are affiliated with greek organizations.

In the last election, more than two-thirds of the candidates listed themselves as greek. In addition, a large number of those who listed "residence hall" as their living group were also greek-affiliated. This contrasts sharply with the fact that less than one-fourth of K-State students are greek.

The most under-represented students are the non-greek half of K-Staters who live off-campus. These students are represented by only a handful of senators. It is easy to see why ideas like a campus shuttle system have collected dust for years. The students most interested in off-campus concerns have only a tiny voice in the Student Senate.

A governing system that can turn a majority into a minority obviously needs an overhaul. In the current situation, bad decisions are often made. The raise in the athletic fee, for instance, was opposed from the start by a large majority of the student body. Senate's own opinion poll showed that more than two-thirds of student respondents were against the hike. But Senate ignored the figures and went ahead with the increase.

Many senators believe their constituents do not know the issues as well as they do, and they are, therefore, more willing to go against popular opinion because they have more information. The problem with this attitude is that if the students are uninformed on issues, it is the Senate's fault. SGA's job is not only to represent the students, but also to inform them. And that's a job senators and other officials have woefully ignored.

Furthermore, the amount candidates may spend on their campaigns under current rules is a travesty. Candidates for president and vice president are allowed to spend up to the amount of in-state tuition and fees — $920.45. Candidates for Senate may spend up to 10 percent of that amount. I don't know of many good candidates who have that much money to throw around. And the necessity of fundraisers for campus campaigns is ludicrous.

Campaign expenditures should be cut to a reasonable level. Twenty dollars should be plenty for any candidate to make copies, put up a banner, or send campaign literature over bitmail. Perhaps, this way we can save our beautiful campus from its yearly inundation by campaign garbage. Amounts of campaign expenditures for each candidate should be submitted to the Collegian for printing in the election issue. Finally, residence affiliation should be printed on the ballot so voters may make informed choices about candidates who share their concerns and needs.

After election, there are further things SGA can do to keep the students more informed. With better reporting in the Collegian and on DB-92 of what the SGA is doing, including the successes it has had, students may become more involved in their government.

Furthermore, new forums could be established, such as a campus issues forum on the campus mainframe, for students to air their opinions and let their senators know what they think.

It is too much to expect ordinary students to come to Senate meetings on Thursdays. Instead, Senate must come out to the students, open its eyes and ears, and let us in.

Heroes and stories spew from 'fiya'

A SHORT MEDIA DIGEST OF THE WORLD TRADE CENTER BOMBING

"It looks like a bomb, it smells like a bomb, it probably is a bomb," New York Gov. Mario Cuomo said.

Lt. Walter Boser, commander of the New York Police Department's bomb squad, said, "It's just a space."

ED SKOOG

Detonation was in the parking garage underneath the World Trade Center, just like you always expected. Two 110-story towers were filled with media flashbacks.

"Theah should have been more guidance," said one woman on television who had recently applied red lipstick to her soot-streaked face.

"We were all up in theah. Then theah was the blast, and we were going down stairwells without anyone telling us whether we were heading into the fiya.

"It was like the Poseidon Adventure, but theah wasn't any capitans or Gene Hackmans.

"But, yeah, I'd say theah should have been more guidance," she said.

Stories came over the electric wires of the swarm descending the stairwells.

"Someone would see a pregnant woman, and he'd yell, 'Pregnant woman on right!' and people would move aside and let her pass," one survivor said.

"It was beautiful. There was such co-op-er-a-tion," said another.

News accounts stressed the gads of heroes in the tall towers.

"It was an afternoon of heroism," the Kansas City Star read.

"In a day of terror, heroes stood up to be counted," Dan Rather said on the CBS Evening News.

The bomb soon will have approval ratings. It is not inanimate anymore. It is a media personality, although the actual bomb was destroyed in the blast.

The cult of explosions is nearly as strong as the love of conspiracy plots and of serial-killer trivia.

— where were you when. I was there. I saw it happen. I have videotapes. I have pictures. I saved the newspaper from the day when. I had just stepped off the school bus when —

"This certainly would be the largest bombing of this type in recent U.S. history," Brian Jenkins, a terrorism expert, said.

"If we are entering into a new chapter in American society, one that we've been free from in the past ... we're going to have to start thinking about things like access to weapons and explosives and guns with a more focused attention," New Jersey Gov. James Florio said.

Another survivor, this one for some reason on ESPN, said, "There we were, all hundred thousand of us, lost and stacked vertically.

"There we were, in the mighty tall towers all alone," he said.

Strip can't count on droll quotes for effect

Editor,

Let me propose a supposition: The purpose of a comic strip is to entertain and amuse. Such entertainment often involves cultural critique and political satire, so, we may see the world with a sense of humor. Keep this supposition in mind.

Day after day, I read "Rafferty's World." I read with almost naive desire to be engaged and entertained. Each day I leave the comics page angry, with an anger fueled by the growing realization that the students at K-State have been misled.

OK, OK, David-Michael, you see where I'm going. My point is that comic strips should be amusing, not heavy-handed. This does not mean comic strips can't be controversial, political or daring. Gary Trudeau and Berke Breathed have combined humor with social commentary for years in "Doonesbury" and "Bloom County."

The difference is that each of these cartoonists has a sense of humor and is not simply interested in showing us how many obscure quotes they know.

Do lighten up. Otherwise I'll continue to read Cassandra if I want a laugh from the comics page.

▶ STUDENT'S FORUM

Engineering students' chance to ask questions

Editor,

Do you know how your engineering fee is spent? Have you heard of the S.T.A.R.S. program? Are you concerned about the proposed minors program. Do you wonder why the curriculum is so difficult? Do you want to know who decides which classes you should take?

If you don't know the answers to these questions or have other concerns of your own, you should definitely attend the Engineering Student's Forum with Dean Rathbone and the engineering student senators.

It happens tonight at 6:30 in Durland 173. For those of you who have attended a past dean's forum, this is similar. The Students' Forum with Dean Rathbone is an opportunity for direct communication between our dean and his students. He takes one evening each semester to listen to and respond to students' questions and concerns.

The event is sponsored and planned by your Engineering Student Council, with student senators taking an active role with their survey at Telefund. Engineering senators also will be able to answer any constituent concerns you may have.

Each year, the lines of communication between the students and the peers who represent them in Student Senate seemingly break down.

Responses to Collegian articles and to Senate's "questions of the week" show the discontent of students with their representatives. The accessibility of senators is seemingly always in question.

So, here is your chance to express yourself. This is why we set it up — we were elected to serve you. But it is up to you to take advantage of the situation tonight.

Students in other colleges may feel frustrated without an established forum such as this. But now you know of the possibilities. If you have a concern, call a senator from your college. Tell them you would also like a Students' Forum.

We, as your senators, want and need to hear from you. The bottom line is to stand up and be heard. Open up the lines of communication to make your college and University reach the potential you deserve.

▶ CITY

Opportunity to change BOCA is here

Editor,

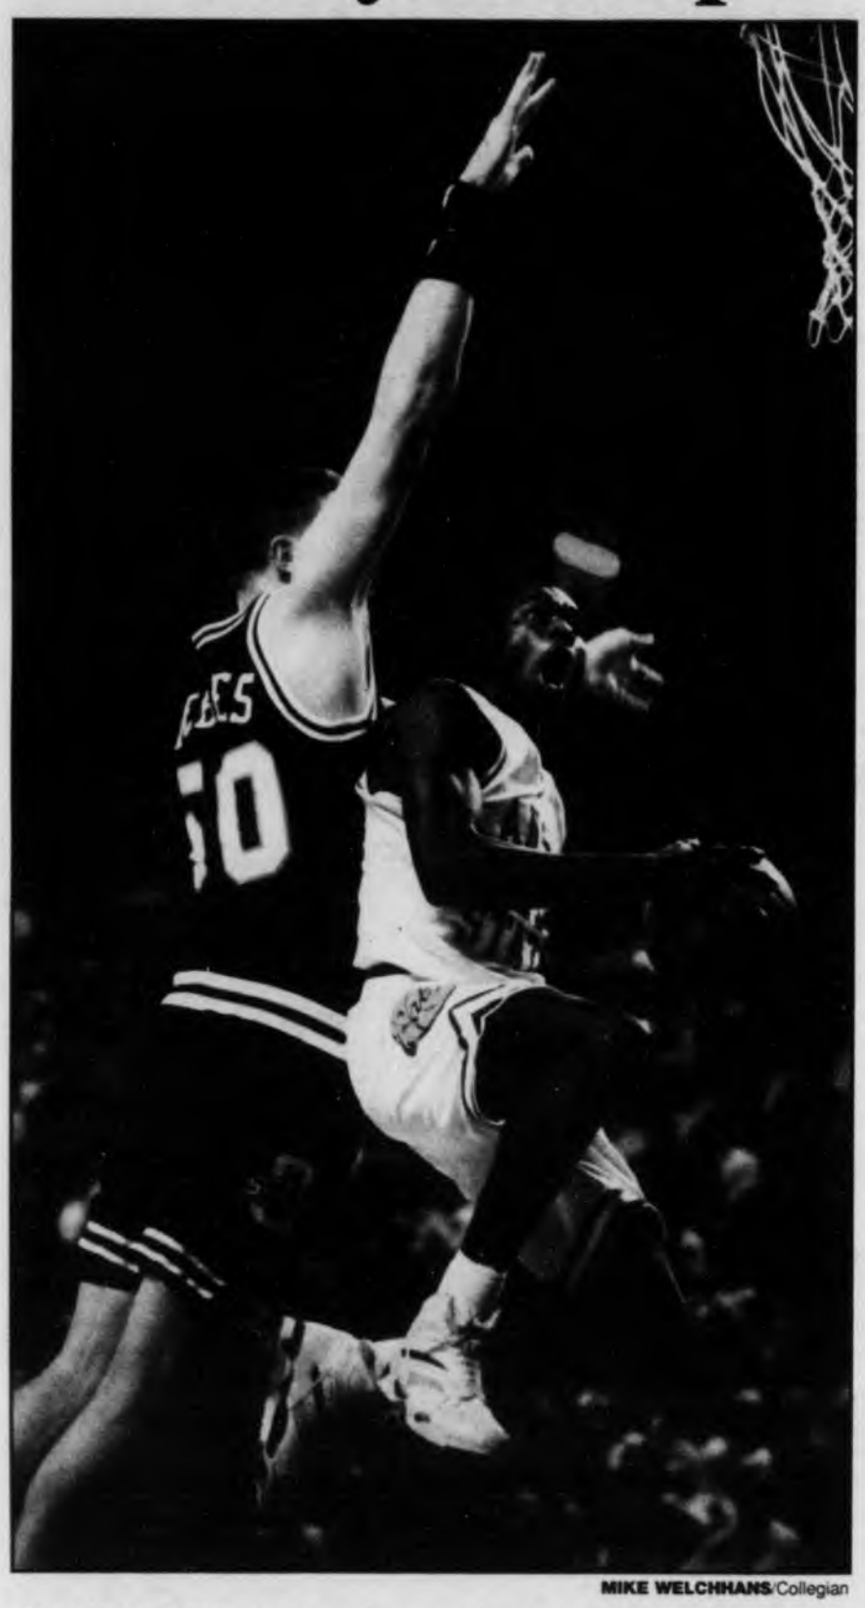
From informal surveys taken in my classes, most students support the idea of a mandatory rental-dwelling inspection program for the city of Manhattan. The KSU Consumer Relations Board and the Students' Attorney, Dianne Urban, spend much of their time dealing with problems stemming from tenant/property owner relations, many of which involve questions of tenant safety.

Since 1984, Manhattan has followed the BOCA (Building Officials and Code Administrators International) code. It establishes basic safety measures to include rental dwellings.

Since rental-dwelling inspections are not mandated by the city, houses and apartments are only subjected to the BOCA code on a voluntary or complaint-driven basis. Only a small fraction of current Manhattan rental housing has been inspected for basic safety considerations, and yet there are hundreds, if not thousands, of houses in Manhattan that were converted into multiple units, which were never subjected to any kind of basic safety check.

The Landlords Association of Manhattan is opposed to a mandatory rental dwelling inspection program for numerous reasons, which they are free to make public as they see fit. The last time the question of a mandatory-inspection program was raised by the Manhattan City Commission, the Landlords Association arrived in force; no one from the University even bothered to show up to speak in favor of such an idea.

To compound the political difficulty of the problem, most K-State students are not registered to vote locally, although approximately 14,000 live off-campus and would be eligible.



On March 2 is a city commission meeting that will include the question of whether Manhattan should accept the most recent version of the BOCA code. The Landlords Association will probably turn out again in significant numbers to oppose any attempt to strengthen the existing safety codes.

The commission meeting will be at 3:30 p.m., at City Hall, 11th and Poyntz, in the Commission Chambers.

If you think a rental inspection program would be good for the city of Manhattan, and good for you, register to vote at 110 Courthouse Plaza (Fifth and Humboldt Streets), and vote for the commission candidates who will work to implement a rental inspection program.

OSU's 78-61 win puts Cats in must-win situation

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Just four days after upsetting the Sooners in Norman, Okla. and revitalizing NCAA Tournament hopes, the Wildcats crashed back down to earth Saturday afternoon against Oklahoma State.

K-State, 16-8 overall, blew its chance at getting that all-important seventh Big Eight win, falling 78-61 to the second-place Cowboys. The loss leaves the Cats with a 6-6 conference mark, while the Cowboys improved to 18-5 and 8-4.

"We're not going to get in at 6-8," Wildcat coach Dana Altman said. "We've got to have a good week next week."

That pivotal week begins with a Tuesday night game against the Missouri Tigers at Bramlage Coliseum.

"That's a must-win," senior Aaron Collier said. "We're pressured now. We have to win this one. We have to win this one."

A victory against the Tigers would assure K-State of a .500 conference record.

More importantly, though, it would keep the Cats in the hunt for a Tournament berth even if they fall in the season finale against Iowa State in Ames — a very likely scenario, considering the Cyclones are 15-0 at home this season.

But a victory against Missouri wouldn't assure K-State of an NCAA invitation. At 7-7 in the conference, and sporting a weak power ranking, the Cats could be bypassed if they don't post a win in the first round of the Big Eight tournament.

"Any of them down the stretch is important," Wildcat center Deryl Cunningham said. "We don't know what they're saying about the Tournament, so in my eyes, we're just taking them one at a time.

"I'd rather get to 8-6. Certain people sit down and say, 'Well, 7-7 will do it.'

"But I don't play them games. In my mind, I'm going to try and win every ballgame, period."

So, what happened Saturday?

"We had just come off of a big win in Norman," guard Anthony Beane said. "The confidence level was high, and we were real hyped and ready to play.

"But I think we wanted it too bad. We got over-excited."

That excitement — which caused the Cats to take several impatient shots — caused K-State to shoot just 35 percent for the game, including 29 percent in the first half. K-State made just four of 18 three-pointers — a 22-percent clip.

And the Cats were out-rebounded 38-33.

The game resulted in K-State's fifth conference loss this season by more than 10 points. And it jeopardized the Cats' first Tournament berth in three years.

"I think K-State, by winning, automatically gets into the NCAA Tournament," Cowboy coach Eddie Sutton said. "I think they'll still get there if they can win another ballgame."

Sutton doesn't have to worry about needing another victory.

"This put us in a position where we're guaranteed to be there," he said. "Before the season began, I don't think anyone would have thought that we would have a chance to tie the Jayhawks."

Indeed, Oklahoma State — a preseason pick for sixth in the Big Eight — is just one game behind Kansas. And the Cowboys face the Hawks next Saturday to end the conference regular season.

But for the Cats, it's an NCAA berth — not a first-place Big Eight finish — that is the primary concern.

"I think 7-7 would put us on the bubble," Collier said. "But I don't really know how all that works. We figure if we could get 8-6, we could definitely get in.

"But at 7-7 ... I think they think our non-conference schedule wasn't very tough. That could really hurt us in the long run."

Cats finish 2nd and 3rd at Big 8 meet

DEREK NELSON
Collegian

The K-State men's and women's track teams fulfilled preseason expectations this weekend by finishing third and second, respectively, at the Big Eight Indoor Track and Field Championships in Ames, Iowa.

Before the season started, coaches from the league tabbed K-State to finish in those exact places.

"The meet was pretty much true to form," K-State interim coach Cliff Rovelto said.

In the women's events, perennial power Nebraska dominated the meet. In scoring 160 points, the Huskers won or placed second in 11 of 17 events. The Huskers have now won 14 straight indoor titles.

The Wildcats scored 92 points, scoring in 13 of the 14 events they entered.

"I was very pleased with the teams. We had some great performances this weekend," Rovelto said.

Gwen Wentland pulled off a trifecta of placements as she finished fourth in the pentathlon, second in the high jump and eighth in the long jump.

"Gwen had a phenomenal performance to come back after the pentathlon and jump six feet in the high jump," Rovelto said.

Wentland's jump of 6 feet 2 inches set a new collegiate indoor pentathlon high-jump record.

In other women's events, Rahma Mateen finished second and Kathy Janicke third in the long jump. Paulette Staats was second in the 1,000-meter run. Irma Betancourt finished third in the 800-meter run.

Jennifer Hillier, whom Rovelto called the most improved athlete on the Wildcat squad, placed third in the 3,000-meter run and in the mile run. Nicole Green placed second in the 400-meter dash, and Linda Shea was second in the 600.

On the men's side, Nebraska and Iowa State, who have won the last 10 championships, fought it out again this year. In the end, the two-time defending champion Cyclones were too much as they outscored the Huskers 145-112. K-State finished third with 82 points.

Perhaps the most impressive performance of the weekend was logged by K-State's Thomas Randolph, who won the 55-meter dash. Randolph's time of 6.17 seconds is the second fastest in the country this season. Randolph had only the third-best time in the conference entering the meet.

"They've never seen me go that fast before," he said. "I've never seen me go that fast before. I've been waiting four years to win the Big Eight. So there was a lot of adrenaline flowing."

Not only did Randolph surprise himself, he caught the rest of the Big Eight off guard.

"Two of the three that had qualified (for the NCAAs) were in the Big Eight, and he just destroyed them head-to-head," Rovelto said. "To win by almost one-tenth of a second, that's a phenomenal run."

Randolph was one of four Wildcats to win events. Travis Livingston won the 55-meter hurdles, Anthony Williams set a new Big Eight record in winning the 1,000-meter run, and Percell Gaskins won the high jump.

For the Wildcats, one strong performance after another helped the two teams.

"There was a stretch of about an hour-and-a-half where we got on a roll," Rovelto said. "Both teams helped each other out. Everyone was getting excited about what was going on on the track."

SPORTS DIGEST

▶NETTERS FALL TO 1-5

K-State's tennis team lost its match with Brigham Young this weekend, dropping its record to 1-5 for the season. The Wildcats' lone win of the nine matches was a 6-4, 6-1 victory by Susana Labrador in No. 1 singles.

None of the other five singles players won a single set, including Suzanne Sim, who was 4-1 entering the match.

The BYU doubles teams won the three doubles matches by a total score of 36 games to five.

Results were not available for K-State's Sunday match with Utah.

▶HAGEMEYER SIGNS 3

Wildcat volleyball coach Patti Hagemeyer announced the signings of three freshmen for next fall.

Kate DeClerk, a 6-foot 2-inch middle blocker, was an all-state performer in high school. She recorded 308 kills and 54 aces in Minnesota.

Yolanda Young, an outside hitter from Omaha, Neb., is an explosive player, Hagemeyer said. She earned all-conference honors in high school and chose K-State instead of Nebraska.

Middle blocker Gigi Ghattas was a first-team all-Los Angeles selection last season with a .510 hitting percentage.

▶ISU BEATS LADY CATS

The Lady Cat basketball team lost to both Kansas and Iowa State yesterday.

Not only did K-State lose to intrastate rival Kansas, it lost a coin toss to the Cyclones to determine the No. 7 seed in the Big Eight Tournament.

No. 8 seed K-State (10-16, 1-13 in the Big Eight) will take on No. 1 seed Colorado (24-2, 12-2) Saturday.

In the first round of last season's Big Eight tournament, Colorado beat K-State 79-27.

K-State's 1-13 mark in conference equals worst in school's history

LAWRENCE — Angela Aycock wished for something more than just a Kansas win over intrastate rival K-State Sunday — she wanted some icing on her birthday cake as well.

Aycock connected on 12 of 14 field goals for 26 points and grabbed nine rebounds Sunday afternoon in Allen Fieldhouse to help the Jayhawks ease by the Lady Cats for a 77-45 win.

The loss for K-State (10-16, 1-13 in the Big Eight) gives them the eighth seed in the Big Eight Tournament this weekend in Salina against the No. 1 seed, Colorado (24-2, 12-2). Kansas (18-8, 9-5) received the fourth seed.

K-State's Big Eight record is the worst in school history, matched most recently in the 1987-88 season.

Aycock, who just turned 20, shot 85.7 percent from the field, giving her the best day of her career. Teammate Lisa Tate made six out of seven attempts for 12 points. Together, they made more shots than the entire Lady Cat team (18-16).

Aycock said she felt that everything was going right for her.

"You're on a high when you have things going your way," she said. "When I was looking forward to today as a special day, I was pretty strung out just thinking about it."

Lady Cat coach Susan Yow said the Hawks, who shot 55 percent from the floor, were on fire.

"They were hot," she said. "They shot the lights out of the basket.

"Aycock truly came through to the form on the person she is on the floor," she said. "I thought she had a tremendous game. She just played a great offensive game for them. Few of those shots were layups when someone was not in her face."

Meanwhile, K-State was 16 for 60 from the floor — 27 percent.

"I thought we were very, very cold," Yow said.

The Hawk defense shut down Shanele Stires offensively and on the boards.

"Shanele Stires is a much better player than she showed," Yow said of Stires, who scored 22 points and hauled down 16 rebounds Jan. 31 against Kansas in Manhattan. "She didn't shoot the ball well, and that's what created the 30-point deficit."

Stires finished with nine points and seven rebounds. She made just one of her 10 shots.

Both teams traded baskets early until Kansas went into a zone defense with the game tied at 16.

"They went zone on us and slowed us up," Yow said. "We had some things we could have done out of the zone, and we weren't connecting out of the zone. We just weren't in sync."

And Kansas coach Marian Washington said she was just doing what was best at the time.

"In the first half, I thought the zone would help," she said. "In the second half, we went back and forth from man to zone to throw them off a bit and give us some quick baskets."

After the tie, Kansas went on a 61-29 run for the rest of the game.

Leah Honeycutt led the Lady Cats in scoring and rebounds with 12 points and nine boards. Gretchen Bertrand added nine points for K-State.

Bomb cause of Trade Center blast

FBI uncertain of who is responsible; investigation will not be completed soon

ASSOCIATED PRESS

NEW YORK — The FBI confirmed Sunday that a bomb caused the explosion at the World Trade Center but was unable to say who placed it and why. The investigation could take several months.

"We aren't going to complete this crime scene investigation for some time," said James Fox, head of the FBI's New York office. "A lot of people have been laid off recently. You've got some drug dealers upset with the U.S. government. It could be terrorists upset for other causes. There are just so many possibilities."

Fox said agency explosives experts had concluded a bomb caused Friday's lunch-hour blast that wrecked four underground floors and rattled the 110-story twin towers with earthquake-like force.

"We are prepared to say at this time that it definitely was a bomb, in the opinion of the FBI," Fox said on WCBS-TV.

Also Sunday, Police Commissioner Raymond Kelly told a news conference there had been 50 telephone calls claiming responsibility for the blast, which killed five people and injured more than 1,000 others. Two people are still missing, but efforts to search the rubble have been hampered by falling debris at the blast site.

"We're analyzing all the phone calls," Kelly said. "We are making verbatim transcripts."

Kelly confirmed one phone call came in one hour after the blast and the others followed.

Investigators reportedly have been paying special attention to the early phone call, which was from a man who cited the strife in the former Yugoslavia.

FBI director William Sessions told NBC News Saturday there was some indication the explosion might be connected to the trouble in the former Yugoslav republics, and meetings planned at the United Nations in New York to try to mediate the fighting there.

Head of cult forces shootout in Texas

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — A fierce gun battle erupted Sunday as more than 100 law officers tried to arrest the head of a heavily armed religious cult. At least four federal agents died, and the cult's leader said a 2-year-old was killed.

At least 15 agents were wounded in the 45-minute shootout at the isolated compound of the Branch Davidians' sect about 10 miles east of Waco. Several sect members were also reportedly wounded, officials said.

Sect leader Vernon Howell, who also is known as David Koresh, told CNN he was shot several times and that a 2-year-old child was among those killed.

The battle began when federal agents hidden in livestock trailers stormed the main home of the sect, witnesses said. The agents had warrants to search the compound for guns and explosives and to arrest Howell, said Les Stanford of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in Washington.

After a cease-fire was negotiated, ambulances and helicopters removed wounded agents as other law enforcement officers remained encamped at the scene.

The standoff continued into the night, and at about 6 p.m. violence flared again, the ATF said, when three members of the sect came out of the compound and fired on the agents.

City commission hopefuls answer questions at forum government should not compete with local businesses.

Incumbent Klingler said he is interested in preserving historical sites in Manhattan. He said work sessions between the city staff and the public offer a needed dialogue.

Public participation and access are the two issues that Stunkel said formed her basis for running again.

Rogers said his main concern is debt.

"I know what it's like to have and what it's like to have not," he said. "Now is the time for Manhattan to save."

New businesses for Manhattan are a priority for Crowder.

"We must act as generals in combat," he said.

Public participation in government, a focal point for most, if not all, of the candidate campaigns, was an issue raised at the forum.

"When a person has a problem, they ought to get an answer," Rogers said.

Having city commission meetings at night might bring in more people, Crowder said.

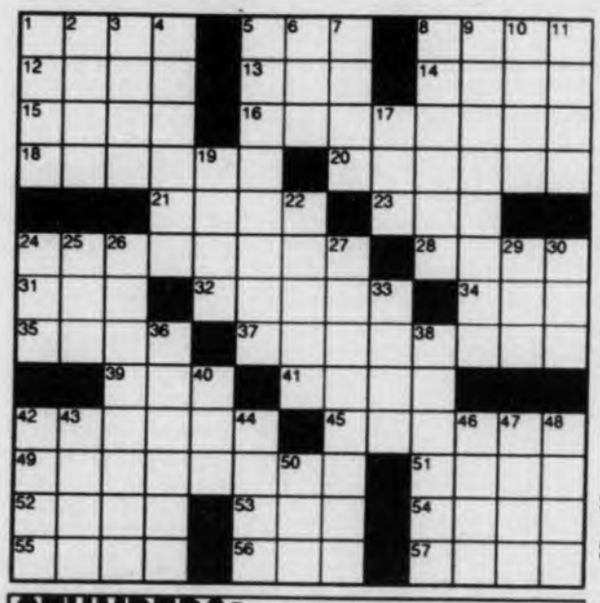
Palenske said a town hall meeting without a set agenda would give the public a voice in local government.

Hall said he agreed and suggested having such meetings at least once a month.

Publishing agendas of the meetings might also increase the public's awareness of issues, Carlin said.

Stunkel said an ombudsman could help the public understand city government procedures.

"The city commission sets the tone of city government," she said. "There is still an adversarial relationship between the city and the people."



Citing poor attendance at most of City Manager Jim Pearson's listening tours with the public, Klingler said public input is a problem.

Whalen said televising the meetings gives those who can't attend the meetings a chance to see what happens.

Yakfest brings alcohol parties back to halls

"The tickets should have been rethought," Yoder said. "They don't really reflect our intent."

With liability concerns being the biggest worry, White said he and another person would be the only ones serving the alcohol while 12 bouncers monitor the party to ensure nothing got out of hand.

"Everybody and anybody could be held libel," Jackson said.

White said through his method of monitoring everyone's alcohol intake, possible problems were alleviated.

"There will be alcohol only in the lobby," White said. "And you can't bring something into the party."

For those who have driving concerns, members of the hall were chosen as designated drivers.

"The big issue with drunk drivers is to encourage responsible drinking," White said. "We're not trying to promote getting smashed and a free ride home. It's just a nice social event for those who are over and underaged."

While some of the drinking concerns may have stemmed from the fact that this week begins Alcohol and Other Drug Awareness Week, many concerns were tied to the party from its initial start.

"I didn't know this awareness week was coming up," Yoder said. "But we have taken strong procedures to ensure responsible drinking."

Werring said he was aware of the week, and the appropriate steps had been taken.

The party included about $300 worth of food plus the money spent on door prizes, the renting of the soda machine and dispenser, White said.

"The alcohol was bought on separate funds," White said. "It was not supplied by the hall. Rules prohibit the hall to supply it. It was supplied by the organizers of the party and contributions."

Tickets were $1 bought in advance or $2 at the door. The dance was open to anybody in the residence halls. Door monitors began carding at 8 p.m. Dancing started at 9 p.m.

As the lobby became packed with party-goers, residence hall staff members wearing yellow T-shirts with "security" written on the back continued their mainstay at every lobby exit, taking drinks and enforcing the existing policies.

"It looks like they put together a well thought-out party," Marcia Hellwig, freshmen in business administration, said.

As far as making the Yakfest an annual event, White said he is uncertain.

"There's a lot of controversy on the whole shebang," White said. "When we planned it, we were projecting and hoping it would be an annual thing. There's never been a dance recently to this magnitude spent. I couldn't tell if it would be again in the future."

Low turnout expected at primary election

"It is difficult to predict a turnout in an election like this one."

ILENE COLBERT
RILEY COUNTY ELECTION OFFICER

BRYAN LARSON
Collegian

The polls will open at 7 a.m. to allow voters in Riley County to participate in today's primary election.

The election will narrow the city commission field from eight candidates to six and will narrow the candidates for USD #383 School Board from four to two.

Riley County Election Officer Ilene Colbert expects a rather small turnout for the election.

"I have said there will be 20 percent, but that could be off a bit," Colbert said. "It is difficult to predict a turnout for an election like this one."

Anyone interested in voting in the primary must have already registered. But it is not too late to register for the general election, which is April 6.

People who voted in Riley County for the presidential election in November should be currently registered.

Students living on-campus and who are registered to vote in the primary will vote at Marlatt School. Students living off-campus will vote in their respective precincts.

Candidates for city commission continued to campaign right up to the election. A League of Women Voters forum is scheduled for 11:30 a.m. on the day of the election.

"I am planning on attending a forum Monday evening, and I will attend the forum scheduled for the day of the election," city commission candidate Sydney Carlin said.

Though six of the eight candidates for city commission will advance, the candidates didn't take it lightly.

"I have placed a great deal of importance on the primary," incumbent Gene Klingler said. "I don't think you want to spend all of your money and shoot your whole wad early, but you still have to treat it as very important."

Carlin said she has not taken the primary lightly.

"I have been working very hard from the word go, and I have treated this election as highly important." Carlin said. "If I advance to the general election, I will try and get out more, but I feel I have worked hard."

Carlin said she would look forward to working with students from the University if elected.

"I care about the students and their needs. I hope to work very closely with the University," Carlin said.

Other candidates could not be reached for comment.

PRIMARY TODAY

The polls will be open from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. If you are registered for the primary and are unsure about where to vote, call the Riley County clerk's office at 537-6300.

Students discuss fee, computers with dean

RANCE AMES
Collegian

Engineering students were able to interact with Donald Rathbone, the Dean of the College of Engineering, Monday night at a students' forum organized by the engineering council.

"We sponsor the students' forum every semester in order to inform students of what is going on in the college as well as allow them to ask questions or express concerns to the dean," said Jill Dirksen, junior in architectural engineering and president of engineering council.

The equipment fee engineering students pay every semester was one of the topics Rathbone discussed with the students.

"The engineering fee is always a hot issue with the students because they wan to know where their money goes," said Todd Lakin, sophomore in industrial engineering and an engineering student senator.

"The engineering fee is always a hot issue with the students because they want to know where their money goes."

TODD LAKIN
SOPHOMORE IN INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING

The equipment fee generates more than $500,000 of revenue for the college, Rathbone said. Of that money, half of it goes to the departments within the College of Engineering, and the other half goes to the dean's office, he said.

"We will have an accreditation check next fall," Rathbone said. "The equipment fee is important so that we can maintain the amount of equipment sufficient for accreditation," he said.

Another important aspect of the fee is the ability it gives the College of Engineering to match funds that are given from other sources — federal and private industry, for example.

"We never had that matching capability before the student-equipment fee," Rathbone said.

Because of the matching capability, Rathbone said he would guess that the College of Engineering will have around $1 million worth of equipment generated by $250,000 student money that goes to the dean's office.

"We still have a lot to finalize, but that is a match of three or four to one for every dollar the student fee generates," he said.

Rathbone said the personal computers classroom was the major target for fee money last year and still is this year.

The construction of Phase III of Durland Hall was another topic discussed by students at the forum.

"Throckmorton is currently under construction, and the Farrell project will last for another three years, so we are realistically looking at another five years before we can get moving on Phase III," Rathbone said.

The good news is that the college is either the first or second priority behind the library, Rathbone said.

Students also asked about the minors program and how it will be handled if it is passed by Faculty Senate.

"Basically, the College of Engineering faculty are in support of the minors program," Rathbone said.

If the minors program does become a policy, Rathbone said, it would be up to each department in the College of Engineering to decide the requirements for a minor.

'Judith's Journey' across America

Ed Healy, Manhattan letter carrier, walks with Judith Hyde, a Portland, Ore., letter carrier, during her Ogden-Manhattan segment of Judith's Journey, a coast-to-coast walk to bring awareness to AIDS. She will arrive in Washington, D.C., on June 10, her 50th birthday. A local letter carrier joins Hyde as she enters new areas each day. Her journey is partially supported by the National Association of Letter Carriers.

Oregon woman stops in Manhattan on walk to increase awareness of AIDS

RHONDA WILSON
Collegian

She left Portland, Ore., with only two pairs of shorts and one pair of pants. Around her neck, she carries a small red-and-gold pouch filled with "a lot of love and caring." She calls herself a "bag lady."

Meet Judith Hyde, a 49-year-old letter carrier. She is walking 2,827 miles from Portland to Washington, D.C.

"Judith's Journey" is an effort to raise awareness about the need for education about AIDS.

She was in Manhattan Sunday, Monday and Tuesday as part of her walk across the nation to increase AIDS awareness.

Hyde was "introduced" to the disease four years ago, when a friend of hers called from Texas and told her he had AIDS.

"I really never thought I'd know anyone with AIDS," Hyde said.

She said her friend did not fit into what she knew as the high-risk groups. He was not gay, nor was he an intravenous drug user.

She flew to Texas, and while she was there, she was introduced to a number of medical personnel and volunteers who worked with AIDS patients and their families. After returning to Oregon, she became a volunteer for local AIDS organizations.

Hyde immediately realized the need for education about HIV and AIDS, and she came up with the idea for a walk across America.

"I'm not a crusader, but I am an angry mother," Hyde said. "There is no 12-year-old, or 18-year-old, or 80-year-old who deserves to die from making a mistake."

She said the main goal of her walk is for people to become educated about AIDS and to talk about the disease.

"Don't keep it quiet anymore, please," she said. "If we're going to be silent, we're going to have too many deaths."

Hyde said she believes the only way to minimize the risks for HIV is for people of all ages to become educated

Humanitarian aid taken by Serbs

ASSOCIATED PRESS

SARAJEVO, Bosnia-Herzegovina — The first food and medicine dropped by U.S. planes for hungry Muslims reportedly fell mostly into the hands of Serbs waging a fierce attack Monday on a government enclave in eastern Bosnia.

Up to 10,000 refugees from the fighting were reported cowering on the slopes of an icy mountain as Serb tanks stormed into the Cerska region, an area that has gone without aid since the Bosnian war erupted almost a year ago. Hundreds died in fighting in that area Sunday, Bosnian radio claimed.

Officials of Bosnia's Muslim-led government in Sarajevo said the U.S. attempt to get food to Muslims surrounded in the east appeared to have been an almost total failure.

A defense official in the government-held town of Tuzla said bundles with food and medical supplies fell on Serb lines in the rugged, inhospitable mountains around Cerska, an area where up to 20,000 Muslims are besieged.

Gen. Ratko Mladic, commander of Serb forces in Bosnia, also said some of the aid landed in Serb-held areas, where it was not intended.

A statement from Defense Secretary Les Aspin and Joint Chiefs of Staff Chairman Gen. Colin Powell said, "the airdrop last night was successful ... we can confirm that many of the bundles landed in clear areas within the identified drop zone, which is in the area of Cerska."

But a senior Pentagon official, speaking on condition of anonymity, said only about a third of the bundles appeared to have landed in the target zone.

As night fell in Bosnia, only one package had been reported found by Muslims some 20 miles northwest of Cerska in the direction of Tuzla, the Bosnian news agency BH Press said, quoting a ham radio report.

Rec explains expansion plans

LYNN ANDERSON
Collegian

A slide show and presentation describing the future expansion of Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex was given on the third floor of Marlatt Hall by Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services.

"There are some exciting things ahead," Robel said. "The 450,000 people we see come to the Rec Complex now will expand considerably."

Following the 81-percent student-body vote in favor of redirecting funding for the expansion of the Rec Complex, the architects traveled several places to look at other schools and decided how the building will change in appearance, Robel said.

"There will be construction on the west side of the building and the north," Robel said. "It will replace where the parking lot is now, and 70 to 80 feet of the new parking lot will cut into what are now the playing fields. We'll lose parking by going to the west, but we'll pick it up at the playing field. We're also looking at extending up toward KSU Stadium."

Construction will involve a mall-type approach, with the north side developing into a hallway where the entrance to the new gym will display new restrooms, he said.

"The offices will be relocated to a larger lobby in the entrance," Robel said. "Offices will now be on the first floor instead of the second."

Robel said highlights will include a resource center where nutritional guidance will be offered, a larger gym to cope with the intramural spectator problems, 300 square feet for an Olympic free-weight area, a table tennis-only room and 10,000 feet allotted for the weight and fitness area.

"There'll be a light-weight free-weight area, where smaller dumbbells will be at hand," Robel said. "There'll also be a body-parts area, circuit area, stretch area and an exercise multi-purpose area for step aerobics and stairclimbers."

The current track that caters to walkers and joggers will be expanded as well, with four lanes of road and an eighth of a mile coverage.

"It becomes a touring track," Robel said. "It will be open in the middle to look at the mall area, with a weight and fitness area with glass to look over the north at the aerobics area as well."

The cardiovascular equipment will be moved around the building, and machines will be found in different locations, such as the crossover points and the strength and fitness areas. This is so bicyclists and stair climbers will be able to view their surroundings while working out, Robel said.

"There'll be a few bicycles scattered out so people can watch basketball and cycle away," he said. "They'll also be able to look out the glass and watch their friends arrive."

Construction on the Rec Complex is to begin in August, and it will take about 18 months until the completion of it.

"Construction will be phased in, so that the main entrance will be open as long as possible," Robel said.

REVIEW

A truck-load of promises kept

ED SKOOG
Collegian

Truck Stop Love played Saturday night in Lawrence with Wasted Time and The Reverb Brothers at the KU Burge Union.

The Burge Union is across the parking lot from Allen Fieldhouse and abuts married-student housing. Beyond sit the tall, silent dorms.

—Writing about music is hard. It is indefinable, really just sounds in harmony with each other and how interesting can that be? It is intangible, unless you want to read about microphone specifications (hertz, megavolts, ranges), the brand names of amplifiers (Kustom, Marshall, Fender) or the subjective comparisons of one band to another (dude, I thought they sounded like Band V meeting Band X in Location Y on Drug Z). It is, at times, unbearable.

So I will tell you this.

Truck Stop Love played for an hour between Wasted Time and The Reverb Brothers. They played better than either.

To say that one group is better than another is the same urge as to prefer a KC Strip of good Kansas beef to a slice of mac-and-pickle loaf.

The mac-and-pickle loaf in this situation would be The Reverb Brothers.

Ernie Locke, the thirtyish harmonica player who used to be the main man in Sin City Disciples, is endearing. You see him play and you think all right. He's like a crazy man.

He has the stage presence of Big Bird and the voice of a Howlin' Wolf or Wolfman Jack, but his guitarist and bass player played the same song over and over again. The drummer was crying he was so bored.

—Truck Stop Love has gotten to the point where opening for someone else is uncomfortable. People will come to a Truck Stop Love show and demand to hear certain songs.

Folks shout out the names of songs: "The Trilogy!" "Elena Perez!" "Townie!" "Free Bird!"

These people stand in the front row like men cured of blindness. These are not hippies, although this is Lawrence. These are Fans of Music. They stand in front of the speaker and lose hearing and don't complain.

—One wants to call Truck Stop Love a country band, but the term is empty anymore. Country music is a hollow phrase in the age of Billy Ray Cyrus hip gyrations on the Grammy awards, the age of TW Longhorns Discothequé where no one smokes or drinks whisky, the age of the Grand Old Opry not on radio but on TNN.

One wants to say Truck Stop Love is a punk rock band, but that is not entirely true.

Their music is about change, in a way, you could say. "I've seen change and I've seen stagnation," is a line in the chorus of "Stagnation," a good KISS/Soul Asylum/Who rock anthem.

—Are you beginning to understand the difficulty of writing about music?

Music means much more than sounds. Truck Stop Love's music does, at least.

Instant access to TV videos run by multiglobal soda-guns-and-media corporations who profit from $36.50 tickets to Paul McCartney shows crush bands like Truck Stop Love. In this conspiracy, ORIGINALITY is reduced to A MARKETING SCAM, instead of a kind of music that takes you higher.

—SUA put on the show. (the KU version of K-State's Union Programming Council's Eclectic Entertainment Committee)

SUA is the Sam Walton estate compared to K-State's UPCEEC. Truck Stop Love played for free earlier this year at a UPC show. UPC doesn't have diddly-squat for cash. This is a thing that should change.

—A neighborhood friend I hadn't seen for a while, a recent recipient of a liver transplant who is somewhat frail but still athletic, said, "When I go to the Bottleneck for free games of pool they give me a card to fill out that asks who I'd like to see play at the Bottleneck. I'm going to write down these guys next time."

Truck Stop Love cassette tapes are available at Vital Vinyl and Streetside Records in Aggieville.

HOUSING

'No Pets' clause often ignored by animal lovers

RON LACKEY
Collegian

Students see it on the bottom of their rental agreement and then blatantly ignore it.

No pets allowed — a simple statement that should clearly define the rules of having a pet in a residence.

Many college students live in houses that forbid pets but decide to own one anyway.

Juli Salberg, property manager at Abbott Management, said they used to allow pets but don't anymore.

"In one complex we allowed cats, because they could be litter-trained. Cats are OK, but then people started keeping dogs. The dogs were kept inside all day and just made a mess. They can destroy a place in nothing flat. It was just easier for us to go no pets at all," she said.

Salburg said she has witnessed apartments that have been almost destroyed by a dog.

"Once, a dog tore down the mini-blinds and ripped up the carpet by the door trying to get out. Dogs can really tear stuff up, not to mention going to the bathroom all over the place," Salburg said. "One time, our tenants moved out, and we had to spray the place because it was infested with fleas."

She said it is not unusual for a renter to break the pet rules.

"We usually give them a call or drop them a note. We remind them that pets are not allowed. Normally, they are real good about it. They say 'no problem' and find another home for the pet," Salberg said.

Lynn Schumacher is the attendant at the animal shelter in Manhattan. She said once in a while a student may have to return a pet because of landlords' orders.

"The majority of college students are just as good pet owners as anyone else. But sometimes they adopt a new pet without asking their landlord and have to return it," she said.

She said college students get a bad rap as irresponsible pet owners.

"People say that there are so many strays in this town because college students leave them here when they move, but I don't think that's true," Schumacher said. "They also understand the importance of having a pet spayed or neutered."

Schumacher said she highly recommended checking out the rental agreement before obtaining a pet.

"If more students made sure they were allowed to have pets, they would be more reliable pet owners. Some think they can sneak a pet into their place, and they have to end up bringing the pet back."

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

UNFORTUNATELY, THIS IS WHERE PEOPLE ARE PUTTING TOO MANY RETIREMENT DOLLARS.

Every year, a lot of people make a huge mistake on their taxes. They don't take advantage of tax deferral and wind up sending Uncle Sam money they could be saving for retirement.

Fortunately, that's a mistake you can easily avoid with TIAA-CREF SRAs. SRAs not only ease your current tax-bite, they offer a remarkably easy way to build retirement income—especially for the "extras" that your regular pension and Social Security benefits may not cover. Because your contributions are made in before-tax dollars, you pay less taxes now. And since all earnings on your SRA are tax-deferred as well, the money you don't send to Washington works even harder for you. Down the road, that can make a dramatic difference in your quality of life.

What else makes SRAs so special? A range of allocation choices—from the guaranteed security of TIAA to the diversified investment accounts of CREF's variable annuity—all backed by the nation's number one retirement system.

Why write off the chance for a more rewarding retirement? Call today and learn more about how TIAA-CREF SRAs can help you enjoy many happy returns.

Benefit now from tax deferral. Call our SRA hotline 1 800-842-2733, ext. 8016.

Cut the pomp and circumstance

THE ISSUE

A University-sponsored contest wants to spend $2,000 on a graduation mace.

WE SUGGEST

Scrap the mace and put the money toward a more practical use.

It's common sense. When money's tight, you cut back on the frivolities and axe the unneeded.

Yet, the graduation commencement committee has come up with an idea to spend a bunch of money for a completely useless item.

The item in question is a mace.

The mace is a staff used as a symbol of authority by certain officials. This mace was commissioned by the commencement committee to be carried during graduation ceremonies. The contest to design a new mace holds a top prize of $150.

The real kicker here is that the mace is not to be designed to exceed $2,000 in cost.

Its purpose is to "enhance the dignity and ceremony of our graduation exercises" and to "symbolize the corporate nature of this important University event."

Two thousand dollars for a "symbol of authority" that will be taken out of storage two days out of the year.

Important event or not, the last item K-State needs is a brand spankin' new mace. In a time when college budgets are being cut to the bone and tuition is hiked up every semester, a $2,000 mace is far from necessary.

Though we do not advocate a total abstinence from the pomp and circumstance that marks the occasion, we question the priorities of the commencement committee.

In the end, it seems graduates get a cheap gown, the committee gets $2,000 to symbolize its authority.

Talk the talk, walk the walk

JOHN HART

I went to the video store with some friends over Christmas break. We decided to rent a science-fiction movie. Just as I had decided on a low-budget film starring Mark Hamil (Luke Skywalker), "Conan the Barbarian" caught my attention. Yet, there were also "Patriot Games," "Fletch Lives," "Apocalypse Now" and "Yentl" — I couldn't make up my mind. My friends were also stricken with indecisiveness. After an hour of contemplation and debate, we left the video store without a video.

I suggest many college students are in similar positions. No, we didn't come to K-State to rent movies. Instead, we are shopping at a supermarket of ideas and belief systems, so to speak. At college, and especially on this page, a variety of ideas are presented and then argued for vigorously.

The debates have raged for centuries and will continue to rage in the future. But what is all of the contemplation and debate worth if you never decide on a belief system and try it out? It's like going to the video store and not renting a movie, or renting one and not watching it.

All people exercise a degree of faith in their lives. Your belief that the paper you're reading is real is an exercise of faith. Some people believe that the material world is an illusion and can offer rational arguments for their position. If you're hoping to find 'the truth' or discover whose beliefs are right through reason alone, then you're in for a long, frustrating life because such knowledge extends far beyond human understanding. You can find evidence for a belief system but never a proof for one. It's impossible for any person to know everything. Even Plato admitted that he knew nothing.

The best course of action is to decide for yourself which belief system makes the most sense, exercise faith and then measure the value of your beliefs by living them out. Don't just put your faith in a belief, but understand it thoroughly and live it out with consistency and devotion. The personal and societal consequences of living out your beliefs will demonstrate their value.

If you accept hedonism, then have sex with as many people as you possibly can, as much as you possibly can. Go to Aggieville every night and party as hard as you possibly can. Play Nintendo in the meantime. If you accept nihilism, then do whatever it takes to acquire power and exterminate all forms of weakness along the way. If you simply want to be rich, then strive to become the wealthiest person in the world.

If you're a secular humanist, then accept the fact that you exist by chance and have no meaning or value in life apart from survival and reproduction. If you decide to follow the New Age movement, then deny the law of non-contradiction and believe that two conflicting statements such as "God is sovereign" and "man is sovereign" can both be true. And if you claim to be a Christian, then strive to live your life like Jesus Christ. If you're not trying to live like Jesus, then don't call yourself a Christian. The Bible said this before I did in Revelation 3:15-16.

In this age of AIDS, I don't need to discuss the possible consequences of hedonistic lifestyle. Hitler and Mussolini tried to follow the major tenets of nihilism. Friedrich Neitzsche, who propagated nihilism, lived a miserable life and went mad at the age of 44. For Neitzsche, life was a meaningless, chaotic void. Ted Turner, when asked what it felt like to be one of the wealthiest people in the world, said he felt empty. Ross Perot has said that he is a happy person, but that his money has nothing to do with it. Mother Teresa has lived her beliefs out to their full extent and has won the Nobel Peace Prize for her work in fighting hunger and poverty in Calcutta, India.

We can argue all you want and become proficient in the sport of intellectual gymnastics in the process. A debate about beliefs becomes meaningful only when a decision is made. If you're looking for answers, then pick a belief system and live it out with passion. Only then will you know what is real and fulfilling.

Money clouds capital punishment issue

Editor,

I'm writing in response to two of the most mindless letters commenting on Klawonn's "An eye for an eye for an eye" column.

The analogy presented in Keller's letter comparing Klawonn's seemingly contradictory statements to a potential characteristic of being wishy-washy on important issues such as race is not only way off-base but tasteless.

The letter has missed the point of her column — not who is held accountable, but that the death penalty is wrong. There is no reason to question her ability to remain loyal to one position.

To reduce human life to a base discussion of money and costs, as Boone's letter does, is to demonstrate the typical materialist mindset that has become embedded in American society and has destroyed our senses of priority and morality.

Again, money is all that matters. Moreover, to use the exhausted emotional argument ("What if your own mom was axed?") is to move the discussion away from anything rational while simultaneously suggesting that morality or conviction should go out the window anytime someone close to us dies. I would personally hope that my mother would praise my firmness and courage when I insisted her murderer be excused from a penalty of death, no matter how much I would be naturally and humanly angry.

Finally, as to how "your Lord, Jesus Christ" might deal with this issue, it is interesting to read Matthew 5:38-48. It begins: "You have heard that it was said, 'An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth.' But I tell you not to resist an evil person. But whoever slaps you on your right cheek, turn the other to him also ... love your enemies." This is the only power I seem to be able to find that society has been divinely given.

▶ PAGEANTS

Prize angle was ignored in editorial

Editor,

While the validity of pageants such as the recent Miss Manhattan/Miss K-State escapes you, the logic and purpose of your Feb. 23 editorial escapes me.

You failed to mention the most important purpose of these so-called extravaganzas — money for college.

The Miss America pageant awards more scholarship money to young women than any other organization in the United States — more than $10 million each year.

I could have taken the more politically correct route and turned down the opportunity.

Of course, I'd probably now be an underappreciated coffee-fetching secretary or an underpaid waitress in a short skirt hoping for pocket change. At least I'd have my pride.

Your concern over how pageants encourage sexism in society opens a whole new can of worms. You don't understand the need for a swimsuit competition. To judge people on the basis of physical appearance is insulting, you say.

So why do female executives wear high-heeled shoes? What does business achievement have to do with nylons? Heck, for that matter, why do men wear new suits to job interviews? Isn't professional merit enough?

Let's face it — pageants are an easy target for trendy PC-ers.

What would the Miss America pageant be without the swimsuit and evening gown competitions?

It would be a talent show on a public access channel.

And then, you'd have to find an important editorial topic and actually spend some time researching and formulating an opinion.

Healthy lifesyle and self-respect are goals

Editor,

As a local titleholder in the Miss America Scholarship Pageant System, I understand the criticisms of pageants stated in the editorial "Pageants set wrong standard" in the Feb. 23 Collegian.

I myself have questioned the swimsuit competition, especially now as I prepare for Miss Kansas in June. I'm having to fashion my life around healthier eating habits and am exercising more than usual.

But I look at it this way: I want to eat healthy foods that are natural and as fat-free as possible. I want to exercise and be in shape. Isn't that good? The whole point of a swimsuit competition is to promote a healthy life-style and self-respect for one's body.

As for the evening gown competition, it's a way to show poise and composure on stage. Wearing a gown to do this is a tradition. In fact, the Miss America Pageant System some time ago changed the category to Evening Wear so that women could be more creative in choosing clothes, but as you can see, evening gowns still prevail.

Unlike the Miss USA Pageant System, the Miss America Pageant System focuses on talent and interview competition, 40 percent and 30 percent of the total score, respectively. Swimsuit and evening gown competition are 15 percent of the total score, each. And emphasis is placed on a platform of the woman's choice, and community service is recognized with the Community Service Award.

Recently crowned Miss Manhattan and Miss K-State, Amy Hiett and Deanna Nichols, as well as myself and other girls across the state will compete in the Miss Kansas pageant in June.

We are part of an excellent program that promotes awareness and concern for the world we live in, self-respect, and a love for this state as well as this country. Our opportunities are limitless, and what we've gained from this outstanding program would fill up a newspaper in itself.

Effect of quilt went beyond written words

Editor,

Stephanie Fuqua's article, "AIDS quilt, emotions on display in Topeka" doesn't begin to describe the power of the quilt's message.

This isn't her fault.

On Friday, Feb. 19, I volunteered four hours as a quilt monitor. As the volunteers walked around, others would warn, "Don't read too many at once!"

When I talked to friends and family this weekend, I was unable to find the words I needed to explain what I had seen. I still can't. At least Stephanie tried.

If you didn't see it, you should.

▶ COLLEGIAN

Real test for paper would be to sell it

Editor,

I am writing in response to what I consider poor journalism. That Feb. 26 headline that stated "Senate approves fee enhancement" certainly captured the reader's attention. Why the increase in sensitivity toward fee raises? Reading on, one discovers that the current fee "enhancement" will be a subsidy to the Collegian. Furthermore, the Student Senate debate was summarized in one opposing view and a supporting senator's statement: "If you have something that's top quality, you keep it." The problem with this source is that the supporter is not only an arts and sciences student, but specifically a journalism graduate student.

I ask if it is reasonable to frame an issue in this manner. If the Collegian is indeed of top quality, this type of self-serving reporting did not build its reputation.

Is a 62.5 percent fee increase due to inflationary pressures on the economy? Instead, the plausible answer is that ad revenues have fallen drastically. Perhaps some of this is due to an economic slowdown, but I believe the real problem is price. Namely, sell the Collegian.

If the Collegian were as concerned about all fee increases as much as the athletic department's, then sell the paper. The price signal would give far more credence to the notion that the paper is indeed of high quality rather than irresponsibly framing a news issue when it suits your goals.

Wildcats face must-win situation

MIKE WELCHHANS/Collegian

Anthony Beane, Wildcat point guard, goes up for a lay-up against Oklahoma State during the Cats' 78-61 loss Saturday afternoon. Beane missed the shot, but he finished with 15 points.

Visiting Mizzou is mired in 6-game slump

STEVEN ROCK
Collegian

Wildcat senior forward Aaron Collier can describe tonight's game against the Missouri Tigers with three words.

"It's a must."

Indeed, K-State needs a win in tonight's game at 7 in Bramlage Coliseum to keep its hopes for an NCAA tournament berth alive. The Wildcats, 16-8 overall and in fourth place with a 6-6 conference record, need two wins in their next three games to assure them of an invitation.

And considering K-State's final home game is at Iowa State's Hilton Coliseum — where the Cyclones are 15-0 this season — the game with Missouri offers the Cats the best chance at a win.

"It's a must-win for us," senior forward Vincent Jackson said. "If we can get Mizzou, we'll be going to Iowa State feeling really confident.

"We just have to put everything behind us and play this game like it's the last game of the season."

And junior point guard Anthony Beane reiterated the same point.

"Oh, yeah," he said. "There's no doubt. It's easy to see — we've got to have one."

But would one be enough?

Since the NCAA expanded the tournament to 64 teams, every Big Eight team that has finished with at least a share of fourth place and won at least 17 Division I games has been invited.

At the same time, however, three Big Eight teams have finished 7-7 in the conference without getting a berth — but none of those teams had 17 Division I wins.

And Missouri, 15-12 and 4-8, just may be the Big Eight team that best gives the Cats a chance at that seventh conference win.

Missouri has been the product of bad luck recently. The Tigers have lost six in a row, and their last three losses have come by a total of just six points. Five of Missouri's eight conference losses have been by four or fewer points.

On Feb. 21 in Columbia, Mo., the Tigers and Cornhuskers were tied with five seconds to play. Missouri had the ball and a chance to take the final shot.

But Lamont Frazier's inbounds pass was stolen by Jamar Johnson, who was fouled and made the decisive free throw.

"We make the key mistakes at the end of ballgames," Stewart said.

The key mistake against Oklahoma State, he said, was not fouling Bryant Reeves at mid-court. Reeves' buzzer-beater sent the game into overtime, and the Cowboys won by four.

Stewart said, at the time-out prior to Reeves' shot, he told his players to foul whoever caught the ball before the act of shooting. That would send the Cowboys to the free-throw line with just two shots.

"All we had to do was foul, and the game was over," Stewart said.

Saturday, Missouri had a 68-61 lead against Oklahoma with three minutes left. But three missed shots, three turnovers and a Frazier miss at the buzzer resulted in a 69-68 loss.

"When we get down to the point where we can win, we miss the shot, or we throw the ball away," Stewart said. "That's a sign of guys that are struggling."

Missouri's last win was a 67-51 victory over K-State more than three weeks ago.

Carol Adolph, athletic ticket manager at K-State, said there are "thousands" of tickets available for tonight's game — which could be a good sign for the Cats.

K-State is 0-3 when the crowd surpasses the 10,000 plateau.

And in the last two home games, K-State has shot a combined total of just 31 percent from the field.

"The last two games, the home-court advantage has not done us much good," Cat coach Dana Altman said.

"But we'd still rather play at home."

CONFERENCE UPDATE

▶KANSAS

Records: 22-5, 9-3
Last week: Lost to Iowa State 75-71, beat Colorado 72-68.
Coming up: Host to Nebraska Wednesday, plays at Oklahoma State Sunday.
Notes: Guard Rex Walters has missed just 10 of his 83 free-throw attempts this season, an 88-percent clip. In Big Eight play, the Jayhawks are first in the conference in team defense (69.3) and second in team offense (77.1).

▶OKLAHOMA ST.

Records: 18-6, 8-5
Last week: Beat Missouri 77-73 (ot), beat K-State 78-61, lost to Oklahoma 89-80.
Coming up: Plays at Nebraska Sunday.
Notes: In the preseason, Oklahoma State was called one of the nation's "five programs on the decline" in 1993. But the Cowboys have won eight of the last 10 games and have already secured a slot in the NCAA Tournament.

▶NEBRASKA

Records: 19-8, 7-5
Last week: Beat Colorado 76-67, beat Iowa State 91-87.
Coming up: Plays at Kansas Wednesday and host to Oklahoma Sunday.
Notes: At midseason, several publications dubbed the Huskers one of the most "disappointing teams" of 1993. But Nebraska has won five of six games and is likely to make the NCAA Tournament for the third straight year.

▶OKLAHOMA

Records: 19-9, 7-6
Last week: Lost to K-State 67-63, beat Missouri 89-88 and beat Oklahoma State 89-80.
Coming up: Plays at Nebraska Sunday.
Notes: Oklahoma is averaging 81 points a game in Big Eight play to lead the conference.

▶IOWA STATE

Records: 17-9, 6-6
Last week: Beat Kansas 75-71, beat Florida Atlantic 89-46 and lost to Nebraska 91-87.
Coming up: Plays at Colorado Wednesday and host to K-State Saturday.
Notes: Iowa State has yet to lose at home this season (15-0), and they are 29-2 at the Hilton Coliseum during the last two seasons. Five Cyclones made the all-Big Eight academic team.

▶MISSOURI

Records: 15-12, 4-8
Last week: Lost to Oklahoma State 77-73 (ot) and lost to Oklahoma 89-88.
Coming up: Plays at K-State Tuesday and host to Colorado Saturday.
Notes: Despite losing six straight, Missouri has committed just 76 turnovers in those six games but have forced its opponents into 103.

▶COLORADO

Records: 10-14, 2-10
Last week: Lost to Nebraska 76-67 and lost to Kansas 72-68.
Coming up: Host to Iowa State Wednesday and plays at Missouri Saturday.
Notes: Guard Donnie Boyce registered a career-high 30 points in Colorado's loss to Kansas. He is trailing only Oklahoma State's Bryant Reeves for the scoring title (19.217 ppg to 19.208 ppg). The Buffaloes are last in the conference in team defense (82.8) and seventh in team offense (71.2). They lead only K-State offensively (66.5).

A game at Ahearn might re-kindle that hoops fire

TROY COVERDALE

Have you ever been to a place where everything seemed perfect, or as close to it as could be?

On Feb. 20, I was at Allen Fieldhouse for the game against Kansas, and other than the Cats' loss, the atmosphere was one I'd only felt one other time.

When was that time?

K-State against Nebraska, in what was Jack Hartman's final game as coach in Ahearn Field House, here in Manhattan.

Let's be honest. The best places to go see a basketball game are not the new arenas like Bramlage or Kemper.

The best places are the small, packed gymnasiums or field houses. Places like Cameron Indoor Stadium, Gallagher-Iba Arena, Allen Fieldhouse.

Ahearn Field House.

For the past two or three years, one of the common thoughts among students who attend K-State games is, "Boy, do we wish we were still playing in Ahearn."

Agreed.

The place was built to be loud. The fans were on top of the action, and in turn a part of it.

Gone are the days when students camped out just to get their season tickets right behind the opponent's bench, so they could yell at our good friends like Billy Tubbs and Norm Stewart.

Sure, parking wasn't convenient for alums. But with it's location on campus, students could walk to the games and not have to scrounge three bucks to pay for parking.

Now we have a nondescript, large white building built as a "multi-purpose" arena.

"Multi-purpose." Basically, it means that if you come up with some idea for an event to hold there, they will find a way for it to fit in the building. Example: indoor monster-truck and tractor pulls.

With the "mausoleum" on the far edge of campus, there's plenty of room for parking, and plenty of people willing to be overcharged to place their cars in that lot.

The acoustics for any event are poor, and the place is just too damn sterile.

So, let's try this idea on for size: a "turn back the clock" day.

Move a selected Big Eight game (Kansas?) to Ahearn next season.

It has its positives.

The students don't have to fight traffic, can get control of the best seats, and, best of all, become part of the game.

The athletic department could charge a higher ticket price to make up for what they might lose by not selling those 2,000 and some-odd extra seats that Bramlage has over "the old barn."

We could get the uniforms from 1986-87 for the day, and invite back some of the greats for an "Old-Timers" game beforehand. Who wouldn't pay to see Rolando Blackman, Mitch Richmond, Steve Henson and Ed Nealy (well, maybe not Nealy), among others.

And get Steve Physioc to do the P.A.

The students would get a game in Ahearn, and the athletic department could turn a profit.

Or "Midnight Madness" could take place there.

Even with a so-called "big star" in town, the first practice only drew a handful of people this year.

So why not move it to Ahearn and title it "Re-kindling the Tradition"? Heck, even if it drew the same number of fans, it would look like a bigger crowd.

What it all comes down to is that everyone keeps bemoaning the fact that we've lost the "K-State basketball tradition."

Maybe a good way to kickstart that tradition again is a basketball "event" in the place that, to many people, stands for K-State basketball at its best.

Who will start: VJ or Lou?

Through the Wildcats' first 22 games, the same five players started.

But on Feb. 23 in Norman, Okla., junior transfer Ron Lucas was given the starting nod in place of senior forward Vincent Jackson.

Lucas started again for the Cats in Saturday's loss to Oklahoma State.

"I'm not mad at Vince or anything else," Dana Altman said. "Vince is our best defensive player, and I just felt like, defensively, he wasn't playing as well as he could.

"We're at the point of the season that we're going to put out the five guys that give us the best chance. So, we just took a look at Lou."

In those two games, Jackson has shot 60 percent (15 for 25) and scored 35 points. Lucas is five for 10 from the field and has a total of 10 points.

Will Jackson start tonight against Missouri?

"I'm not sure if he'll start or not," Altman said.

SPORTS DIGEST

▶OU MOVES INTO 4TH WITH 89-80 WIN OVER OSU

NORMAN, Okla. (AP) — Jeff Webster scored 19 points, and Bryatt Vann had 17 as Oklahoma frustrated 7-footer Bryant Reeves and spoiled No. 19 Oklahoma State's debut in the rankings with an 89-80 victory Monday night.

The loss crippled Oklahoma State's chances of winning or tying for the Big Eight title. The Cowboys (18-6 overall, 8-5 Big Eight) must hope league-leading Kansas loses to Nebraska on Wednesday night or the race is over.

Oklahoma (19-9, 7-6) held Reeves to 12 points, seven below his average. He made just five of his 11 shots. After scoring the Cowboys' first seven points, he didn't score again until hitting a free throw with 12 minutes left in the game.

Oklahoma's pressure defense forced the Cowboys into 23 turnovers and held them to 45 percent shooting. They came in averaging 52 percent from the field.

The Sooners' widest lead was 71-56 with 9:45 remaining. Oklahoma State went on a 9-0 run to get within 71-65.

Vann and Webster led six Sooners in double figures. Angelo Hamilton had 13 points, while Ryan Minor had 11 points and a dozen rebounds.

Randy Rutherford came through with a career-high 29 points for Oklahoma State, including six three-pointers.

▶REEVES NAMED BIG 8 PLAYER OF THE WEEK

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP) — Perhaps not all went wrong for Oklahoma State's 7-foot center Bryant Reeves Monday.

Just hours before he and his Cowboys were knocked off by intrastate rival Oklahoma, Reeves was named the Big Eight player of the week.

"Big Country" averaged 23 points and 12 rebounds in victories over Missouri and K-State last week, but was held to just 12 by the Sooners.

Reeves, who leads the conference in scoring and rebounding, won in a split vote over Nebraska guard Eric Piatkowski.

It was the third time this year Reeves won the honor.

Against Missouri, Reeves had a game-high 27 points and had 14 rebounds. Against K-State, the sophomore had 19 points in 36 minutes, 10 rebounds and three blocks.

YOU'RE ASKING ME?

by Cassandra Duveaux

Breast enlargement is not a condition for love

DEAR CASSANDRA,

I am in love, but there is a catch. My boyfriend, let's call him Jack, loves me, but he thinks my breasts are too small. He wants me to see a doctor and have surgery for breast implants. I just don't know what to do.

Obviously, there may be medical risks involved, but I am willing to take the chance for the love of Jack. He said he will pay for whatever I cannot come up with. My parents think it is a good idea, and they think it will help my self-esteem since I have always been insecure about my small breasts. My roommate thinks I should go through with it since Jack has a promising career lined up for the future. With everyone telling me to do it I shouldn't have doubts, right?

Somehow, Cas, I just feel Jack could not truly love me if he wants me to have implants. How could he love me if he is asking me to change myself for him? Should breasts really be that important in a relationship? I am really confused since I love Jack, and I was planning to marry him. Please help!

Flat and Confused

DEAR CONFUSED,

Pardon me, but they're your breasts.

If you want your breasts enlarged, then get them enlarged. But don't do it to make someone else happy.

Tell this flake Jack that you'll get your breasts enlarged after he gets his penis enlarged and his ego liposuctioned. What a jerk. If his "love" is conditional today on the size of your breasts, what will it be tomorrow? Do you really want to spend your life with someone who is so shallow that he would ask you to get your body surgically altered to please him?

And what does this business about Jack's "promising career" have to do with your breasts? I can think of few, if any, careers that demand a worker to have a spouse with a specific breast size.

No offense, but your parents sound equally weird.

If insecurity about your breasts is the problem, I would suggest you talk with a counselor.

Letters to Cassandra may be submitted in person or by mail to the Kansas State Collegian, c/o Cassandra Duveaux, Kedzie Hall 106, Manhattan, Kan. 66506.

TIPS FOR WRITING A CLASSIFIED AD

Always put what item or service you are advertising first. This helps potential buyers find what they are looking for.

Don't use abbreviations. Many buyers are confused by abbreviations.

Consider including the price. This tells buyers if they are looking at something in their price range.

CATEGORIES

To help you find what you are looking for, the classified ads have been arranged by category and sub-category. All categories are marked by one of the large images, and sub-categories are preceded by a number designation.

WE DO NOT USE PHONE NUMBERS OR LAST NAMES IN PERSONALS.

Cult releases more children following shootout

ASSOCIATED PRESS

WACO, Texas — A heavily-armed religious cult released six more children Monday, and authorities negotiated nonstop, trying to resolve a standoff at a fortified compound where six people died.

The leader of the cult, who said he believes he is Jesus, told his mother, "I'm dying, all right?" after Sunday's gun battle with an army of police and federal agents.

In all, the cult Branch Davidians allowed at least 10 children to leave. More children were believed to be inside the bullet-scarred compound.

An army of police and federal agents ringed the group's fortified compound. They kept up negotiations a day after a rain of gunfire killed four federal agents and two members of the sect, one reportedly cult leader David Koresh's daughter.

"We negotiated through the night, and they are negotiating again this morning," said Sharon Wheeler, a spokeswoman for the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. She declined to say who was negotiating for the cult.

At least 75 people remained in the compound about 10 miles east of Waco, about a third of them children, authorities said. Koresh said many of the children were his.

Three people arrested after the shootout were charged Monday with attempted murder of a federal law enforcement officer and use of a firearm during commission of a violent crime, said Jim Deatley, a spokesman in the U.S. Attorney's office.

The FBI sent its elite Hostage Rescue Team to the scene Monday, said a federal law-enforcement official who spoke on condition of anonymity.

The standoff began Sunday after a 45-minute gun battle with about 100 ATF agents, who were trying to serve arrest and search warrants on Koresh for federal firearms charges. Later Sunday, three people tried to shoot their way out of the one-square-block compound, ATF agents said.

Walker raising awareness of need for AIDS education and talk about it.

"I can't do the educating, but I can talk about the need for education," Hyde said.

On her journey, she walks about 10 miles a day, from 8 a.m. until noon. She then spends her afternoons speaking to groups in the communities where she stops.

Not one of the communities she has visited has been unaffected by HIV or AIDS, Hyde said.

"Everywhere I go, people say 'we're glad you're doing the walk, but AIDS is not here,'" she said.

Hyde has been approached, however, by someone in every community who has a story about how AIDS has affected their life, she said.

The only means of support for Hyde's walk comes from communities she visits because she is officially on an unpaid leave of absence from her job.

Hyde said the best part about her journey is the people she meets.

She said she had always read about how wonderful the people of this country are but really did not believe it.

"I walk into the community a stranger. I only stay three days, but I always find it hard to leave," Hyde said. "I really love this country."

Hyde said she hopes to speak to President Clinton about AIDS education and awareness when she arrives in Washington, D.C.

After that, Hyde said, "I'm going to take a nap."

Supplies fall into Serbian possesion

"The Americans didn't get good marks on their first examination, so they should try again," said Murat Efendic, head of an association of eastern Bosnians, as he monitored ham radio exchanges in the Bosnian presidency building in Sarajevo.

U.S. officials in Germany said more airdrops were planned but would not say when.

The aid operation is the most direct U.S. involvement in Bosnia, where some 100,000 people have been killed or are missing in nearly a year of brutal warfare.

Each of the U.S. C-130 Hercules transport planes on Sunday night's mission parachuted nine 1,500-pound crates of military rations and one crate of medical supplies. The operation is mostly intended to help Muslims, but U.S. officials say aid will also be dropped for Croats and Serbs.

The American planes are flying above 10,000 feet to minimize the risk of anti-aircraft fire.

To stress the humanitarian nature of the operation, the transports are not escorted by combat aircraft. But U.S. Navy warplanes from the aircraft carrier John F. Kennedy are patrolling over the Adriatic offshore from Bosnia and could respond to an attack on U.S. transports.
